LAHORE HIGH COURT

 A. I. R. 1923 Lahore 1

TEK CHAND, J.

Chiranji Lal—Accused—Petitioner.

The Crown—Opposite Party.

Misc. Criminal Case No. 158 of 1927, Decided on 22nd, October 1927, for transfer of a case.

 (a) Judicial Officer — Officer called upon to decide a matter, must decide it himself and should not consult other officers.

It is one of the elementary principles of administration of justice that a judicial officer, who is called upon to decide a matter in controversy, must exercise his own independent judgment, after hearing the parties concerned. It is the privilege as well as the duty of the presiding officer of a Court of justice to form his own opinion on the point before him and to act accordingly. He ought not, as if it were, to mortgage his mind to another officer and to seek instructions from the latter, whenever he is called upon to decide a difficult or important matter. A Magistrate who does so, abdicates his proper functions and discloses a lamentable lack of sense of responsibility. [P 3 C 1, 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 526 — Magistrate consulting his superior in disposing of a bail application—Act forms a ground for transfer.

Where a Magistrate before disposing of a bail application consulted the District Magistrate and refused the application as advised by the latter :

Held : that though both, the Subordinate Magistrate in consulting the District Magistrate and the latter in advising him in connexion with the orders to be passed on the bail application, may have acted with the best of intentions, it cannot be denied that such action on their part was wholly unjustified and was certainly calculated to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that he will not have a fair trial : Sarjeant v. Dale (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 558, Ref. [P 3 C 2]

* (c) Criminal P. C., S. 526 — Circumstances causing apprehension in accused's mind that he will not have fair trial described.

A case was started against the accused under S. 377, on an incomplete chalan. The accused applied, as soon as the case was called, under S. 344, Criminal P. C., for adjournment on the ground that he had been served only three hours before, that he wanted time to get copies of the statements made by witnesses to the police or before Magistrates under S. 164, and that his leading counsel was out of station on account of the Muharram holidays. This application was rejected by the Court on the ground that another advocate was present in Court on behalf of the petitioner. The accused then presented another application under S. 526 (8) stating that he intended to apply for the transfer of the case from the Magistrate's Court and praying that the case be adjourned to enable him to do so. The Magistrate rejected the application assuming that the accused wanted to apply under S. 528. In the course of the trial which then commenced, the first and important witness in respect of whom the offence was alleged to be committed stated that he made the allegations against the accused at the instance of a person, who was alleged to be a bitter enemy of the accused, that his previous statement before a Magistrate was made under pressure. A complaint was made against this witness by the Magistrate under S. 476, Criminal P. C. The next witness was then called, but he did not give any direct evidence against the accused. Though at least one other witness for the prosecution was present in Court, the Magistrate did not examine him but passed an order adjourning the case on the ground that he had "lot of treasury work to do." The accused then moved the High Court for transfer of the case and an ad interim order was passed staying further proceedings. [P 5 C 1]

Held : that the manner in which the applications under S. 344 and 526 were rejected, the anxiety to commence the trial on an incomplete challan within three hours of the service of the summonses on the petitioner, the haste with which proceedings under S. 476 against the first witness were started the moment he retracted his former statements implicating the petitioner and the adjournment of the case without examination of the remaining witnesses as soon as it was discovered that the second witness did not give any direct evidence as to the guilt of the petitioner, were incidents which would necessitate the transfer of the case to another Court : A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 361 ; In re McCarthy (1924) 1 K. B. 256 and A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 264, Rel. on. [P 5 C 1]

* (d) Criminal P. C., S. 526 (8)—Accused notifying his intention to apply for transfer to Court—Court must adjourn the case.

Under the amended S. 526 (8) as soon as the Public Prosecutor, complainant or the accused person notifies to the Court his intention to make an application to the High Court for transfer, the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case and it is not competent to him, after such an application has been made, to record any evidence at all : *A. Ram Lal Anand—for Petitioner.

C. N. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Order. — This is a petition under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for transfer to another district of a criminal case pending against the petitioner Charanji Lal in the Court of Mr. Taj-ud-Din, Magistrate, 1st Class, Ambala. The petitioner, who is the ex-Principal of the Benarsi Das High School and Vice-President of the Cantonment Board at Ambala, has been challaned under S. 377, I. P. C., for having committed unnatural offence with one of his pupils, Raj Kumar Sharma (P. W. 1), a youth 15 or 16 years old.

The petition is an unnecessarily lengthy document and contains a large number of allegations, several of which are either irrelevant to the point before me or have not been proved. I do not, therefore, think it necessary to deal at length with all the contentions raised, but propose to confine myself only to incidents which occurred before the Magistrates in their judicial capacity, and to base my decision on matters, which are either admitted by both parties or with regard to which there was no controversy at the Bar. There is however, one matter on which the affidavit filed by the petitioner and the explanation furnished by the District Magistrate do not agree and to which reference seems to be necessary at the very outset. It is alleged by the petitioner that he, in his capacity as a member of the Cantonment Board and as an office-holder of various political and other associations, had on several occasions advocated and pressed views on public matters which were opposed to those of the Deputy Commissioner (Mr. Fyson), that by so doing he had incurred the displeasure of the latter, and that for this reason Mr. Fyson was using his position and powers as District Magistrate to harm him. After considering the arguments of the learned counsel for the petitioner and reading the explanation of the District Magistrate, I have no hesitation in rejecting the petitioner's contentions in this behalf and hold that there is no foundation for the suggestion that because of his activities as a member of the Cantonment Board and other public bodies the petitioner will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Ambala District.

The facts leading to the institution of criminal proceedings against the petitioner, so far as they can be gathered from the record and the affidavits placed before me, are as follows :

On the 8th June 1927, an application (Ex. A) purporting to be written by Raj Kumar Sharma and containing serious allegations of misconduct against the petitioner, was received by the Inspector of Schools, Ambala Division. On the 13th June Raj Kumar is said to have made a lengthy statement (Ex. P. B) to the Inspector of Schools, in which he stated that the petitioner had committed unnatural offences with him on certain specified occasions.

The Inspector of Schools discussed the matter with Rai Bahadur Benarsi Das, the proprietor of the school, as well as with Mr. Fyson, District Magistrate, Ambala, who was then at Kasauli. Shortly afterwards the petitioner was dismissed from the school, and on the 27th June he was arrested by the Superintendent of Police. On the same day an application for his release on bail was presented before Mr. Said Zaman Khan, Cantonment Magistrate. The Magistrate heard arguments in support of the application, but instead of making up his mind as to whether he should grant or refuse the application, he put himself in communication on the telephone with the District Magistrate, who was then at Kasauli. The petitioner in his affidavit alleges that the Magistrate did so with a view to take instructions from the District Magistrate as to what order he should pass on the bail application. Another affidavit has been filed by one Captain G. D. Ram, Medical Practitioner, Ambala, in which the deponent states that on the 27th of June 1927, he had gone to the Court of Sardar Said Zaman Khan, Cantonment Magistrate, along with many other leading residents of Ambala, to watch the proceedings of the bail application that had been presented on behalf of Charanji Lal, but the Cantonment Magistrate stated in open Court that he was personally inclined to grant the bail, but for certain reasons,

he would like to consult the District Magistrate on the 'phone at Kasauli, where he was on that day and that on the 28th the bail application was refused by the Magistrate, who stated that he had done so in compliance with the instructions received on the 'phone from the District Magistrate'.

In the explanation that he has sent up to this Court, the District Magistrate states that the Cantonment Magistrate consulted me by telephone and was advised of the reasons of refusing bail, namely, to protect the schoolboys, to prevent an escape and tutoring of witnesses.

From the above it would appear that the Cantonment Magistrate, Mr. Said Zaman Khan, did not dispose of the application according to his own view of the matter, but acted in accordance with the instructions received by him from the District Magistrate. Now it is quite clear—and indeed it has not been denied on behalf of the Crown—that in dealing with the bail application Mr. Said Zaman Khan was acting judicially, and in deciding what orders he should pass on the application he ought not to have taken instructions from the District Magistrate or any other superior authority. If the learned Magistrate felt that all the necessary facts had not been placed before him, the proper course to follow was to ask the Public Prosecutor to take further and fuller instructions from the police or the Inspector of Schools and to present in open Court the case for the Crown against the petition for bail, and then, after hearing the petitioner's counsel to pass such orders as he deemed fit. The learned Government Advocate has frankly admitted that he is unable to support the action of the Magistrate on legal grounds and says that all that he can urge in justification is that Subordinate Magistrates sometimes consult District Magistrates in such matters. Now this is a position which I can under no circumstances accept. It is one of the elementary principles of administration of justice that a judicial officer, who is called upon to decide a matter in controversy, must exercise his own independent judgment, after hearing the parties concerned. It is the privilege as well as the duty of the presiding officer of a Court of justice to form his own opinion on the point before him and to act accordingly. He ought not, as if it were, to mortgage his mind to another officer and to seek instructions from the latter, whenever he is called upon to decide a difficult or important matter. A Magistrate who does so, abdicates his proper functions and discloses a lamentable lack of sense of responsibility.

I have no doubt whatever that in this particular case both the Cantonment Magistrate in consulting the District Magistrate, and the latter in advising him in connexion with the orders to be passed on the bail application, acted with the best of intentions, but it cannot be denied that such action on their part was wholly unjustified and was certainly calculated to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner, such as to bring the case within the rule laid down by Lush, J., in the well-known case of Serjeant v Dale (1), which is regarded by the Courts in England and India as the leading authority on the subject of transfer of cases.

Turning back to the proceedings in the case we find that, on the rejection of the bail application by Mr. Said Zaman Khan, the petitioner moved the Sessions Judge, who accepted his petition and ordered his release on bail.

In the meantime the boy, Raj Kumar, was produced by the police before Mr. Said Zaman Khan, Cantonment Magistrate, to make a statement on oath in the absence of the petitioner. That statement is not among the papers that are before me, but it is admitted by both parties that before Mr. Said Zaman Khan, the deponent retracted the allegations, which he had made before the Inspector of Schools imputing misconduct to the petitioner.

On the the 30th June 1927, which was a public holiday, the police took Raj Kumar to the Savoy Hotel and once again produced him before another Magistrate, Mr. Keelan, who recorded his statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C., (Ex. P. C.). In this statement Raj Kumar practically reiterated what he had stated before the Inspector of Schools on the 13th June and specifically stated that on several occasions the petitioner had committed unnatural offence with him.

On the 5th July 1927 the police sent up an incomplete challan against the petitioner under S. 377, I. P. C., and this was made over by the District Magistrate to Mr. Taj-ud-Din, Treasury Officer, and Magistrate, 1st Class, for trial. In the challan eight witnesses were named. On the 5th the Magistrate, Mr. Taj-ud-Din, issued summons to the petitioner to appear in his Court to take his trial on the next day (6th July). The petitioner was served on the morning of the 6th and appeared in Court at 10 a. m. As soon as the case was called an application under S. 344, Criminal P. C., for adjournment was presented on his behalf, it being urged that he had been served only three hours before, that he wanted time to get copies of the statements made by witnesses to the police or before Magistrates under S. 164, and that his leading counsel, Sardar Jhanda Singh, was out of station on account of the Muharram holidays. This application was rejected by the Court on the ground that another advocate Lala Sri Ram, was present in Court on behalf of the petitioner.

The petitioner then presented another application under S. 526 (8), stating that he intended to apply for the transfer of the case from the Magistrate's Court and praying that the case be adjourned to enable him to do so. In this application it was not stated in so many words that the applicant wanted to move the High Court for transfer, but the application was made under S. 526 (8), and if the learned Magistrate had taken the trouble of reading that section he would have discovered that it applies only when a party asks for an adjournment on the ground that he intends to move the High Court. The Magistrate, however, passed the following order:

> . . . . . The applicant does not disclose whereto an application for transfer is to be made. S. 528 relates to such applications to be made to the District Magistrate and further on it is not imperative to stop the proceedings when the witnesses were present in Court. I will record the evidence in Court and allow the accused time to make application as desired and I remember such is the practice in cases like this where unnecessary adjournments are sought. Under the circumstances I disallow the application and proceed with the case.

As already pointed out the application purported to be under S. 526 and it is surprising how the learned Magistrate assumed that the petitioner intended to move the District Magistrate under S. 528, Criminal P. C., for transfer. It is hardly necessary to point out that under the amended S. 526 (8), as soon as the Public Prosecutor, complainant or the accused person notifies to the Court his intention to make an application to the High Court for transfer, the Magistrate is bound to adjourn the case and it is not competent to him after such an application has been made to record any evidence at all: see inter alia Satraj Singh v. Emperor (2).

The application having been rejected, the trial of the petitioner commenced and the first witness examined was the boy, Raj Kumar. In his examination-in-chief, Raj Kumar, went back on the statements which he made before the Inspector of Schools as well as before Mr. Keelan. On this the Public Prosecutor applied and was granted permission to cross-examine him as a hostile witness. In cross-examination he stuck to what he had stated before and alleged that he had written the petition to the Inspector of Schools at the dictation of one Shugan Chand (who, in the affidavit is described, as a bitter enemy of the petitioner); he alleged that what he had stated before Mr. Said Zaman Khan was true, and that on the 30th June, as soon as he returned from Muradabad, he was arrested by the police and brought in handcuffs before Mr. Keelan at the Savoy Hotel and that his statement before that officer had been made under pressure. As soon as the examination of Raj Kumar was over, the Public Prosecutor presented an application to the Court, stating that the evidence given by Raj Kumar in Court was false and that he having gone back on the statement which he made on solemn affirmation before Mr. Keelan on the 30th June, proceedings under S. 476, I. P. C., should be taken against him with a view to prosecute him for perjury. The learned Magistrate stopped further proceedings in the case, and there and then called upon Raj Kumar to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 193, I. P. C. In reply Raj Kumar said that what he had stated in Court was true and that his statement before Mr. Keelan was not voluntary but had been made under pressure. On this the Magistrate passed an order making a complaint against Raj

(2) A. I. R. 1924 All. 533.

Kumar for having committed an offence under S. 193, I. P. C., and sent it to the District Magistrate for trial either in his own Court or in that of any other Magistrate; Raj Kumar being directed to furnish security for Rs. 1,000 or in default to be kept in the judicial lock-up. This complaint was in due course made over by the District Magistrate to Sardar Budh Singh, Magistrate, for trial.

The learned Magistrate then resumed the trial and examined the second witness, Anant Ram, Head Master, H. M. High School, Ambala, but this witness did not give any direct evidence against the petitioner. Though at least one other witness for the prosecution was present in Court, the Magistrate did not examine him, but passed an order adjourning the case to the 16th July on the ground that he had "lot of treasury work to do."

On the 13th July the petitioner moved this Court for transfer of the case and an ad interim order was passed staying further proceedings.

It is quite clear from what has been stated above that the proceedings before the learned Magistrate on the 6th July were conducted in such a way as to give rise to a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in his Court. The manner in which the applications under Ss. 344 and 526 were rejected; the anxiety to commence the trial on an incomplete challan within three hours of the service of the summonses on the petitioner, the haste with which proceedings under S. 476 against Raj Kumar (P. W. 1) were started the moment he retracted his former statements implicating the petitioner; and the adjournment of the case without examination of the remaining witnesses as soon as it was discovered that the second witness did not give any direct evidence as to the guilt of the petitioner, are incidents which necessitate the transfer of the case to another Court. These incidents do not necessarily prove the existence of any real bias in the mind of the Magistrate against the petitioner but, as pointed out by the learned Chief Justice in Amar Singh v. Sadhu Singh (3) :

> In dealing with an application for transfer the Court has to consider not merely whether there has been any real bias in the mind of the presiding Judge against the applicant, but whether incidents may not have happened which, though they may be susceptible of explanation, are nevertheless such as are calculated to create in the mind of the accused person a justifiable apprehension that he will not have an impartial trial:

See also the observations of Lord Hewart, C. J., in the recent English case in re McCarthy (4) and of Broadway, J., in Sardari Lal v. Crown (5), where the case-law on the subject is discussed at length. For the foregoing reasons I am constrained to allow the application for transfer and to withdraw the case from the Court of Mr. Taj-ud-Din.

Both counsel were agreed that in the event of this Court deciding to transfer the case from the Court of Mr. Taj-ud-Din there was no other Magistrate at the headquarters of the Ambala District competent to try it as the District Magistrate and the other Magistrates have in some form or another taken part in the investigation and the case cannot be sent to any of them for trial. A transfer to another district is, therefore, necessary. The learned counsel for the petitioner suggested that the case should be tried in the neighbouring district of Ludhiana or Karnal, but the learned Government Advocate pointed out that, having regard to the fact that the case has roused considerable local feeling at Ambala and in the neighbourhood, and that the petitioner appears to have influential friends and enemies there, it would be proper to send it to a convenient place outside the Ambala Division, where there is no likelihood of the witnesses being harassed by either side. After fully considering the matter, and more especially having regard to all that has already happened, I find myself in agreement with the suggestions of the learned Government Advocate and direct that this case be tried at Hoshiarpur.

Accordingly I allow the petition, withdraw the case from the Court of Mr. Taj-ud-Din, Magistrate, 1st Class, Ambala, and refer it for trial to Mr. E. M. Jenkins, District Magistrate, Hoshiarpur, who will proceed to hear it with all convenient speed fixing dates on which it may be possible for him to examine all the witnesses who come from Ambala, or as many of them as may be possible.

Before concluding, I wish to point out that nothing contained in this order should, in any way, be construed as giving the slightest indication of the views of this Court on the merits of the allegations against the petitioner or as to the truth or otherwise of the assertions made in his affidavit that he is a victim of intrigue. These are matters for enquiry and determination by the trial Magistrate hereafter.

Pira and others—Plaintiffs and Defendants—Respondents.

S. A. No. 144 of 1923, Decided on 23rd September 1927, from the decree of the Dist. Judge, Shahpur, D/- 13th October 1922.

A minor is treated as being ordinarily incapable of defending his rights in the same way as a person who has attained majority. Therefore a more remote reversioner may sue to set aside an alienation by widow where the next reversioner happens to be a minor. It is not a question of collusion but rather of inability to act. Where property is not ancestral the reversioners may take action in the presence of the daughters and their position is equally good where in addition to the daughters there are minor grandsons of the last male owner in existence. [P 6 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 115—Reversioners challenging alienation by widow—Widow living—Reversioners cultivating land under alienee and paying rent to him, taking contribution from him for improvements and keeping silent when he paid a mortgagee of last male-holder—Facts do not amount to admission of alienee's title.

Where the alienating widow is living, the fact that reversioners exacted more contribution from the alienee from widow, for building a well for the common benefit of their portion of land and that of the deceased male holder, though coupled with payment of rent to donee, delay in bringing suit and their silence when donee paid off some mortgages on property of the deceased male holder, is insufficient to establish admission of donee's title. [P 7 C 1]

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellant.

Nanak Chand—for Respondents.

Harrison, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are the collaterals of one Murad, who died in 1908, and they sue for a declaration that an alienation by gift made by his widow Mt. Begam in favour of Khanqah Hazrat Sultan Bahu will not affect their reversionary rights when succession opens out.

The suit has been decreed by both the lower Courts and on second appeal the two points urged by counsel are that the suit is speculative and should not have been allowed to proceed, inasmuch as there were not only the widow and the two daughters of Murad but also their two sons, and in the presence of these four persons the suit is not likely to have any practical result. The second point is that even if the suit can proceed, the conduct of the plaintiffs puts them out of Court, inasmuch as they have admitted in various ways the title of the donee.

As regards the first point the counsel has relied, more especially, on Barkat Ram v. Jagat Ram (1), a Full Bench ruling, which is not reported in the Punjab Record. The all important point of whether the daughter's son in that case was a minor or a major is not to be found in the ruling. In this case the sons are minors and this appears to us to make all the difference. A minor, as stated in Rattigan's Digest in Art. 67 is treated as being ordinarily incapable of defending his rights in the same way as a person who has attained majority. It is therefore laid down in that article that a more remote reversioner may sue where the next reversioner happens to be a minor. It is not a question of collusion but rather of inability to act. In this case the property is not ancestral and it is well established that in the presence of the daughters the reversioners may take action, and their position appears to us to be equally good where in addition to the daughters there are minor grandsons of the last male owner in existence.

On the second point the counsel has relied on four facts; (1) the delay of nearly six years; (2) the fact that several of the plaintiffs cultivated various portions of the property and paid the donee rent; (3) the fact that the donee paid off some mortgages created by the last male owner without any sort of protest on the part of the plaintiffs and (4) and this is the strongest point, that when the plaintiffs built a well for irrigation purpurposes of the land of which they owned $\frac{3}{4}$ and the late Murad owned the remaining 1/4 they demanded and succeeded in exacting a full quarter share, i. e., a full owner's share from the donee. This last point is of some importance in our opinion, but all that is shown is that the plaintiffs, who are doubtless entitled to some contribution, as the donee will enjoy the benefits of the well during the widow's lifetime, exacted more than they should. It is in itself insufficient to establish an admission of the donee's title and the other circumstances, namely, the cultivation, the delay and the silence when the mortgages were paid do not appear to us to strengthen the position appreciably. It is to be remembered that before this gift the collaterals were cultivating under the widow and it was only natural that they who owned the remainder of the joint holding should have continued to do so even after the gift had been made.

We are of opinion, therefore, that both the lower Courts have decided rightly that the plaintiffs' suit lies and in spite of their conduct they are entitled to the decree which they seek. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—On the 11th December 1919 the Punjab National Bank, Limited, obtained a decree against Rai Sahib Kanhaiya Lal for the recovery of Rs. 34,084-7-9 and costs recoverable out of the property mortgaged and other property and person of the judgment-debtor. The decree was not in the form prescribed by O. 34, but was in the terms already mentioned. It appears that another creditor of Rai Sahib Kanhaya Lal had obtained a decree against him and had applied to the same Judge who passed the decree in favour of the bank for the execution of his decree by sale of the property which was subsequently declared subject to the lien of the bank and in the course of the execution of that decree an order had been passed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that the property be sold and out of the sale proceeds Rs. 25,000 be paid to the bank and the rest to the executing decree-holder. On the 12th June 1920 the bank presented an application to the Senior Subordinate Judge which application is in the form prescribed for the execution of the decrees in O. 21, R. 11, Civil P. C., the only exception that could possibly be taken to it relates to the description of the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required. This matter I will discuss presently. On the 14th April 1923 the bank presented an application to the Court praying that the lands already attached be auctioned. It appears that previously a wrong description had been given by the bank of the property which they desired to be sold and that a correct description was supplied on the date on which this application was made. It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to consider the effect of the next application mentioned in the judgment of the Senior Subordinate Judge, i. e., the application dated the 11th February 1924 made by the bank for permission to bid at the auction. Whether that application isor is not a step-in-aid of execution has been the subject of controversy before me, but as the decision of this point is not necessary for the purposes of this appeal I have refrained from expressing any opinion on the subject. The next application is dated the 4th June 1924 which was made by the bank praying for the appointment of an ad interim receiver in respect of the judgment-debtor's property. The later application of the 12th December 1924, might be ignored for the same reason as the application made on the 11th February 1924. It appears that the judgment-debtor compromised the case with the other attaching decree-holder with the result that on the 20th October 1925 all execution proceedings in that case were filed by the Court and with those proceedings the application made by the bank on the 12th June 1920 was also consigned to the record room. Then the bank presented another application on the 16th January 1926, asking for the execution of the decree. This application was objected to by the judgment-debtor on the 27th April 1926, on the ground that it was barred by time. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has disallowed this objection and has allowed the execution to proceed. This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor.

The only question that is agitated before me is whether the application of the 16th January 1926 is or is not barred by time. The counsel for the respondent has relied upon Cl. (5) of the third column of Art. 182, Indian Limitation Act, which provides that an application for execution can be made when the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made within three years from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree. The argument of the counsel for the appellant is that the application of the 12th June 1920 is not an application in accordance with law and therefore must be ignored and that though the applications of the 14th April 1923 and 4th June 1924 are applications made to take some steps-in-aid of execution of the decree, the condition precedent, as contained in the opening words of this clause has not been complied with because according to him, as I have already stated, there was no application for execution in accordance with law. The counsel for the respondent says that the application of the 12th June 1920 was an application in accordance with law and that in any case it is not necessary that an application to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree should be made in the course of proceedings taken during the pendency of an application by the same decree-holder for execution of decree in accordance with law.

Now, I have already stated that the application of the 12th June 1920 conforms with the provisions of O. 21, R. 11, Civil P. C., with the possible exception of the prayer as to the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required. The application itself is headed as follows :

Application for execution of a decree according to O. 21, R. 11.

Then follow the various columns in which all the details required by R. 11 are given, but in the last column it is stated that according to the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge dated the 9th April 1919, Rs. 25,000 are to be paid to the bank first and the rest with interest and costs may be paid pro rata along with the other decree-holder, and the same prayer is repeated in an amplified form in the body of the petition. This petition was initially dealt with by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge as other applications for execution are dealt with ; but later he apparently kept it pending with the record relating to the execution of the decree of the other decree-holder. Now, Cl. (j) O. 21, R. 11 (2) provides that the application for execution of the decree shall state the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required and the following clauses are added as an indication of the various modes in which the assistance may be given ; (a) by delivery of property decreed, (b) by attachment and sale or by the sale without attachment, (c) by the arrest of the judgment-debtor, (d) by the appointment of a receiver and (e) otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require. Now, this last clause in my opinion is comprehensive enough to include the prayer for grant of a rateable share in respect of the balance after 25,000 had been first paid to the decree-holder out of the sale-proceeds as already decided by the Court. This view is supported by a judgment of a Division Bench of the Chief Court of Oudh which is reported as A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 616. In my opinion any method suggested by the decree-holder for the satisfaction of his decree which method is not actually prohibited by law, falls within the purview of Cl.(e) mentioned above. The learned counsel for the appellant relied upon Annamalai Chettiyar v. Palamalai Pillai (1) and Rangi Ram v. Gangu (2) which I hold are distinguishable. In both these cases it has been laid down that where a decree-holder has attached the property of his judgment-debtor in execution of his decree and another decree-holder applies merely for a rateable share of the sale proceeds and the original decree-holder compromises with the judgment-debtor and withdraws the attachment, the second decree-holder is not entitled to ask that the attachment be maintained in execution of his decree, because he has not initially made a prayer for the attachment of the property. The question of limitation did not arise in those cases and in my opinion is to be decided by quite different considerations.

Holding as I do that the application of the 12th June 1920 was an application for execution in accordance with law it is obvious, and in fact it is conceded by the counsel for the appellant, that on that finding the application for execution is admittedly within time. I think it advisable, however, to record a finding on the second point that was agitated before me and that is whether an application to take some step-in-aid of execution must be made during the pendency of an application made by the same decree-holder in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution of the decree, or whether such an application can be made when no execution proceeding at the instance of the decree-holder who makes it is pending in Court. The question appears to be a difficult one, but after a careful consideration of all that has been said by the learned counsel on both sides I have arrived at the conclusion that an application to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree can be made when no application for execution at the instance of the particular decree-holder is pending in Court. This view is supported by Shankara Nainar Pillai v. P. V. Thangamma (3) and follows from the wording of Cl. (5), Art 182. In my opinion the words where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made apply both to an application for execution and an application to take some step-in-aid of execution and both the applications are mentioned independently of each other in the clause with the result that each is sufficient to save limitation and the second kind of application is not dependent on the first. I am of opinion that any action taken by a decree-holder to realize the money decreed in his favour whether such an action is taken in a pending application for execution or otherwise is a step-in-aid of execution. The result is that in my judgment the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has correctly disallowed the objection of the judgment-debtor and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 123—Husband gifting house to wife—Both living in the house before and after gift—Gift-deed executed and registered—Gift is complete.

There is no authority in support of the proposition that where the donee is the wife of the donor, a gift is invalid unless the donor vacates the donated property and puts the donee in its exclusive possession. All that is required in such a case to validate the gift is an unequivocal intention to make a gift and an effective transfer of control of and power to dispose of the gifted property to the donee, and this may be done by the execution and registration of the deed of gift, though the husband and wife who resided in the house may continue to do so after the gift. [P 11 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law—Stridhan passing to daughter as heir—Daughter takes limited estate.

A daughter taking as heir to her mother, property which was stridhan in the hands of the mother, does not take it as her own stridhan, but takes it with a limited estate, with reverter after her death to the heirs of her predecessor: 25 All. 476 (P.C.) and *A. (c) Hindu law—Stridhan property reverting after extinction of a limited estate does not become limited estate itself.

There is no authority in support of the proposition that when property reverts to the heirs of the last female full owner after the extinction of a limited estate under the Mitakshara law, it loses its original character and assumes the character of a limited estate. Such a proposition is self-contradictory and is antagonistic to the very notion of the rule of reverter which when translated into practice means that when determining the heir who is to succeed to the property, it must be assumed as if the intermediate limited heir who has died did not exist, and the original inheritance opened out to the next heir to the estate of the last full owner. (e) Hindu Law—Adoption—Adopted son loses all rights in natural family including right to inherit natural relations.

It is a well established principle of the Mitakshara law that an adoption in the dattaka form has the effect of transferring the adopted boy from his natural into the adoptive family and consequently of losing all his rights of a son in his natural family including the right of claiming any share in the estate of his natural relations. The only tie or affinity that such a boy retains with his natural family is that he cannot marry in it within the prohibited degree nor can he adopt from that family a boy whom he could not have adopted if he had remained in that family. [P 14 C 1]

* (f) Hindu Law—Alienation by limited owner—Person in possession having no right to challenge cannot defend his possession against alienee.

A sale by a limited owner is not ab initio void or invalid. It is perfectly valid and binding until it is set aside at the instance of the next reversioner. Such a transaction is like a voidable contract which is valid and enforceable unless it is repudiated by the person at whose option it is voidable. Therefore, if a person who has no right to challenge such an alienation be in possession of the alienated property, he cannot defend his possession against the alienee : *A. I. Order.—For reasons which we have stated briefly and which we shall record in detail separately we accept both appeals 1620 and 1621 of 1922 and direct that the suit of Dhanna Mal against Parmeshr Das etc. be decreed with costs throughout and that the suit of Parmeshri Das against Dhanna Mal etc. be dismissed with costs throughout.

Judgment.—The following facts may briefly be stated : The house in dispute originally belonged to Bishan Das who had two wives, Mt. Lorindi Bai and Mt. Ved Kaur, the latter died without issue, but by Mt. Lorindi Bai he had a daughter, Mt. Durgi, who had two sons, Moti Ram and Parmeshri Das. Parmeshri Das was adopted by Bishen Das. On the 30th June 1890, Bishan Das made an absolute gift of this house to Mt Lorindi Bai by means of a registered deed. Thereafter on the 23rd September 1890, he made a will bequeathing the whole of his property to Mt. Lorindi Bai and after her death to Mt. Durgi and then to Parmeshri Das. Bishan Das died on the 5th October 1902, and Mt. Lorindi Bai died the next day, that is, on the 6th October 1902. On the 26th August 1913 Mt. Durgi sold the house in dispute to one Hari Ram by means of a registered sale-deed, and the latter sold it to Dhanna Mal, appellant, on the 23rd November 1917. It appears that after the sale Mt. Durgi continued to live in the house as a tenant, till her death in September 1917. Parmeshri Das also resided in the house with Mt. Durgi. It further seems that after the death of Bishan Das, Parmeshri Das and Mt Durgi continued to carry on his business which, however, failed with the result that a composition had to be made with the creditors.

Apparently after the death of Mt. Durgi Parmeshri Das claimed to be the owner of the house ; this led to civil and criminal proceedings between him and Dhanna Mal which culminated in two suits being instituted in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar, one by Dhanna Mal against Parmeshri Das for possession of the house, with the exception of a small portion which the plaintiff alleged was already in his possession, and the second by Parmeshri Das against Dhanna Mal for a declaration that he was the absolute owner of the house. Both the suits were tried together and have been disposed of by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge by the same judgment. The suit of Parmeshri Das has been decreed and the other suit has been dismissed. Dhanna Mal has consequently appealed to this Court.

After counsel for both parties had argued their respective cases we arrived at the conclusion that the appeals must be accepted and, stating our reasons in brief orally, we pronounced judgment accordingly and intimated to the parties that we would record our reasons for our conclusion in detail later. This we proceed to do now. The first important question, which needs determination in this case, is as to the origin and nature of the title of Mt. Lorindi Bai in the house in dispute. Counsel for the appellant contends that she derived her title by virtue of the gift made in her favour on the 30th June 1890 which conferred an absolute interest on her and, therefore, that it become her stridhan descending on her death to her stridhan heir under the Mitakshara law, and also that, even if it be held that she derived her title by virtue of the will made by Bishan Das, on a proper construction of the will the bequest gave her an absolute title to the house and, therefore, the subsequent bequests in favour of Mt. Durgi and Parmeshri Das being repugnant to the antecedent absolute bequest in favour of Mt. Lorindi Bai were invalid and should be ignored, and that consequently the house descended to the heir who would be entitled to inherit her stridhan estate. The respondents' case, on the other hand, is that the gift was never acted upon as it has not been established that possession of the property donated was given to the donee at the time of the gift and that, therefore, Mt. Lorindi Bai took the house under the will, and further that the intention of the testator was to give a limited interest to Mt. Lorindi Bai subject to the gift over to Mt. Durgi and Parmeshri Das. In support of this contention reliance was placed on a judgment of the House of Lords reported in (1905) Appeal Cases 85, and it was strenuously urged that Mt. Dúrgi and after her death Paremshri Das became the owners of the house under the will.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has given no definite finding whether or not the gift was acted upon or whether it was invalid. He has held, following Mohanlal v. Niranjan Das (1) that even under the will Mt. Lorindi Bai took an absolute interest and consequently that the bequest in favour of Mt. Durgi and Parmeshri Das was invalid and inoperative.

In my opinion there is absolutely no reason to hold that the gift was not acted upon. In the deed it is expressly provided that possession of the house had been given to Mt. Lorindi Bai, the donee. There is no evidence on the record from which it may be inferred that possession was not actually given to her. After the lapse of so many years from the date of the deed the burden of proving the invalidity of the gift lay heavily on Parmeshri Das and, in my opinion, he has not discharged it. Moreover no authority is cited in support of the proposition that, in a case like the present where the donee is the wife of the donor a gift is invalid unless the donor vacates the donated property and puts the donee in its exclusive possession. Indeed the learned counsel admitted that all that is required in such a case is an unequivocal intention to make a gift and an effective transfer of control of and power to dispose of the gifted property to the donee. This provision of law was, in my opinion, complied with in this case by the execution and registration of the deed of gift, it being borne in mind that the husband and wife who resided in the house continued to do so after the gift.

Holding, therefore, as I do that Mt. Lorindi Bai took the property under the gift it is obvious that she took an absolute interest in the house which the deed purported to grant her and, therefore, the house was her stridhan property and devolved after her on Mt. Durgi as an heir to the stridhan estate of her mother Mt. Lorindi Bai.

In view of the above finding it is not necessary for me to discuss the next question whether, if Mt. Lorindi Bai had taken the house under the will, she had an absolute interest in it or a limited interest subject to the bequests in favour of Mt. Durgi and Parmeshri Das. Counsel for the latter urged that the house was not taken by Mt. Lorindi Bai under the gift because otherwise Bishan Das would not have made a will, but the will makes no mention of the house and it is admitted that he had considerable property other than the house which could have been the subject of the bequest. There is further no substance in the argument of the counsel that in his pleadings Dhanna

(1) A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 11=2 Lah. 175.

Mal admitted that Mt. Lorindi Bai had taken the house under the will. His written statement properly construed amounts to this : that Mt. Lorindi Bai derived her title to the house under the deed of gift, but if she be deemed to have taken it under the will, still she inherited an absolute title. Such a plea does not in any way militate against his primary case which is that the title of Mt. Lorindi Bai was by virtue of the gift.

The next question agitated before us, and which comes after the first in its natural sequence, is whether Mr. Durgi as an heir to the stridhan estate of her mother Mt. Lorindi Bai had herself a life interest in the house or whether she took an absolute title thereto. Counsel for Parmeshri Das contends that she took an absolute interest, but the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that she had only a life-interest and nothing more. In my opinion the view of the learned Judge is correct. It is supported by a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, i. e. Sheo Partab Bahadur Singh v. Allahabad Bank (2), in which it was held that under the Hindu law of Benares school there is no distinction as to the nature of the estate taken between property inherited by a woman from a male and property inherited by her from a female and that in both cases she takes it not absolutely as her stridhan but as a qualified estate with reverter after her death to the heirs of her predecessor-in-title. The same view is taken in Sham Behari Lal v. Kam Kali (3) where it was held that :

> a daughter taking as heir to her mother property which was stridhan in the hands of the mother does not take it as her own stridhan, but takes it with a limited estate, with reverter after her death to the heirs of her predecessor.

Following these judicial authorities, I hold that after the death of Mt. Durgi the house would have reverted to the heirs of Mt. Lorindi Bai but for the sale by her in favour of Hari Ram, and also that Mt. Durgi having merely a limited estate in the house was not competent to sell it except for valid necessity as that term is defined in the Hindu law.

No argument, however, was advanced before us by counsel for the appellant in support of his plea that there was valid necessity for the sale. Indeed it was conceded that such necessity had not been established. The main contention of the learned counsel was that, assuming that the sale was without necessity, Parmeshri Das, not being the next heir of Mt. Lorindi Bai with regard to the house in dispute in the presence of Moti Ram, her daughter's son, was not competent to challenge the sale which must be held to be valid and subsisting unless set aside at the instance of the next reversionary heir, that is Moti Ram.

This takes us to the consideration of the next question that arises in this case, which is whether Parmeshri Das is the next heir of Mt. Lorindi Bai in respect of the house in dispute or whether he is now competent to challenge the sale by Mt. Durgi in favour of Hari Ram. I will first clear the ground by stating that, according to the recitals in the sale-deed Mt. Durgi did not purport to transfer her life-estate only, but she sold the house absolutely, that is to say, she expressly intended to grant an absolute heritable title to the vendee Hari Ram, which was not intended to terminate with the death of Mt. Durgi, but continues to subsist unless the sale is set aside as having been made without valid necessity.

The argument of the respondent's counsel was that, even assuming that originally the house was the stridhan property of Mt. Lorindi Bai in her hands, it ceased to be so in the hands of Mt. Durgi, and when it reverted to Mt. Lorindi Bai's heirs after Mt. Durgi's death, it had lost its character as the stridhan property of Mt. Lorindi Bai and had assumed the character of the usual woman's estate in the property inherited by her from her husband, and, therefore, devolved on the heir who was entitled to succeed to the rest of her husband's estate in her hands. No authority was cited, and I know of none, in support of the proposition that when property reverts to the heirs of the last female full owner after the extinction of a limited estate under the Mitakshara Law, it loses its original character and assumes the character of a limited estate. Such a proposition, in my opinion, is self-contradictory and is antagonistic to the very notion of the rule of reverter which, when translated into practice, means that when determining the heir who is to succeed to the property, it must be assumed as if the intermediate limited heir who has died did not exist, and the original inheritance opened out to the next heir to the estate of the last full owner. I hold that the house would have reverted to the heirs of Mt. Lorindi Bai who would have inherited it as her stridhan property if her death had taken place after that of Mt. Durgi. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that, on the death of Mt. Durgi, Parmeshari Das was equally entitled to inherit the house in dispute with Moti Ram as stridhan heir of Mt. Lorindi Bai, and has relied in support of this view on Sheoshankar Lal v. Devi Sahai (4), which is a judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In that case the property in dispute was gifted absolutely to Mt. Jadu Nath by the last male owners thereof. On Mt. Jadu Nath's death her daughter, Mt. Jagar Nath, succeeded to her rights. Jagar Nath died leaving sons and a married daughter. In a suit by the sons of Mt. Jagar Nath to establish their title to the property against certain defendants, who professed to hold it adversly to Mt. Jadu Nath and Mt. Jagar Nath, the plea of the defendants, inter alia was that as a sister of the plaintiffs was in existence, she, not they, was the heir to their mother's property. The plaintiffs contended that the existence of the sister did not prejudice their claim and an issue was framed :

whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain the present suit while the daughter of Mt. Jagar Nath Kunwari exists.

It may be mentioned that the daughter was not a party to this litigation at all. In the course of their judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked:

The precise question, therefore, for decision is whether, under the Hindu law of the Benares school, property which a woman has taken by inheritance from a female is her stridhan in such a sense that on her death it passes to her stridhan heirs in the female line to the exclusion of males.

Their Lordships eventually answered the question in the negative and decreed the plaintiff's suit concluding the judgment as follows :

Their Lordships are, therefore, unable to agree with the High Court in thinking that the property now in dispute was the stridhan of Mt. Jagar Nath devolving as such upon the plaintiff's married sister in preference to them and this is sufficient to dispose of the case.

It is thus to be observed that the precise question that is involved in the present case was not raised and discussed before the Judicial Committee. It appears to have been assumed that if Mt. Jagar Nath did not become a full owner of the property and it reverted to the heirs of Mt. Jadu Nath the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. The question whether the plaintiffs were the heirs of Mt. Jadu Nath after the death of Mt. Jagar Nath or whether their sister was the heir was not apparently discussed before their Lordships. This judgment, therefore, is no authority in support of the view of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, but its ultimate effect does lend some support to it. This, however, is not the first time that the question of interpretation of this case has come up for consideration before the High Courts in India. It was considered, inter alia, by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Subramanian Chetty v. Arunachalam Chetty (5), and also by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sham Behari Lal v. Ram Kali (3), and again in Ram Kali v. Gopal Dei (6). In the Madras case it was held that a daughter's daughter is entitled to take in preference to a daughter's son, the stridhan of grandmother and that the judgment of the Judicial Committee already referred to should not be taken to lay down a rule to the contrary as the question was not directly put in issue before their Lordships, but was merely assumed. The same view of the effect of the Privy Council judgment was taken in the Allahabad cases cited above.

Another circumstance that may pertinently be mentioned is that in the case before us Moti Ram has been impleaded as a party and is actually prosecuting the case on behalf of Dhanna Mal who is his father-in-law and there is a statement on the record from which it appears that Dhanna Mal intends to transfer this property to Moti Ram. This, however, does not materially affect the question before us.

The heirs to the stridhan property of the kind with which we are concerned in this case are mentioned in para. 125 (2) of Mulla's Principles of Hindu. Law, where the daughter's son is mentioned to be the preferential heir as compared to a son. The learned counsel for Parmeshri Das did not contend that this order of succession was not correct. His argument, however, was that his client was entitled to succeed for two reasons; (1) as the property when it reverted to Mt. Lorindi Bai's heirs after the death of Mt. Durgi ceased to be her stridhan property, it descended to her son with the rest of the property which she had inherited from her husband, and (2) that in any case Parmeshri Das was also a daughter's son of Mt. Lorindi Bai and did not lose his rights as such in spite of his adoption by Bishan Das.

I have already recorded my opinion that the property, when it reverted to Mt. Lorindi Bai's heirs after the death of Mt. Durgi, did not lose its character as her stridhan property. It, therefore, follows that her daughter's son is entitled to take it before her son, and consequently Parmeshri Das could not inherit the house in suit as the son of Mt. Lorindi Bai. I am also of opinion that on his adoption by Bishan Das he lost his rights as his daughter's son and consequently also as the daughter's son of Mt. Lorindi Bai. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge appears to have been under some misapprehension, when he holds that the adoption of Parmeshri Das by Bishan Das did not take away his former status as his daughter's son. It is a well-established principle of the Mitakshara Law that an adoption in the dattaka form has the effect of transferring the adopted boy from his natural into the adoptive family and consequently of losing all his rights of a son in his natural family including the right of claiming any share in the estate of his natural relations. The only tie or affinity that such a boy retains with his natural family is that he cannot marry in it within the prohibited degree nor can he adopt from that family a boy whom he could not have adopted if he had remained in that family: see para. 409 of Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law. The proposition, in my opinion, is so well recognized that no further authority is necessary to support it. In fact counsel for the respondent did not seek to support the judgment of the Senior Subordinate Judge on this ground but he asserted that the adoption in this case was not in the Dattaka but in the kritima form, the sole ground advanced in support of this contention, being that under the Mitakshara law, a daughter's son could not be adopted in the dattaka form.

We declined to entertain this assertion of the learned counsel, as it appeared to us that it was assumed throughout the trial in the lower Court that this was a valid adoption under the dattaka form and that an attempt was being made to raise a new plea for the first time before us. I further hold that there is absolutely no material on the record in support of the contention of the learned counsel and it must, therefore, be assumed that this was a valid adoption under the dattaka form. It, therefore, follows that Parmeshri Das is not entitled to inherit the house along with or in preference to Moti Ram.

Counsel for the respondent then propounded another proposition which is that the sale in favour of Hari Ram being by the holder of a limited estate under the Hindu law was invalid, and, therefore, that Parmeshri Das who was in possession of the house could defend his possession against the invalid title of Dhanna Mal who derived it from Hari Ram. It was further contended that as part of the same proposition that, in any case, Parmeshri Das being a reversioner after Moti Ram, was entitled to defend his possession on the ground that the sale in favour of Hari Ram being without consideration and necessity was invalid.

In support of the first proposition the learned counsel relied upon Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous (7) and Abdul v. Sarbuland (8) in which it has been held that mere possession is a sufficient defence against persons who have no title to the property in suit and that a person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is good against all the world except the true owner. But there is an initial fallacy underlying the contention of the learned counsel. A sale by a limited owner is not ab initio void or invalid. It is perfectly valid and binding until it is set aside at the instance of the next reversioner. Such a transaction is, if I may use the analogy, like a voidable contract which is valid and enforceable unless it is repudiated by the person at whose option it is voidable. The learned counsel placed reliance on certain remarks quoted at the bottom of p. 452 by a Division Bench of this Court in Gobinda v. Nanda (9) which are to the effect that > the restrictions on a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. It follows that if, for want of heirs, the right to the property, so far as it has not been lawfully disposed of by her, passes to the Crown, the Crown must have the same power which an heir would have of protecting its interests by impeaching any unauthorized alienation by the widow.

(7) [1893] 20 Cal. 834=20 I. A. 99=6 Sar. 305 (P. C.).

This remark, in my opinion, does not help the respondent. The true meaning of the remark is that if at the time when the inheritance opens out on the death of the widow there are heirs who are entitled to inherit they have a right to institute a suit to impeach an unauthorized alienation made by her, and that if there are no such heirs and the property passes to the Crown, the Crown has such a right. The remark assumes that the person who attacks the alienation is entitled to inherit the property. Assuming that Parmeshri Das is a stranger to the family in the sense that he has no right to inherit the stridhan property of Mt. Lorindi Bai and, therefore, that he is attempting to establish his title to the property merely on the ground of his adverse possession as against an alienee from a limited owner, the alienation being without necessity, I am clearly of opinion that he cannot succeed.

In Jhari Koeri v. Bijai Singh (10) persons in possession of the property then in dispute, who were the defendants, defended the suit inter alia on the ground of their possession and contended that unless the plaintiffs who for practical purposes were the purchasers of the property from a limited owner proved an indefeasible title to the property they, the defendants, were entitled to remain in possession. The learned Judges held that the purchasers having purchased what purported to be an absolute interest in the property they obtained a title voidable at the instance of the reversioners on the widow's death and that until challenged by them it was a good title and could not be treated as a nullity by any trespasser who had succeeded in getting possession of the property. With all respect I agree with this view and hold that there is no substance in the first contention of the learned counsel.

With regard to the second contention that, though Moti Ram was the immediate heir still Parmeshri Das being the heir next after him could contest the validity of the sale in favour of Hari Ram. It is not necessary for me to decide whether Parmeshri Das was competent to sue to set aside the sale during the lifetime of Mt. Durgi, but I will confine my remarks to the circumstances as they existed at the time of institution of these suits. On the death of Mt. Durgi, Moti Ram remained no longer an expectant reversioner. His expectation to inherit the estate of Mt. Lorindi Bai having materialized on the succession having opened out Parmeshri Das lost all rights in it as the next heir. There is no doubt that if Moti Ram had actually inherited the house, he would, as the daughter's son of Mt. Lorindi Bai, have become a full owner thereof, and as such would have become a new stock of heirs with regard to the house so inherited by him, and therefore on his death it is his heirs, under the Hindu law, and not those of Mt. Lorindi Bai, that would be entitled to succeed to him. Parmeshri Das, therefore, under the circumstances, has lost all reversionary interest in the house on the death of Mt. Durgi and is consequently not competent to challenge the sale by her, and especially so when we know that Moti Ram is actually supporting the alienee. Parmeshri Das's interest, if any, that now remains in the house is as an expectant heir to Moti Ram and as such he is not entitled to challenge the alienation and specially so considering that it has not been challenged by the latter.

The last question taken up by the counsel for the respondent was that in any case the sale in favour of Hari Ram was fictitious having been effected to defraud the creditors of Mt. Durgi and that it was absolutely void and, therefore, did not confer any title on the vendee. It is hardly necessary to seriously consider this plea. In the first instance it has not been established that the sale was fictitious and effected with intent to defraud the creditors. On the other hand it appears from the statement of the respondent's own witness, Harjas Rai, that the house in dispute was left to Mt. Durgi by the creditors. It appears that on the failure of the business of Mt. Durgi and Parmeshri Das they made a composition with their creditors and handed over the bulk of their property to certain trustees, including Harjas Rai, for distribution to the creditors, but it is clear that the house in dispute was not so handed over, but was expressly left unaffected by the trust. There was, therefore, no danger of its being attached by the creditors and consequently there was no motive and no occassion to transfer it fictitiously with intent to defraud the creditors.

It is not, therefore, necessary for me to consider the next point whether Parmeshri Das is entitled to defend his possession, merely on the plea that the sale in question was fictitious, though I may remark in passing that, as at present advised, I consider that such a sale can be set aside only at the instance of the creditors and consequently the plea that it was void is not open to Parmeshri Das under the circumstances.

It is for these reasons that the appeals have been accepted by us and the decrees of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge reversed.

Judgment.—A preliminary objection is taken that this appeal is barred by limitation. The facts are as follows :

The order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge from which this appeal is taken is dated the 25th November, 1926. On the 31st January 1927 the appellant applied to the Agent, Copying Agency, Gurdaspur for copies of : (1) the judgment of the Sub-Judge, Pathankot, dated the 11th December 1925 : and (2) the judgment and decree-sheet of the Senior Sub-Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 25th November 1926.

He sent this application by post under registered cover with a copying-fee of Rs. 3. The copying agent asked the Court for an estimate of the money needed, and on the 2nd February he was informed that Rs. 4 more were payable in advance and that this should be put in by the 10th February. Thereupon, on the 10th February the sum was put in and a proper application made to the Court. The copies required were supplied on the 11th February 1927. The appeal was originally presented here as a revision on the 28th February 1927, but the office pointed out that an appeal lay and accordingly the heading was altered on the 5th March 1927.

It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondent that, even taking the date for the presentation of the appeal as the 28th February, 1927 the appeal is barred by limitation by three days. This would be so, unless the time spent by the copying agent in getting the estimate, etc., and putting in the application with the proper fee be allowed to this appellant. Ashiq Hussain v. Ali Bakhsh (1) is a case almost entirely in point. It is true that in that case no money at all was sent, whereas in this case Rs. 3 were sent and it was pointed out that any deficiency would be made up on the copies being supplied per V. P. P. But the point decided by that ruling was that the copying agency could not be regarded as other than an agent of the applicant and was not an agent of the Court under R. 4 (ii), Ch. 1, of the Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Vol. III. Whether R. 4 (ii) or R. 4 (iv) applies, this principle must still hold good.

I, therefore, accept the preliminary objection and hold that the appeal is barred by limitation and must be dismissed with costs.

Addison, J.—The nine respondents, Ibrahim, Dillu, Mustaqim, Nizam, Imam Din, Bidar Din, Sultan, Khushi Mahommad and Jan Mohammad, who are Tarkhans of village Dabra and closely related to each other, were charged under S. 302, read with S. 149, I. P. C., with the murder of Bhagat Singh, Honorary Magistrate, on the afternoon of the 3rd May 1926, at Dabra and were acquitted by the Sessions Judge of Ferozepore. An appeal has been presented by the Crown against this order of acquittal.

Bhagat Singh lived at Muktsar but some members of his family live at Dabra. Bhagat Singh and his sons along with his nephew, Balwant Singh and others own Patti Ganda Singh of village Dabra, while Fazal, lambardar and others own Patti Ram Singh. Fazl and the other owners of the second named patti, though Musalmans, are related to the Khatri owners of the other patti. They changed their religion some time ago as is clear from the fact that Fazl's father was also a Musalman, by name Mohkam Din. The respondents are occupancy tenants, as well as ordinary tenants, of the proprietors of village Dabra. Litigation was pending at the time of the murder between Bhagat Singh and Ibrahim respondent, namely, a revenue suit for produce and a criminal case of mischief caused by cattle, instituted by Bhagat Singh. There also had been other cases against Ibrahim and other members of his family by the relatives of Bhagat Singh.

The story, as told by the prosecution, is that Bhagat Singh came to Dabra on the afternoon of the 3rd May. He did so in order to arrange for the summoning of the witnesses in the pending cases mentioned above. His nephew Balwant Singh P. W. 4, complained to him that the ears of some of their wheat sheaves had been stolen, that the lambardar Fazl Din, P. W. 8 had promised to make inquiries and that Murid, sweeper, was suspected. Murid was called to Fazl Din's house where he denied the theft and offered to show the ears which he had. Thereupon, Bhagat Singh, accompanied by his nephew Balwant Singh P. W. 4, his son Jaswant Singh, P. W. 10, Jagat Singh his cousin once removed, P. W. 11, Fazl Din, lambardar, P. W. 8. and his brother Waheb, P. W. 7, both of whom are Musalman collaterals of the deceased, and by Murid, sweeper P. W. 5, who works for Waheb, went to Murid's house, being joined by Shibbu, a Chamar by caste, P. W. 9, on the way. The respondent Dillu, brother of Ibrahim respondent, was standing there. When they arrived, Jaswant Singh remarked that Murid and the Tarkhans had looted them. The ears were inspected and the deceased sent Balwant Singh for a cart which he brought. By this time Dillu, respondent, had disappeared. Rana, P. W. 6, uncle of Murid sweeper, came with the cart and swore that Murid had not stolen the ears. Waheb also defended Murid. On this the deceased agreed that the ears had not been stolen. At that very instant, Shibbu Chamar, called out that the Tarkhans were coming. The nine respondents, armed with sticks, gandhalis and other weapons, arrived and fell upon the Khatri proprietors, inflicting injuries not only upon the deceased, but upon his son and nephew, Jaswant Singh and Balwant Singh. The son and nephew fled but Bhagat Singh fell down and his assailants continued to beat him when he was on the ground. The attack only ceased when the bystanders called out that he had been killed. This took place in the late afternoon. Bhagat Singh was carried to his son's house and it is in evidence that he was able to speak, though the doctor, who performed the post-mortem examination, said that he thought that he must have become unconscious at once. Bhagat Singh was then placed in a cart and taken to the Muktsar hospital which he reached about 11-30 p. m. The sub-assistant surgeon there attended to the three injured men, prepared certificates of their injuries and wrote two notes to the sub-inspector of police about 4 a. m. and 5 a. m. asking him to come at once as Bhagat Singh was in a precarious condition. The sub-inspector came to the hospital at 6 a. m. and recorded the statement of Balwant Singh, his nephew, as the first information report. Bhagat Singh died at 5-40 a. m. before the sub-inspector arrived. The above story is told by each of the eight eyewitnesses.

The respondents refused to answer any questions in the Court of the committing Magistrate but put in next day a combined written statement, to the effect that they were not there, and that Bhagat Singh was killed by Murid and other sweepers against whom Bhagat Singh wished to complain. His relatives, however, did not care to have his death attributed to sweepers and thus accused the respondents between whom and Bhagat Singh, deceased there was no love lost.

They did not add to this statement before the Sessions Judge and produced no evidence in their defence.

After a very careful consideration of the entire record, through which we have been taken, I can see no reason whatsoever for disbelieving the story told by the eight eyewitnesses regarding whose demeanour the Sessions Judge has said nothing. The deceased had eight injuries on his person, two being caused by sharp weapons and the rest by blunt weapons. Of these four injuries, one being an incised wound, were on the head which was extensively fractured, this being the cause of death. The head injuries were so severe that survival was impossible. The injuries themselves leave no doubt that it was intended to kill him or to inflict such injuries as were likely to cause death. His son and nephew had each four injuries.

Counsel for the respondents urged nothing except the points mentioned in the judgment of the Sessions Judge, none of which, in my opinion, are of any significance. The first was that he thought it inexplicable that the matter was not reported earlier to the police except on the defence theory that the relatives waited till Bhagat Singh was dead. In the first place the medical evidence shows that Bhagat Singh must have become unconscious almost at once. It was known at the hospital that he was dying. It is admitted in the written statement of the respondents that there was no love lost between Bhagat Singh and them. What advantage, therefore, was there in the so called delay ? In the second place, there was no reason to implicate the respondents instead of the real culprits. In the third place there was no delay which has not been explained in the most satisfactory way. Bhagat Singh was put in an ordinary cart very soon after the crime and it did not reach the hospital till 11-30 p. m. He was taken first to the hospital and not to the police station as he was in a dangerous condition. It took a considerable time to attend to the wounds of the three injured persons and prepare certificates of their injuries. It was intended to take these certificates to the police station, but this was not done as the sub-assistant surgeon had already written to the Sub-Inspector of police who came at 6 a. m. The evidence establishes these facts beyond any question while the theory relied upon is mere conjecture without any basis.

The second point taken by the Sessions Judge was that a conspiracy to give a false version of the affair was not improbable, as the witnesses were either relatives or dependants of relatives of the deceased. I fail completely to understand this argument which is purely hypothetical and unwarranted. The eyewitnesses except three are relatives, though two of those relatives are Musalmans of a different religion from the deceased. Two are sweepers and dependants of relatives, but Shibbu Chamar, has not been proved to be a dependant. It is inconceivable that eight eye witnesses deliberately implicated the respondents instead of the real culprits, a finding without any justification.

The third point taken by him was that the story in Court had been improved upon in certain respects as compared with the first information report made by Balwant Singh at 6 a. m., on the 4th May. What was stated by Balwant Singh on the 4th May, is not substantive evidence and can only be used to corroborate or contradict what he had stated as a witness. Besides the story now told by Balwant Singh is nearly the same as that first told by him to the police. There are two omissions only in the statement made by him to the police. The first is that in the first information report it was stated that Jaswant Singh said that there were ears of grain in other houses as well as in Murid's (see p. 11, line 16 of the paper-book). According to the evidence given in Court Jaswant Singb said that "Murid and these Tarkhans have looted us." Surely that is no real difference. The second is that in the first information report there was no mention of the fact that Dillu, respondent, was standing at Murid's house when the party went there and that he had disappeared before the cart came. An argument such as this means that if every detail is not given in the first report to the police, which is not substantive evidence, the case must be held to be false. The witnesses other than Balwant Singh were asked if they told the police about Dillu's presence and replied that they did while the sub-inspector said that they did not tell him. The written statements made by these witnesses to the police have not been proved and the only way a witness can be contradicted by statements made to the police under the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., is to prove his written statement and put it to the witness under S. 145, Indian Evidence Act, to permit him to explain the contradictions, if any. This was not done. Statements made to the police cannot be used at a trial in any other way. In any case, the respondents must have known that the proprietors, including their enemy, Bhagat Singh, had gone to Murid's house and it is unimportant whether Dillu actually saw them arrive or not. It is frivolous to say that this throws discredit on the prosecution story. On the evidence, however, I have no hesitation in holding that Dillu was there.

The fourth reason given by the Sessions Judge was that the story was improbable as there was then no provocation to the respondents, though there was to the sweepers. But the respondents bore Bhagat Singh a grudge, and there is no reason to disbelieve the evidence that they seized the opportunity to be revenged. The Sessions Judge, when dealing with this point, has clearly erred in saying that the prosecution witnesses, in order to exclude the possibility of the sweepers having any motive for making such an attack, introduced at a late stage into their story an improvement to the effect that just before the attack, Bhagat Singh, impressed by the protestations of Rana Wahab regarding Murid's innocence, said "very well, let the matter drop." All this is in the first information report (see p. 11, lines 10-16, of the paper-book) the only difference being that he is there reported as saying "I agree," words which have the same meaning.

Lastly, the Sessions Judge relied on the fact that Murid absconded for two days as proving that Murid and his friends committed the assault. But there is little in this. Murid has explained that Mustaqim took him away with himself by frightening him. This is a possible explanation, and, at the same time, Murid might have been afraid that he too would be implicated as the affair took place at his house. Mustaqim did abscond and was not arrested till the 7th May, though all the others were arrested at once.

Two of the assessors considered that all the respondents were guilty, while two held that the sweepers were responsible for the crime. The evidence is reliable, stands unrebutted, and is overwhelming. In my judgment, there is no possible escape from the conclusion that all the respondents are guilty under S. 302, read with S. 149, I. P. C., of the murder of Bhagat Singh. I would, therefore, accept the appeal, convict them of the offence stated and sentence them to transportation for life.

Order.—On the 16th May 1925, one Pal Singh lodged a complaint under Ss. 497/498, I. P. C., against Saudagar Singh and Mt. Guro. Bailable warrants for Rs. 1,000 were issued against both Saudagar Singh and Mt. Guro for appearance in Court on the 2nd June 1925. These warrants were served on the 23rd May 1925 on which date Samman Singh and Kesar Singh, petitioners, executed bonds undertaking to produce the accused persons before the Court on the 2nd June 1925.

It appears that on the 2nd June 1925 the Magistrate Sir Arur Singh did not hold his Court but had gone to Gurdaspur. The reader made a note on the record that Pal Singh complainant was present but that the accused persons were absent; that the warrants had not been received back after service and that the case should come up on the 6th June 1925. The complaint was ultimately withdrawn by Pal Singh on receipt of Rs. 1,800 from Saudagar Singh.

The Magistrate Sir Arur Singh took proceedings under S. 514, Criminal P. C., against the two petitioners who had, as already mentioned, undertaken to produce them in Court on the 2nd June 1925 and ordered that the amount of the security be forfeited. On revision, the learned District Magistrate, Amritsar, had forwarded proceedings to this Court with a recommendation that the order of forfeiture be set aside. After hearing Mr. Fakir Chand for the petitioners and Mr. Raj Krishna for the Crown I am of opinion that the recommendation of the District Magistrate must be accepted and Sir Arur Singh's order of forfeiture set aside. The Magistrate did not hold his Court on the 2nd June 1925 the only date on which the petitioners had undertaken to produce the accused persons. When the Magistrate himself was not holding his Court the accused were under no obligation to appear nor the sureties under any obligation to produce them. I, therefore, accept the petition and set aside the order of the Magistrate forfeiting the amount of the security of Rs. 1,000 each furnished by each of the petitioners.

Ram Nath and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

F. A. No. 244 of 1923, Decided on 26th May 1927, from the decree of the 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 18th December 1922.

A contract for sale of goods provided: "We hereby sell to you goods detailed below at Karachi Godown according to the Karachi usage . . . As soon as the railway receipt and the invoice of these goods reach Delhi, you shall have to receive the same on payment of the price, failing which you shall be liable for interest and damage. Details of Goods. 1. thirty bales of Mulls, December shipment three lots . . . 25th February shipment two lots . . . 5/30, 60 days grace; 2. three cases of Mulls of December shipment, three lots, grace two months."

Buyers sued sellers for damages for non-delivery within three years of arrival of the last shipment but beyond three years of arrival of all previous shipments.

Held: that the contract was not an instalment contract, that the sellers could have delivered goods under it up to the last day of arrival of the last shipment and that the plaintiffs could not sue for damages for breach of contract until that date had expired and, therefore, the suit was not barred in respect of any shipment: 26 Bom. 744 and 36 Cal. 617, Dist; A. I. R. 1925, Lah. 513; A. I. R. 1927, Lah. 92 and A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 404, Foll.

[P 23, C 2]

Held further: that the sellers had clearly and in unequivocal terms undertaken to deliver the goods to the buyers against payment as soon as the railway receipt and the invoice of those goods reached Delhi, and therefore the fact that the goods were sunk on the high seas or that the suppliers did not supply goods was no defence to a suit for damages for non-delivery: A. I. R. 1923 P. C. 54, Foll. [P 24, C 1]

(b) Contract Act, S. 51—Suit for damages for non-delivery—Plaintiff must prove that he was ready and willing to pay for the price.

In a suit for damages for non-delivery of the goods it is the duty of the plaintiffs to satisfy the Court that they were ready and willing with the money, that they had capacity to pay, or, at any rate, they had made proper and reasonable preparations and arrangements for securing the purchase money and that having thus complied with the requirements of law they demanded the goods on the due date from the defendants. It would then be incumbent upon the defendants to deliver the goods to the plaintiffs: A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 971; A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1109 and A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 318, Rel. on. [P 26, C 2]

(c) Contract Act, S. 93—Buyers to receive railway receipt and invoices on payment as soon as they arrive—Buyers must apply for delivery even when seller sends notice of arrival.

Even where the contract provides that as soon as the railway receipts and the invoice of the goods contracted to be sold arrive, the buyers would receive the same on payment of the price, the buyers must apply for delivery although the seller gives notice of arrival. First Appeal No. 572 of 1923, Foll. [P 27, C 1]

Agha Haidar, J.—This is a defendants appeal arising out of a suit for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiff firm is the buyer and the defendant firm is the seller. The plaintiffs came into Court on the allegation that on the 24th November 1916, the defendants agreed to sell to them thirty bales of Mulls No. 35255 and three cases of Mulls No. 36556; that the goods were not ascertained at the time of the contract between the parties, nor were they ascertained afterwards; that the defendants delivered two bales of Mulls No. 35255 only to the plaintiffs and that in spite of the repeated demands the defendants did not deliver to the plaintiffs 28 bales of Mulls No. 35255 and three bales of Mulls No. 36556, with the result that the plaintiffs suffered a loss of Rs. 6,975. The cause of action according to the plaintiff, arose at Delhi on the defendants committing breach of contract and failing to give delivery of the above-mentioned 31 bales in the month of September, October and November 1917.

It would be convenient to quote here the relevant portions of the original contract dated 24th November 1916:

Compliments of Ganesh Das Ishar Das (seller) to Bhai Ram Nath Ram Sarup (buyer). We hereby sell to you goods detailed below at Karachi Godown according to the Karachi usage * * * * * As soon as the railway receipt and the invoice of these goods reach Delhi, you shall have to receive the same on payment of the price, failing which you shall be liable for interest and damage.

Details of Goods.

I. 30 (thirty) bales of Mulls No. 35255 at the rate of Rs. 5-7-6 (rupees five, annas seven and pies six only, December shipment three lots . . . . . 25 February shipment two lots . . . . 5/30 60 days grace.

II. 3 (three) cases of Mulls .No. 36556 at the rate of Rs. 5-4-0 (rupees five and annas four only) of December shipment, three lots, grace two months 3/33.

The defendants after reciting the terms of the contract dated the 24th November 1916, pleaded that it was agreed between the parties that on the arrival of the railway receipt and the invoice of the goods at Delhi, the defendants on receipt of payment of price would give delivery of the goods to the plaintiffs. They also pleaded that the goods were subsequently ascertained. They admitted that on the arrival of the railway receipt and the invoice the plaintiffs took delivery of two bales of Mulls No. 35255 on payment of their price. They give details of the sinking of 24 bales of the two numbers of Mulls in suit and point out that one bale was not received by them from their sellers and, therefore, claim to be exonerated from all liability as regards 25 bales. They further urge that they gave arrival notices of eight bales on various dates to the plaintiffs out of which two only were taken delivery of by the plaintiffs and they state that one bale had been lying at the Allahabad Bank since the 22nd December 1917, without the plaintiffs taking delivery of the same. In their additional pleas the defendants raised the plea of limitation and urged that if there was breach of contract on the part of the defendants at all, it was committed in the months of May and June 1917, and, as the suit was brought more than three years after the breach, it was barred by time. They also stated that the plaintiffs suffered no damages and that as the railway receipt and the invoices of the goods were not delivered to the defendants by their sellers the plaintiffs were, therefore, not entitled to get the goods. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the suit was within time. And, although the plea was not clearly taken on the pleadings, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge with the consent of the counsel for the parties, raised the issue:

whether the plaintiffs were ready and willling to perform their part of the contract.

He gave a finding on this issue in favour of the plaintiffs. He also found that 177 bales had been sunk on the high seas; but he held that it could not be said that goods relating to the contract between the parties had been sunk as the goods were never ascertained or appropriated. He also found that the contract was not contingent one and, therefore, the defendants were bound to deliver the goods on due date whether they received them from their sellers or not. Lastly, he held that the defendants were not absolved from liability if they did not receive railway receipts and invoices from their sellers; in other words, he held that they were bound to supply the goods in any event. The rest of the judgment is not material for the purposes of this appeal. In the end he gave a decree to the plaintiffs for Rs. 3,482-13-0 and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim as to the balance.

The defendants came up in appeal to this Court challenging the findings of the Courts below as regards damages awarded against them, and the plaintiffs-respondents filed cross-objections under O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., complaining against their suit not being decreed in full.

The case was argued at considerable length by the learned counsel for the parties. A number of pleas were taken in the memorandum of appeal, but it is not necessary to discuss them at any length. On behalf of the appellants it was urged that barring two bales only, the rest of the claim was time barred. The argument is based upon the various due dates as worked out by Mr. Sardha Ram, the learned counsel for the defendants-appellants, in the light of a certain memorandum described as statement A which is printed at p. 8 of the supplementary paper book. He says that the December shipment reached Karachi on the 8th April 1917, and that allowing four days for the journey between Karachi and Delhi the date of arrival in Delhi was the 12th April 1917. In the same way, about the January shipment the date of arrival at Delhi according to him would be the 21st May 1917, and as to the February shipment the date of arrival in Delhi would be the 1st May 1917. It is only as regards the March shipment consisting of two bales only which reached Delhi on the 12th September 1917, that, according to Mr. Sardha Ram, the claim was within time, since the present suit was brought on the 19th July 1920. It may be mentioned that the statement A deals with Mulls Nos. 35255 only, because Messrs. Ralli Brothers, whose agent prepared the said statement A, are the sole importers of Mulls No. 35255 and not of Mulls No. 36556.

Mr. Sardha Ram's argument on this part of the case is that every date of the arrival of a particular instalment of goods at Delhi constituted the "due date" and default on the part of the defendants on such due date gave a separate cause of action to the plaintiffs and as the plaintiffs brought the present suit more than three years after the dates, worked out as above, the suit was time barred in respect of all the instalments with the exception of the two bales of the March shipment. The point in controversy is not free from difficulty, because the appellants' contention finds some support from the reasoning contained in two cases at least. Jagmohandas Vurjiwan Das v. Nusserwanji Jehangir (1) was quoted on behalf of the appellants. In this case the defendants sold to the plaintiffs 1,000 tons of coal, shipment January to May, at the rate of 200 tons monthly. There was a breach, and the buyers sued the sellers for damages. It was held that the contract was for delivery in monthly shipments and as the coal took about four weeks to arrive at Bombay after shipment, the dates for delivery under the contract would be February to June, and damages should be assessed in respect of each default and on the basis of the stipulated instalments. Cooverjee Bhoja v. Rajendra Nath Mukerjee (2) was also cited on behalf of the appellants. Here the contract was to deliver 5,000 tons of manganese ore, 500 tons before the 31st October 1906, 1,000 tons before the 30th November 1906, 1,500 tons before the 31st December 1906, and the remaining 2,000 tons to be completed and delivered before the 15th February 1907. It was held that the contract was in fact a set of distinct contracts and on each period, when no delivery was made, there was a cause of action for damages for each breach.

It may be mentioned that in none of these two cases there was any question of limitation involved and the Courts treated each default as a distinct breach of contract for the purpose of assessing damages.

On behalf of the respondents at least three cases of the Lahore High Court have been quoted which seem to support their contention.

In Phul Chand Fateh Chand v. Chhote Lal Amba Parshad (3) a suit for damages was brought by the buyer for the breach of contract by non-delivery of goods against the defendant, seller. The defendant pleaded that qua certain bales the suit was time barred. It was held that the contract was an indivisible one and as the arrival of the last shipment under the contract did not take place till within three years of filing the suit, the claim was within time as to all the bales.

This case was followed in Firm Amba Parshad Gopi Nath v. Firm Jawala Dat Ram Kanwar (4). In this case also the buyer brought a suit against the seller for damages for breach of contract by non-delivery. The contract was for eleven bales of Mulls, November (1916) shipment, four lots, sixty days grace, delivery of goods to be taken against payment on arrival of the railway receipt. November shipment, four lots, meant that the goods were to be shipped in four monthly lots commencing from November 1916, allowing two months grace and four months for transit from England to Karachi and one month for their conveyance from Karachi to Lahore. The due date for the first lot was calculated to be somewhere at the end of June 1917. The suit was brought on the 15th July 1920. The lower appellate Court held that the suit was time barred as regards the first lot of goods. It was held on the authority of Phul Chand Fateh Chand v. Chhote Lal Amba Parshad (3) that the contract was an indivisible one and that the due date did not arrive until the last shipment under the contract reached Karachi.

Firm Chhota Lal-Amba Parshad v. Firm Basdeo Mal Hira Lal (5) was decided by a learned Judge of this Court sitting singly. This was also a suit by a buyer against a seller for damages for non-delivery of goods. The contract was for five bales of white mulls, December shipment, three lots, 60 days grace, payment against railway receipt and invoices. The lower appellate Court held that the suit as regards the first shipment was time barred as the due date of December shipment expired on the 30th June 1917, and the suit was instituted on the 20th July 1920. It was held that a contract such as the present was not an instalment contract, that the defendants could have delivered goods under it up to the last day of arrival of the last shipment and that the plaintiffs could not sue for damages for breach of contract until that date had expired. It may be noted that in this case also, March shipments were arriving until September, so that the defendants could have shipped the goods up to March 1917 at the latest. To me the Lahore cases seem to be more in point because they all deal with the question of limitation and the terms of the contract in the last two cases seem to bear a family resemblance to the terms of the contract Ex. P-1 (a) which forms the basis of the present suit. Following these cases I hold that the suit was within time and that no portion of the claim is barred by limitation.

On behalf of the appellants it was further argued that the contract may be deemed to have been cancelled in respect of the 24 bales which were sunk and also as to one bale which was not delivered to the plaintiffs by their sellers.

This argument does not appeal to me. There was no condition in the contract Ex. P-1 (a) against a contingency such as the sinking of the vessels on the high seas by the enemy action. In the absence of any specific provision as regards sinkage, there was no clause in the contract that if the goods were not available for any reason whatsoever, the plaintiffs (buyers) should have no claim for damages. On the other hand the defendant had clearly and in unequivocal terms undertaken to deliver the goods to the plaintiff against payment as soon as the railway receipt and the invoice of those goods reached Delhi. This point is covered by a case reported as Hurnandrai Fulchand v. Pragdas Budhsen (6). In that case the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff to sell to the plaintiffs 864 bales of dhotis manufactured by certain named mills. The contract was that these bales were to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the mills. The seller could only deliver part of the goods owing to the mills failing to manufacture or deliver the balance to the defendant (seller). The mills had in the meantime been engaged in executing certain Government orders during the days of the Great War. It was held that the plaintiff (buyer) was entitled to recover damages from the seller, their Lordships observing that the contract was for a fixed quantity, and as less than that quantity was delivered within the time fixed, the seller must find in the contract some matter of excuse or discharge otherwise he must pay damages. In view of this authority I need not discuss the cases cited by Mr. Sardha Ram in the course of his arguments. I, therefore, hold that in spite of the sinkage and the non-delivery of one bale by the defendant's sellers to the defendant the latter would still be liable for not supplying the goods contracted for to the plaintiffs.

But the case does not end here and there are still difficulties in the plaintiffs' way which in my opinion are insurmountable. Ex. D-1 dated the 2nd May 1917, is a letter written by the defendants to the plaintiffs to the effect that two bales of Mulls No. 35255 had reached Karachi. This letter is followed by Ex. D-5 dated Delhi the 18th June 1917, wherein the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs as follows:

"We beg to intimate that the railway receipt and invoice of two bales Mulls No. 35255 on your account and risk has arrived here. Please pay for and take up railway receipt immediately. Otherwise nine per cent. interest will be charged.

Exhibit D-4, dated the 14th June 1917, is an intimation of the fact that one case of Mulls No. 36556 was lying at the Allahabad Bank since the 22nd February 1917. The plaintiffs were asked to take delivery of the same on payment within ten days. This was followed by another reminder Ex. D-6, dated Delhi the 18th June 1917, which says:

Please note that so far you have not taken the delivery of the above (one case Mulls No. 36556), we therefore ask you to take its delivery within the limit of our notice, otherwise we shall act as per our notice.

Exhibit D-7 dated Delhi the 20th June 1917, is a letter written by the defendants to the plaintiffs in the following terms:

We beg to intimate that the railway receipt and invoices of three bales Mulls No. 35255 on your account and risk has arrived here. Please pay for and take up the railway receipt immediately, otherwise nine per cent. interest will be charged.

Then we come to the important Ex. D-9, dated Delhi the 7th July 1917. This is a letter from the defendants to the plaintiffs in the following terms:

We beg to intimate that the railway receipt and invoice of two bales Mulls No. 35255 on your account and risk has arrived here. Please pay for and take up railway receipt immediately, otherwise nine per cent. interest will be charged.

Lastly we come to Ex. D-11, dated Delhi the 17th September 1917. This is the letter written by the defendants to the plaintiffs re. two bales white Mulls No. 35255. It is in the nature of a reminder to Ex. D-9 already quoted and is in the following terms:

Please pay for and take delivery of the above goods within three days from the date hereof, otherwise we shall consider the goods as cancelled.

We find that the plaintiffs paid a total sum of Rs. 1,765 on the 24th November 1917, and took delivery of these two bales white Mulls No. 35255, mentioned in the last two Exs. D-9 and D-11.

Thus it would appear that with the exception of two bales the subject-matter of Exs. D-9 and D-11 noted above, the plaintiffs in spite of various intimations and reminders sent to them by the defendants did not come forward with proper tender of money with a view to obtain delivery of the goods. On the contrary we find at least four letters which go to show that the plaintiffs were not "ready and willing" to perform their part of the contract by tendering the amount due by them under the contract to the defendants. I refer to Ex. P-9 dated the 30th June 1917, Ex. P. W. 13/2, dated the 12th July 1917, Ex. E-4 (a) dated the 18th July 1917, and Ex. P. W. 13/4 dated the 31st July 1917. Reading these letters the impression that is left upon one's mind is that they are highly disingenious and that the plaintiffs were simply creating evidence on their behalf in their own books, e. g., in Ex. P. W. 13/2 dated Delhi the 12th July 1917, they add by way of postcript to the letter:

> Yesterday you refused to accept payment we sent to you. Money is in deposit and you are responsible for interest on it.

Again in Ex. P-4 (a) dated the 18th July 1917, (Re. 7 bales of Mulls No. 25255 and one bale of Mulls No. 36556) the plaintiffs write:

> We sent money to you many a time but you did not receive it nor did you give delivery of the goods. Your money is lying in the trust with us. Please write to us where to deposit the money. Should we send it again to your shop. Otherwise we shall put the matter in the hands of a vakil.

Then there is a postcript:

> If you do not give delivery of the goods we shall claim from you profits at the rate of Re. 1-8-0 per piece.

Exhibit P. W. 13/4, dated the 31st July is as follows:

> Please receive payment for above and give delivery of the above seven bales within three days, failing yours the matter will be handed over to proceed against you legally.

Ishar Das a member of the defendant firm, was examined in the case on the 23rd October 1920, before the settlement of issues. He says:

> We gave arrival notice of seven bales. Plaintiffs paid for two bales only. Plaintiffs never brought money to us. * * * We did not inform the plaintiffs that goods purchased from certain persons were being sold to them. We afterwards told them in May, June and July 1917 that we have purchased these goods from Jai Narain Bij Raj and G. S. Bhargo. We expressly told them that these goods would be delivered to them.

Ishar Das was again examined as a witness on the 30th October 1922, and it is significant that the plaintiffs did not cross-examine him as regards contents of the letters Ex. P. W. 13/2, Ex. P-4 (a) and Ex. P. W. 13/4 in which the plaintiffs evidenced so much solicitude to pay the money to the defendants. The result is that the plaintiffs have completely failed to prove that they were " ready and willing " to pay the price of at least five bales of Mulls of which they had received arrival notices.

Now the question is whether the plaintiffs were " ready and willing " to perform their part of the contract under S. 51, Indian Contract Act, as regards all the 31 bales including the five bales already mentioned. The law on the subject is clearly laid down in S. 51, Indian Contract Act, which is as follows:

> When a contract consists of reciprocal promises to be simultaneously performed, no promisor need perform his promise unless the promisee is ready and willing to perform his reciprocal promise.

We have to see whether the plaintiffs were ready to perform their reciprocal promise. I have already referred to Ex. P-9 dated the 30th June 1917, Ex. P. W. 13/2 dated the 12th July 1917, Ex. P-4 (a) dated the 18th July 1917. and Ex. P. W. 13/4 dated the 31st July 1917. These letters are of a very suspicious character and as already observed it is a significant fact that the contents of these letters were not put to Ishar Das, a member of the defendant firm while he was in the witness box before the Court. The evidence of the plaintiff Ram Sarup does not seem to be a frank and a straigthtforward statement either. He says:

> I was ready and willing to take delivery of the goods. Defendants were to give me arrival notice and I was to pay for them on its receipt. I was given delivery of two bales alone on Katak Sudi 10-1974, of Mulls No. 35255 The delivery of the other bales was not made. Arrival notice of eight was given (1 of No. 36556 and seven of 35255). I sent money several times through my man and I myself went to their shop but they did not receive it.

The man who is supposed to have taken the money to the defendant has not been produced, and I do not believe that such a man ever existed. It would have been easier and perhaps more business like if the plaintiffs had deposited the money in some well-known Bank at Delhi and then asked the defendants to deliver the goods against payment by the Bank. They did nothing of the kind and instead of that wrote the four letters which have already been animadverted upon. It is true that he says that in " these days " the balances were not below Rs. 10,000 or so. But this is entirely vague, and we do not know what period was meant here. All that we know is that the plaintiffs paid the price of the two bales of Mulls No. 35255 only on the 24th November 1917, although they had received intimation in respect of the same on the 7th July 1917, followed by a peremptory reminder on the 17th September 1917. In this connexion it may be noted that the four letters covered a period beginning from the 30th June 1917 and ending on the 31st July 1917. Whether the defendants were in a position to supply the goods, having regard to the sinkages, is not material seeing that Ishar Das on solemn affirmation on the 23rd October 1920 stated:

> Plaintiffs never brought money to us, We sent intimation of loss of about 22 bales. We did not inform the plaintiffs that goods purchased from certain persons were being sold to them. We afterwards told them in May, June and July 1917 that we have purchased these goods from Jai Narain Bij Raj and G.S. Bhargo. We expressly told them that these goods would be delivered to them.

Ishar Das was cross-examined on the 30th October 1922 on this point, and he repeated and amplified the above statement.

Having regard to the evidence on the record and also to the fact that the plaintiffs did not even condescend to reply to the arrival notices of the five bales, it does not stand to reason that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to make the necessary payment against delivery. The phrase "ready and willing" has from time to time been construed by the Courts and its meaning and intendment are well understood.

In Shriram Rupram v. Madan Gopal Gowardhan (7) there was a suit for damages for breach of contract and non-delivery of goods on the part of the defendant-seller. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree under the "ready and willing" clause in S. 51, Indian Contract Act, even when no tender was actually made; but the plaintiff-purchaser, in view of the rising market, was ready and willing to carry out the bargain on his part and, further, proved that he had made preparations with the object of having the money ready in hand. In the present case we do not find that the plaintiffs made any preparations whatsoever with the object of having the money ready in hand for payment to the defendant. The case reported in G. K. Chengarasvelu v. A. Vankanna & Sons. (8) is also very instructive seeing that it was decided on the authority of the well-known case of Morton v. Lamb (9). This case lays down that when a contract relates to sale of goods, the plaintiff, if a buyer, must allege and prove that he was ready and willing to pay for the goods. In a suit for damages by the buyer for breach of contract, by non-delivery of goods, it was found that the plaintiff did not tender the price and that the defendant (sellers) was also not ready to deliver the goods. It was held that the suit must fail, as the plaintiff failed to prove that he had been ready and willing to pay for the goods.

In Lakshmikantham v. V. Narayanaswami Iyer (10) the plaintiff, buyer, sued the defendant-seller, for breach of contract and non-delivery of goods. The plaintiff did not show that the defendant was not in a position to deliver goods and that the plaintiff was ready and willing to pay the balance of the price. It was held that the plaintiff had to go to the defendant with the money and the defendant had to deliver the goods to him and the plaintiff cannot excuse himself by saying that the defendant did not possess the goods, for the defendant could have got the goods from elsewhere. Hence plaintiff would not be entitled to damages.

There is also a case of our own Court reported as Kanwar Bhan Sukha Nand v. Ganpat Rai Ram Jiwan (11). In that case the plaintiff, seller, sued the defendant, buyer for breach of contract and damages. The defence of the buyer was that the plaintiff was not ready with the goods. It was held that it was not necessary for the plaintiff, seller, to prove that on the due date he had the goods actually in his possession. It is sufficient if he is able to prove that he had control of the requisite goods or that he had the capacity to deliver them to the purchaser when called upon to do so, i.e, that he was in a position to fulfil his part of the contract on the due date on a demand being made by the purchaser.

The result of these authorities is that in a suit for damages for non-delivery of the goods it is the duty of the plaintiffs to satisfy the Court that they were ready and willing with the money, that they had capacity to pay, or, at any rate, they had made proper and reasonable preparations and arrangements for securing the purchase-money and that having thus complied with the requirements of law they demanded the goods on the due date from the defendants. In such a case the position of the plaintiffs would be secure and it would then be incumbent upon the defendants to deliver the goods to the plaintiffs. The defendant Ishar Das has stated on oath that, if the money had been forthcoming, they would have purchased similar goods in Delhi market for the plaintiffs. My finding, therefore, is that, having regard to the phrase "ready and willing", as it occurs in S. 51, Indian Contract Act, the plaintiffs' suit must fail.

It was also argued on behalf of the defendants-appellants that the plaintiffs ought to have applied for delivery under the provisions of S. 93, Indian Contract Act. To this the plaintiffs replied that, under the terms of the contract, it was not necessary for them to make a formal application, seeing that the contract provided that as soon as the railway receipts and the invoice of the goods reached Delhi the plaintiffs would receive the same on payment of the price. The appellants, however, urged that there is authority of an unreported case of this Court (First appeal No. 572 of 1923, decided on 28th October 1925) which lays down that even if the seller gives notice of arrival of goods, the buyer must apply for delivery. Now, when the market was stable the defendants gave arrival notices of eight bales to the plaintiffs in June 1917. But the market began to rise in July and the plaintiffs rely upon a somewhat suspicious letter of theirs (Ex. P. W. 13-4) as an application for delivery of the seven bales of which the defendants had already given arrival notices. It is moreover significant that the plaintiffs were able to take delivery of only two bales on payment on a date as late as the 21th November 1917, and that too long after the intimation and the reminder had been sent to them by the defendant. Therefore the plea of the appellants based on the provisions of S. 93, Indian Contract Act is good and must prevail.

Having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the evidence on the record I hold that the plaintiffs were neither "ready and willing" to perform their part of the contract as required by S. 51, Indian Contract Act ; nor did they make a proper application for the delivery of the goods in suit as contemplated by S. 93.

This being so, I allow the appeal and, setting aside the decree of the Court below, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

The cross objections filed on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents under O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C., were not pressed, and having regard to the order which I have made, it is not necessary to say anything about them except that they must fail.

Broadway, J.—I concur in accepting the appeal and dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout. The cross objections are also dismissed.

Punjab Municipal Act, S. 228—Authority.

A general authority can be given without naming each accused, 22 All. 123 Rel. on: A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 80, Overruled. [P 28, C 1]

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.
Gullu Ram—for Respondent.

Skemp J.—This is an appeal by the Crown against the order of a Magistrate acquitting the respondent of an offence under S. 78, Punjab Municipal Act. The Magistrate did not go into the merits, but followed Gulzar Jan v. Emperor (1) Wherein it is laid down that the authority to prosecute must contain the full particulars of the person to be prosecuted.

These particulars were not given in this case. It is contended on behalf of the Crown that they are not necessary.

Gulzar Jan v. Emperor (1) is a single Bench judgment decided, not after hearing arguments, but on revision in accordance with the recommendations of a District Magistrate which were accepted by the learned Judge without discussion. The District Magistrate had recommended that the conviction should be set aside on two grounds. It is the second of these which is attacked in this appeal. What the District Magistrate said in this connexion was as follows ;

In explanation under S. 228, Municipal Act, it is provided that the authority in all cases must be in writing. This written authority is explained at p. 230 of the Act, edited by Hari Chand, M. A. LL. B. in his first edition of 1913. According to this explanation complete and full particulars of the person to be prosecuted should be given with the authority so given to the prosecutor. As this procedure was not adopted in this case hence the prosecutor who appeared in Court was not properly and legally authorized to conduct this case. Under these circumstances there remains no doubt that the prosecution of the appellant was not legal and under the strict sense of law.

(1) A I. R. 1924 Lah. 80=4 Lah. 120.

The reference to page 230 of Lala Hari Chand's first edition of the Municipal Act is entirely erroneous ; there is no such statement in his book.

The explanation to S. 228 does not state that complete and full particulars of the person to be prosecuted should be given. It runs as follows :

The committee may authorize persons to make complaints or give information, without previous reference to the committee either generally in regard to all offences against this Act and the rules and bye-laws thereunder, or particularly in regard only to specified offences of a specified class. The person authorized may be authorized by office, if he is President, Vice President, Medical Officer of Health or Secretary of the Committee, or officer in charge of a police station, in other cases the authority must be personal. The authority must in all cases be in writing, and may at any time be cancelled by the committee.

It is clear from the words used that a general authority can be given without naming each accused. In Powell v. The Municipal Board of Mussoorie (2) the Allahabad High Court considered the effect of S. 69, North Western Provinces and Oudh Municipalities Act (15 of 1883) which is in the following terms:

A Court shall not take cognizance of an offence punishable under this Act, or the rules made under this Act, except on the complaint of the Municipal Board or of some person authorized by the Board in this behalf.

i. e. this, as far as the present purpose is concerned, substantially the same as S. 228, Punjab Municipal Act, but there is no explanation such as is quoted above. A Full Bench of six Judges unanimously held that this section conferred upon Municipal Board the power to delegate generally their authority to make complaints in respect of Municipal offences and the learned Chief Justice said at p. 129:

I can see no a priori improbability, no considerations of public policy which would make it unlikely that the legislature should entrust to a Municipal Board power to confer on other persons not only a specific authority to file a particular complaint, but a general authority to prosecute for Municipal offences, including authority to determine whether a prosecution is desirable. That the legislature itself regards such a power as one which may properly be given to a Municipal Board may be inferred from S. 186 Punjab Municipal Act, 1891, which is in terms practically indentical with S. 69, Act 15, 1883, but to which an explanation is appended providing that the committee may authorize persons to prosecute either generally in regard to all offences under this Act and the rules thereunder or particularly in regard only to specified offences or offences of a specified class.

The explanation to S. 186, Punjab Municipal Act 1891, has been amplified in the explanation to S. 228 of the present Punjab Municipal Act.

I would, therefore, hold that the reasoning in the second paragraph from Gulzar Jan's case (1) quoted above is erroneous and hence that the reason for acquittal given by the Magistrate is wrong. This point alone can be considered in the present appeal as no other was taken by the Magistrate. It is still open to the respondent to raise any other defence, technical or on the merits.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal, set aide the order of acquittal and direct the Magistrate to proceed with the trial in accordance with law.

Addison J.—I concur.

Referring order.—The plaintiff-petitioner on the 25th August 1925 instituted a suit against two defendants :

(1) Firm of Hira Nand Jiwan Ram and (2) Tassaduq Hussain for recovery of a certain sum of money due by defendant 1 to the plaintiff and defendant 2 jointly. Hira Nand proprietor of the Firm Hira Nand Jiwan Ram appeared and pleaded that the firm had been adjudicated insolvent as far back as 28th November 1922 and that the suit could not proceed without the permission of the insolvency Court. The defendant was directed to produce a copy of the order of Dera Ismail Khan Court adjudicating the defendant's firm insolvent and the plaintiff was also asked to make enquiry and if necessary obtain permission of the insolvency Court to continue the suit. At the next hearing, on the 1st May 1926 the copy of the order of the insolvency Court was not produced and the case was adjourned to the 19th June 1926. On that date again no copy of the order was produced as the record had been sent up from Dera Ismail Khan to the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Peshawar, but the statement of Hira Nand defendant, and of Kanhaya Lal pleader, who had been conducting cases on behalf of the receiver of the Firm Hira Nand Jiwan Ram was recorded and the Court held that the defendant firm had been adjudicated insolvent as alleged. On this finding the Court held that as under S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, a creditor whose debt is provable in insolvency cannot commence any suit or legal proceeding against the insolvent without permission of the insolvency Court and as the plaintiff had failed to obtain such permission the suit was dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff has preferred a petition for revision to this Court and on his behalf it has been contended that S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, has no applicability to a suit filed by a creditor, who has instituted a suit in ignorance of the adjudication order and consequently without obtaining the permission of the insolvency Court, even though the order of adjudication had been passed before the suit was instituted. In support of this contention the plaintiff's learned counsel has quoted a ruling of the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Nagpur reported in Haji Umar Sharif v. Jwala Prasad (1), which has been cited apparently without disapproval, by Rustomji, Gosh and other commentators on the Provincial Insolvency Act.

As at present advised I feel grave doubts as to the correctness of this ruling and am not prepared to follow it, but as the point involved is one of general importance and is likely to affect a large number of cases, I think it proper to refer the case to a Division Bench. The office is directed to fix this case for actual hearing at a very early date and to place it before a Division Bench of which I am a member. Counsel to be informed.

Fforde, J.—This is an application to revise an order of the Judge of the Small Cause Court at Amritsar dismissing the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the defendant had been adjudicated insolvent sometimes prior to the institution of the suit and leave had not been obtained, in accordance with S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, to commence the suit.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the order of reference and need not be repeated. The petitioner relies upon the case of a decision of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur, in which it was held that where a suit had been filed against an insolvent in the civil Court in ignorance of the fact of an adjudication order having been passed, and, consequently, without obtaining the permission of the insolvency Court, a civil Court can under S. 29 of the Act permit the suit to be continued on such terms as it might think fit if it appear that the suit was brought in ignorance of the order of adjudication. With this construction of the statute I find, myself, with all respect to the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, quite unable to agree. S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, which is in effect the same as S. 7, English Bankruptcy Act, 1914, expressly prohibits any suit or other legal proceedings being commenced except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose, that is to say, no suit may be brought after adjudication without first obtaining the permission of the Court to bring that suit. S. 29 deals with pending suits and provides that on proof of an adjudication order made against the debtor, the Court may stay or allow to continue a pending suit upon such terms as it may think fit to impose. The present suit was instituted some three years subsequent to the adjudication ordered. No leave of the Court had been obtained to bring these proceedings and consequently they are not maintainable.

In my opinion the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, is correct and this application in revision must, therefore, be rejected.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree. My opinion is given in the referring order, which should be read as a part of this judgment.

Rustomji for Chaman Lal—for Appellant.

Raj Krishna for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Skemp, J.—Wazir Chand has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi of murdering one Ramji Mal, and Deputy Ram of abetting the murder. Both have been sentenced to death. They have appealed ; Wazir Chand through Mr. Rustomji and Deputy Ram through Mr, B. R. Puri and the sentences are also before us for confirmation.

The theory of the prosecution is to be found in the statement of an approver named Ganda Mal and is as follows : Wazir Chand was working as the partner of Ramji Mal in a halwai's shop in Rawalpindi city. He had lost all he possessed in gambling and, therefore, conspired with Deputy Ram to murder Ramji Mal and take away all his property : he thought that detection would be rendered more difficult because Ramji Mal had no relations. Ganda Mal who belongs to the same village as Deputy Ram, was brought into the affair.

Wazir Chand went to Peshawar and bought poison there, returning on the morning of the 20th February 1926, and telling the other conspirators that he had bought arsenic. The following evening, i.e., 21st February, he put the arsenic in milk which Ramji Mal was in the habit of drinking every night. At 10 p. m. Ramji Mal started vomiting and complained of pain and the approver who was lying on the same charpoy went to fetch Wazir Chand. Ramji Mal died at midnight. After his death Wazir Chand with the help of the approver put his naked body in a box with some sheets of newspaper at the bottom and covered it with an old cloth. In the morning, i. e., on the 22nd February, they took the box to Rawalpindi railway station, got it placed in a train and left it there.

Wazir Chand intended to open a halwai's shop in Khour with the utensils and stock in trade of the murdered man ; and with this in view after they had been packed at the shop by all three conspirators Deputy Ram took the packages on a hand-cart to Rawalpindi railway station and booked them in the name of Wazir Chand to Fatehjang. Thence Wazir Chand conveyed them on tongas to Khour. However as Wazir Chand had not yet taken a shop he left the utensils with his uncle by marriage Ram Diyal in the neighbouring village of Hamadial or Amdal and took the other goods to his own village Varwal.

When No. 20 Down train from Rawalpindi arrived in Lahore at 7-15 p. m. on the 22nd February, a box was noticed on the upper berth of a third class compartment, and ultimately the Sub-Inspector of railway police, P. W. 2, had it removed. The lid of the box opened of itself and disclosed the body of an old man. The body was photographed and sent for post mortem examination which was carried out on the 23rd February ; the medical witness thought from the symptoms he observed that death was due to arsenical poisoning and sent portions of the internal organs for chemical analysis : arsenic was discovered in each of them.

Taking the head of the corpse and also photographs of the body the sub-inspector proceeded to Rawalpindi where they were identified to be those of Ramji Mal. It may be added that in the box were found sheets of a newspaper called the News of the World, and copies of the same paper were found in Ramji Mal's shop. In Ramji Mal's shop were also found a khaki warm coat, a towel, a cotton blanket and a piece of gunny bag, all soiled with vomit, a brick bearing marks of vomited matter and vomited matter mixed with earth. All these clothes and other substances were found to contain arsenic. Therefore, it is proved beyond doubt that the body discovered at Lahore was that of Ramji Mal and that he died from arsenical poisoning. (After dealing with evidence and holding that it was proved that Wazir Chand worked as Ramji Mal's partner : that he took a box, subsequently found to contain the body, to the Railway Station ; that he removed Ramji Mal's entire stock of trade and left it either in his own house or with his relatives His Lordship proceeded further. In my opinion this is ample to corroborate the evidence of the approver against him, and I would reject his appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

The next question is whether Deputy Ram's abetment is proved. The learned Sessions Judge wrote :

An approver's statement if believed, need not necessarily be corroborated though as a general rule corroboration is required. In the present case the approver's statement carries truth on the face of it, and is, I consider, to be believed in itself and is corroborated as against Wazir Chand in almost every particular by evidence which there is no reason to disbelieve. There is also, in my opinion, sufficient corroboration as against Deputy Ram also to show that, though he took no actual part in the murder itself, he is guilty of its abetment.

Now, there are no doubt cases in which it has been laid down that an approver's statement need not be corroborated. See for instance The Delhi Conspiracy case : [Balmokand v. Emperor (1)]; Barkat Ali v. Emperor (2); and Emperor v. Nilakanta (3) (the murder of Mr. Ashe, Collector of Tinnevelly). On the other hand, in the great majority of cases it has been held that an approver's evidence requires corroboration: see for instance the Nankana Sahib's case, Narain Das v. Emperor (4), where Mr. Justice Scott-Smith at p. 173, wrote :

We have given full effect to the maxim that the evidence of an accomplice must, as a rule, be considered untrustworthy unless it is corroborated in material particulars.

The law of India is the same in this respect as the law of England, and a recent authoritative pronouncement is found in R. v. Baskerville (5), in which Lord Reading, C. J., delivered a judgment on behalf of five Judges. He wrote (p. 665) :

We have come to the conclusion that the better opinion of the law upon this point is that stated in R. v. Francis Stubbs (6) by Parke, B., namely, that the evidence of an accomplice must be confirmed not only as to the circumstances of the crime, but also as to the identity of the prisoner. The learned Baron does not mean that there must be confirmation of all the circumstances of the crime ; as we have already stated that is unnecessary. It is sufficient if there is confirmation as to a material circumstance of the crime and of the identity of the accused in relation to the crime.

Again at p. 667:

We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it.

Now, the evidence against Deputy Ram is : (1). that he was found by the police on the 2nd March in company with Ganda Mal in the house of Deputy Ram's sister in Wazir Chand's village Varwal, (2) ; that he took part in the removal of Ramji Mal's goods. The witnesses are Karm Chand (P. W. 14) who states that on Tuesday, the 23rd February, Wazir Chand, accompanied by Deputy Ram and the approver, came and removed some bags of gur and other articles from Ramji Mal's shop ; and Punjab Singh, Fakir Ullah and Bal Mukand.

Criticizms must, however, be made as to the testimony of each witness. Karam Chand was not asked whether he knew Deputy Ram previously. Had this question been put, further questions would have arisen how did he know or how did he identify Deputy Ram. Bal Mukund stated that he did not know Deputy Ram before, but subsequently the police brought Deputy Ram whom Bal Mukand identified. It is contended that if a police officer simply put Deputy Ram before Bal Mukand and said " Is this the man, " Bal Mukand would naturally reply in the affirmative. On the other hand, no reason has been shown why Bal Mukand should swear falsely. But the evidence of this witness clearly has less weight than if he had picked out Deputy Ram from among a number of other persons, as Ganda Mal picked out the tonga-wala Fatta and the railway porter Ali Muhammad.

The other two witnesses Punjab Singh and Fakir Ullah do not establish any connexion between Deputy Ram and the crime. Punjab Singh simply proves that about the time in question Deputy Ram engaged his hand-cart from the Landa Bazar to the railway station; and Fakir Ullah, that Deputy Ram brought some goods from a shop in the Landa Bazar which he loaded in the hand-cart and took to the railway station. The date, the identity of the shop and the goods are all unproved.

In my opinion the abetment of Deputy Ram is not sufficiently proved by this corroborative evidence. Recognizing this Mr. Raj Krishna, who represented the Crown argued that in the nature of things there could be no evidence of conspiracy to kill Ramji Mal and urged that as the approver was only eighteen years of age and had previously a good character, a more lenient standard should be given to his evidence than to that of most approvers. It is, however, very difficult to vary the standard of proof required in the case of various approvers. In my opinion the guilt of Deputy Ram is not established beyond doubt, and I would accept his appeal and acquit him.

Faqir Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of appeals 191—198 of 1927 as they all arise out of the same judgment of the District Judge of Hoshiarpur.

The appellants instituted the suits out of which these appeals have arisen for possession by ejectment of the defendants, who, according to the allegations made in the plaint, had taken forcible possession of the lands two years before the institution of the suits. It was expressly stated in the plaint that the defendant had no right whatsoever to dispossess the plaintiffs. The District Judge has held that on the allegations made by the plaintiffs in the plaint the burden of proving possession by them within 12 years of the institution of the suit was on them and they had failed to discharge this burden.

It appears that in the revenue records relating to these lands it is recorded that the lands belong to the plaintiffs, but that they are in possession of the defendants at any rate since 1911-12. It also appears that with regard to certain plots the entries in the revenue records of 1907-08 show that the defendants were in possession of those particular plots as tenants of the plaintiffs. It does not appear from the judgment of the learned District Judge to which particular plots these last entries relate; but in my opinion it is unnecessary to ascertain this in view of the fact that I agree with the conclusions of the District Judge that the burden was on the plaintiffs to establish the cause of action that they set out in their plaint. An ingenious argument has been addressed to me by the learned counsel for the appellants that the allegations contained in the plaint as to the dispossession of the plaintiffs by the defendants, properly interpreted, mean that, though the defendants were originally in permissive possession of the lands, it was two years before the institution of the suit that they denied the plaintiff's title to the lands, and, therefore, their possession became adverse as against the plaintiffs. I am unable to read the plaint in that manner. It clearly asserts that for the first time the defendants took the lands in suit two years before the institution of the suits. It is admitted by the learned counsel for the appellants that on that interpretation of the plaint the burden would be on the plaintiffs to prove that they were in possession of the lands within 12 years of the suit.

Finally the learned counsel asked me to allow him to amend the plaint so as to plead that the defendants were in permissive possession of the plaintiffs two years before the suits. This prayer is made in order to divert the burden of proof on the defendants in view of the entries in the revenue records. I am unable to accede to this prayer at this stage, considering that it was not made before the District Judge and is not even made in the grounds of appeal to this Court. I may mention that the view that I have taken is supported by a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court which is reported as Mian Muhammad v. Sharaf Shah [L. P. A. No. 57 of 1924, decided on 17th February 1925] and on which the learned Judge below has relied in support of his conclusion.

One more point needs mention, and that is the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants, that according to the entries made in the revenue records from the year 1912 onwards, the defendants are entered as tenants of the plaintiffs. In resisting this contention the learned counsel ignores the remark made in the last column of the entries which is to the effect that the possession is either on the ground of assertion of title or on account of encroachment made by the defendants. Properly interpreted, these entries merely mean that the defendants are in cultivating possession of the lands, but they do not mean that they are the tenants of plaintiffs or that they admit the right of the plaintiffs as to the ownership of the lands. On the other hand, read as a whole, the entries clearly mean an assertion of adverse title.

The result is that on a correct interpretation of the pleadings of the parties I must hold that the learned District Judge has rightly arrived at the conclusion that the burden of proving their possession within 12 years of the institution of the suit lay on the plaintiffs, and that they have failed to discharge this burden. The consequence is that I dismiss these appeals with costs.

Arjan Das—for Petitioner.

Muhammad Din Jan—for Respondents

Judgment.—This suit was brought in the name of the Panchayat, Dharam Kot, which claimed the sum of Rs. 63 on a promissory note, dated the 25th May 1919, executed by the defendant. This panchayat is a self-constituted body without any legal powers and obviously it could not bring a suit: see p. 796, Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 8th Edn. After the period of limitation had expired, the Small Cause Court Judge allowed the suit to be amended by striking out the name of the plaintiff, that is, the Panchayat Dkarm Kot, and by substituting the names of six persons, who allowed themselves to be members of this self-constituted body.

The plaintiffs' case was that they sold by auction to defendant the sole right to sell vegetables in the village for the sum of Rs. 84, Rs. 21 of which were paid by him while he executed a promissory note for the balance of Rs. 63. The defendant pleaded that the panchayat had no power to sell such a license, that he had not executed the promissory note in favour of the plaintiffs or in favour of the panchayat, and that the suit was barred by limitation. The Small Cause Judge, however, decreed the suit with costs and against this decision this revision has been admitted.

It was first contended that the creation of a monopoly in favour of the defendant to sell vegetables in the village was opposed to public policy under S. 23, Indian Contract Act, and that the agreement being void, the plaintiffs had no right to sue for the amount of the promissory note. There is clear authority for this proposition in Somu Pillai v. Municipal Council, Mayavaram (1). It was held in that case that even a properly constituted District Municipality had no power to create a monopoly in favour of one person. It was further held that any amount collected under this void agreement must be refunded. It follows, therefore, that the present suit should have been dismissed on the principle that the grant of the monopoly to the defendant was against the provisions of S. 23, Indian Contract Act, being in restraint of trade.

It is further contended that the suit was barred by limitation as the plaintiffs' names were only substituted after the suit was barred by limitation. This is also correct. There was no plaintiff at all until the plaintiffs' names were substituted after limitation had expired. A suit can only be brought in the names of all the members of an unregistered or unincorporated society. If a necessary party is joined as plaintiff or defendant after time for the suit has run out, the entire suit must be dismissed: see Rustomji's Law of Limitation, 3rd Edn. p. 191. It may be the case that I would not interfere in revision me rely because I hold that the suit was barred by limitation, but in the present case, as I have already shown, other considerations also enter.

In the third place it was contended that the panchayat or the members of the panchayat could not sue on the promissory note in question, as it was in favour of the Sircar daulatmadar through, Jat Mal, a member of the panchayat and not in favour of the panchayat or of the members of the panchayat. There seems to me also to be considerable force in this. There is no doubt that some members of the panchayat did grant the monopoly, on condition of payment of a certain amount, to the defendant, but the promissory note they took was not in their favour, but in favour of Government through one of their members. In my opinion only Government could authorize a suit on such a promissory note.

For the reasons given I accept this revision and dismiss the suit, but leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Mohammad Khan—Accused — Appellant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Cr. A. No. 476 of 1927, Decided on 2nd July 1927, from the order of the Sub-Divl. Mag. Chakwal, D/- 17th March 1927.

Criminal trial—Placing on the record mere copies of the evidence of witnesses recorded during the course of a trial relating to another charge against the same accused make the whole trial illegal.

A person was charged with two offences namely, under S. 307, I. P. C., and under S. 20, Indian Arms Act. The witnesses in the two cases were more or less the same. The trying Magistrate recorded the evidence of the witnesses in the case under S. 307 and copies of the evidence of these witnesses were placed on the record of the case under S. 20, Arms Act, except the case of one witness who did not appear in the case under S. 307.

Held : that the procedure was illegal and the trial was vitiated. The general rule in the case of criminal trials is that there should be a separate trial with respect to each distinct offence. The object evidently is that the attention of the trial Court should be directed to the evidence relating to the charge under inquiry and irrelevant matter should be excluded. This object is not achieved but defeated by placing on the record mere copies of the statements of witnesses recorded during the course of a trial relating to another charge : *A. I. Nand Lal—for Appellant.

Edmunds—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Muhammad Khan has been convicted under S. 20, Indian Arms Act, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, including three months solitary confinement. Muhammad Khan was wanted by the police for two murders and was absconding since the year 1924. On the night of the 1st January 1927, information was received by the Sub-Inspector of Nila that Muhammad Khan was in his own house in the village Nila. The sub-inspector organized a raiding party and Muhammad Khan was arrested at his house. The house was then searched and a revolver and some cartridges were found concealed behind a gahi. On these facts Muhammad Khan was challaned under S. 20, Indian Arms Act.

A preliminary objection to the manner in which the trial was conducted in the lower Court was taken by Dr. Nand Lal who appeared on behalf of the appellant. Muhammad Khan was charged with two offences, namely, under S. 307, I. P. C. and under S. 20, Indian Arms Act. The witnesses in the two cases were more or less the same. The trying Magistrate recorded the evidence of the witnesses in the case under S. 307, I. P. C. and copies of the statements of these witnesses appear to have been placed on the record of the case under S. 20, Arms Act, except in the case of one witness, namely, Ibad Ali (P. W. 3) who did not appear in the 307, I. P. C., case.

It is contended by Dr. Nand Lal that this procedure was illegal and the trial is vitiated. The learned counsel for the Crown did not attempt to defend this procedure, but merely argued that the accused was not prejudiced thereby. It seems to me that the contention of Dr. Nand Lal is sound and the appeal must succeed.

It is not denied that the trials under S. 307, I. P. C. and under S. 20, Arms Act, ought to have been separate and this means that the evidence with respect to each charge should have been separately recorded. The general rule in the case of criminal trials is that there should be a separate trial with respect to each distinct offence, except in certain cases mentioned in Ss. 234, 235, 236 and 239, Criminal P. C., vide S. 233, Criminal P. C. The object evidently is that the attention of the trial Court should be directed to the evidence relating to the charge under enquiry and all irrelevant matter should be excluded. This object is not achieved but defeated by placing on the record mere copies of the statements of witnesses recorded during the course of a trial relating to another charge. In the present instance the statements of witnesses under S. 307, I. P. C., case include a good deal of matter which was really not relevant for the purposes of the charge under S. 20, Indian Arms Act. It has been laid down in Allu v. Crown (1) that

S. 537, Criminal P. C., only applies to errors, omissions or irregularites of a formal nature and does not cover a substantial departure from the mode of conducting criminal trials laid down by law.

In my opinion the present case comes under the latter category. I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the conviction, direct the re-trial of the appellant on a charge under S. 20, Indian Arms Act, in accordance with law. The appellant will be transferred to the judicial lock-up pending the result of the re-trial.

S. A. No. 2038 of 1923, Decided on 29th June 1927, from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, D/- 1st June 1923

(a) Punjab Custom (Power to contest) Act (2 of 1920), S. 6—Lineal male descendant of great-great-grand father of alienor only can contest an alienation.

The Act has the effect of limiting the right to contest an alienation of ancestral land only to those persons who are descended in the direct male line from the great-great-grandfather of the alienor. [P 38 C 2]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Statement of objects and reasons should not be looked to.

It is well settled that in construing an Act of the legislature where the words are absolutely clear and unambiguous it is not within the province of a Court to look to the statement of the objects and reasons or to the proceedings of the council with a view to discover whether the words used mean something above and beyond what they say: 22 Cal. 788 (*P. H. D. Bhalla—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath Bhandari—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, relates to land which originally belonged to one Mala Singh, who on the 6th April 1893, gifted it to his pichhlag son Hazara Singh, defendant 1. This gift was not challenged by the collaterals of Mala Singh, donor. On the 27th August 1920, by a registered sale-deed, the donee Hazara Singh sold the gifted land to Harnam Singh, Basant Singh and Chhajju, defendants 2 to 4. On the 29th July 1921, Raj Mal, who is a collateral of Mala Singh, donor, in the third degree, instituted the present suit, alleging that the land was ancestral of himself and Mala Singh, that on Hazara Singh donee's line becoming extinct it would revert to the plaintiff and that the alienation by Hazara Singh had been made without consideration and necessity. He accordingly prayed for (1) a declaration that the sale by Hazara Singh, donee, in favour of Harnam Singh and others shall not affect his reversionary rights after the death of Hazara Singh, or (2) in the alternative, a decree for possession by way of pre-emption.

The defendants inter alia pleaded that the plaintiff had no locus standi to maintain the suit for declaration and that the sale was for consideration and necessity.

The trial Court, finding the land to be ancestral of Raj Mal plaintiff and the donor Mala Singh, held that he was competent to contest the alienation by Hazara Singh donee and that the sale was without necessity. It accordingly decreed the claim for declaration, but gave no decision on the alternative claim for pre-emption. On appeal by the vendee, the learned District Judge held that the plaintiff had no locus standi to contest the sale under S. 6, Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act 2 of 1920, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's claim for declaration was not maintainable. He accordingly accepted the appeal and remanded the case to the trial Court for decision of the claim for pre-emption. Against this order of remand the plaintiff has preferred a miscellaneous appeal to this Court.

It will be seen from the statement of facts given above that the alienation in question was made by Hazara Singh donee to whom the plaintiff is not in any way directly related. The plaintiff is a collateral of Mala Singh donor and he claims to contest the alienation on the ground that under the customary rule of reversion he had a residuary right to succeed to the gifted property on the line of the donee becoming extinct. The defendants resist the claim on the ground that the right to contest alienations of immovable property is now by statute restricted only to the male lineal descendants of the great-great-grandfather of the alienor and even if it be assumed that the land is ancestral of the donor and the plaintiff and that the gifted land might, in certain eventualities, revert to the plaintiff, he has no right to contest the alienation. They contend that the power to control alienations which could formerly be exercised under the rules of Punjab Customary Law by persons having a residuary right to succeed to ancestral property, has been materially cut down by Act 2 of 1920, and as the plaintiff is not among the persons to whom alone the right to sue is reserved under S. 6, he has no right to question the alienation. The plaintiff rejoins, that the preamble of the Act indicates that it was intended only to restrict the power of descendants and collaterals of the alienor to contest his alienations and as the plaintiff is not a descendant or collateral of the alienor, therefore, the Act does not in terms apply to him, and that the power to control alienations by the person in possession, which the plaintiff had under the General Customary Law, has not in any way been affected by the Act and can still be exercised by him.

In order to appreciate the legal position properly it is necessary to examine carefully the wording of the preamble and the operative parts of the Act. The preamble runs as follows:

> Whereas it is expedient to enact certain restrictions on the power of descendants of collaterals to contest an alienation of immovable property or the appointment of an heir on the ground that such alienation or appointment is contrary to custom. And whereas the previous sanction of the Governor-General has been accorded under S. 79 (2), Government of India Act 1915, to the passing of this Act, it is hereby enacted as follows :

It is clear that the preamble describes the Act as laying down restrictions on the power of descendants and collaterals of the alienor only and not on that of the other reversionary heirs.

In the body of the Act itself S. 1 gives the short title of the Act as the Punjab Custom (Power to Contest) Act 1920, and states that it extends to the Punjab. S. 2 defines certain words, and Ss. 3, 4 and 5 contain provisions, which are not material for our present purposes. Then comes S. 6, which is worded as follows:

> Subject to the provisions contained in S. 4, and notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in S. 5, Punjab Laws Act, 1872, no person shall contest any alienation of ancestral immovable property or any appointment of an heir to such property on the ground that such alienation or appointment is contrary to custom, unless such person is descended in male lineal descent from the great-great-grandfather of the person making the alienation or appointment.

It will be noticed that this section distinctly lays down that notwithstanding any rule of custom, which the Courts were bound to give effect to under S. 5, Punjab Laws Act, no person is now entitled to contest an alienation of ancestral immovable property unless he is descended in the male line from the great-great-grandfather of the alienor. The words used in S. 6 are clear and explicit and there is no ambiguity about them. The legislature has used language the plain meaning and effect of which is to take away the right to contest alienations of ancestral property from all persons (whether agnatically related to the alienor or not) who had heretofore the right to contest alienations and to confine it only to the descendants of the great-great-grand father of the alienor.

There is thus an apparent conflict between the preamble of the Act and S. 6. The plaintiff in this case is, as already pointed out, a collateral of the original donor Mala Singh and not a descendant of the great-great-grandfather of the donee Hazara Singh, who is the person whose alienation is in dispute. If S. 6 is to be literally interpreted, the plaintiff has obviously no locus standi to sue. If, on the other hand, that section is controlled and qualified by the preamble, then the Act is inapplicable to the plaintiff and whatever rights he possessed under the Customary Law, they are still left intact. The question to be determined, therefore, is which of these two conflicting provisions is to prevail.

In order to decide this question it is necessary to ascertain the true place of the preamble in a statute. In England different opinions have been held at different times on the subject. There have been distinguished jurists who have maintained that the preamble is not an integral part of the Act, but that it is something outside it. No less an authority than Lord Holt is reported to have said that > a preamble of a statute is no part of it, bu contains generally the motives of inducemen thereof. Mills v. Wilkins (1).

On the other hand, equally eminent, lawyers have considered > the preamble as undoubtedly a part of the Act ; a key to open the meaning of the makers of the Act and the mischiefs it was intended to remedy. (Coke 4 Inst 330).

In modern times neither of these extreme views is accepted as correct in its entirety. The prevailing rule of construction which seeks to reconcile these conflicting dicta may be thus expressed: Where the enacting part is explicit and unambiguous, the preamble cannot be resorted to to control, qualify or restrict it ; but where the enacting part is ambiguous, the preamble can be referred to to explain and elucidate it. It was laid down by Lord Tenterdon in Doe v. Brandling (2) :

(1) [1701] 6 Mod. 62=87 E. R. 822.
(2) [1828] 7 B. & C. 643=6 L. J. K. B. (O.S.) 162=1 Man. & Ry. 600.

If on a review of the whole Act a wider intention than that expressed in the preamble appears to be the real one, effect is to be given to it notwithstanding the less extensive import of the preamble.

This position was further explained by Lord Denman in Fellowes v. Clay (3):

The preamble is often no more than a recital of the inconveniences, and does not exclude any others for which a remedy is given by the statute. The evil recited is but the motive for the legislation ; the remedy may both consistently and wisely be extended beyond the cure of that evil.

Similarly Tindal, C. J., observed in the well-known Sussex Peerage case (4) :

If the words of the statute are in themselves precise and unambiguous then no more can be necessary than to expound those words in their natural and ordinary sense. The words themselves alone do, in such case, best declare the intention of the lawgiver. But if any doubt arises from the terms employed by the legislature, it has always been held a safe means of collecting the intention, to call in aid the ground and cause of making the statute, and to have recourse to the preamble, which according to Chief Justice Dyer, is a key to open the minds of the makers of the Act, and the mischiefs which they intended to redress.

The latest authoritative pronouncement on the subject is that of Lord Halsbury, L. C., in Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. (5), where his Lordship expressed himself as follows :

Two propositions are quite clear: one that a preamble may afford useful light as to what a statute intends to reach; and another that if an enactment is itself clear and unambiguous, no preamble can qualify or cut down the enactment.

This rule has been applied in the interpretation of several Acts of the Indian and Provincial Legislatures. In the Secretary of State v. Maharaja of Bobbili (6) their Lordships interpreted the plain meaning of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act regardless of the restrictive provisions of the preamble thereof. Lord Shaw, in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, remarked that as the section of the Act made operative provisions in excess of the apparent ambit of the preamble, "It is the section that must govern" and not the preamble. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the well-known case of Manilall Singh v. Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta (7) followed the same rule and held that the preamble of the Calcutta Improvement Act did not restrict or control its enacting provisions.

It may, therefore, be taken as settled law that where (as in Act 2 of 1920) the enacting part of a statute is not exactly co-extensive with the preamble, the former, if expressed in clear and unequivocal terms, will override the latter, but if ambiguous or doubtful phraseology is used in the body of the Act, the preamble may be referred to to resolve the ambiguity.

Now the wording of S. 6 Punjab Act 2, 1920 is, to my mind, absolutely clear and unambiguous. I can find no doubt or ambiguity in it, and following the rule enunciated above, I feel bound to ignore the restrictive provisions of the preamble and to hold that the Act has the effect of limiting the right to contest an alienation of ancestral land only to those persons who are descended in the direct male line from the great-great-grandfather of the alienor. As the plaintiff does not fulfil this description, the learned District Judge came to a correct conclusion in deciding that he had no locus standi to sue.

I wish, however, to point out that the learned District Judge has, in construing the Act, fallen into an error in relying upon the statement of objects and reasons attached to the Bill, which ultimately passed into Act 2 of 1920, the report of the Select Committee and the controversy which raged befor the passing of the Act.

It is well settled that in construing an Act of the Legislature, where the words are absolutely clear and unambiguous, it is not within the province of a Court to look to the statement of the objects and reasons or to the proceedings of the council with a view to discover whether the words used mean something above and beyond what they say. The Administrator of Bengal v. Prem Lal Mullick (8), Krishna Ayyangar v. Nallaperumal Pillai (9), and Rup Kishore v. Govind Das (10). The appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

Badri Das—for Appellant.

Moti Sagar and Hem Raj—for Respondents.

Judgment.—A suit for partition of joint property, both moveable and immovable, was referred to arbitration by the parties. It appears that there was some settlement before the arbitrator, according to the plaintiff, regarding some of the property in dispute, and according to the defendant, about the whole of it. The arbitrator made his award on the 6th December. Objections were taken to the award by the plaintiff and were allowed on the 19th April 1926. The consequence was that the award was declared void and the reference to arbitration superseded by the Court. The case was fixed for the 8th and 9th June 1926, for the evidence of the plaintiff. On those two dates some evidence of the plaintiff was recorded and the case was adjourned to the 26th, 27th and 28th July, for the remaining evidence.

On the 26th July 1926, an application was presented by the defendant that the matters in dispute had been settled by the parties before the arbitrator and a prayer was made under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., that the compromise or adjustment be recorded and a decree be passed in accordance therewith. On the same day an application was made by the plaintiff alleging that the dispute relating to 13 items in suit had been settled between the parties and that the compromise so made be recorded and a decree passed accordingly and the suit proceeded with regard to the rest. The Court thereupon framed three issues :

(1) Whether there has been a compromise between the parties on all points of difference between them ?

(2) Cannot the plea of compromise be raised at this stage of the suit ?

(3) Is defendant debarred from raising this plea by his conduct ?

It may be mentioned that it is admitted before me that out of the 13 matters mentioned in the plaintiff's application of the 26th July 1926, some were settled before the arbitrator, though the case of the defendant is that all of them were settled before him. It thus appears that admittedly there was some compromise before the arbitrator and the parties are at issue only as to the extent of that compromise. The Senior Sub-Judge, in a judgment which is self contradictory, has held against the defendant on issues 2 and 3 mentioned above but has refrained from giving a finding on issue 1. In fact, he has taken no evidence thereon. At the same time, in his judgment he holds and, in my opinion, quite correctly :

But I find that the delay though not well explained, is not fatal and the plea of the defendant cannot be defeated by mere delay in putting it up. Nidhan v. Buta (1) and Peer Mahomed v. Mahomed Ibrahim (2), are authorities in support of this view which have been quoted on defendant's behalf, the gist of which is that mere delay does not create waiver and is not in itself sufficient to defeat the defendant's plea. But at the same time, I hold that the failure of the defendant to plead razinama just at the filing of the award or immediately afterwards is a serious matter affecting the two issues A-2 and A-3 and shows that no razinama was really made, for, had a razinama been made, no question of award would have arisen and no party would have been allowed even to file objections to the award .....

Further on the learned Judge again remarks that the matters discussed by him previously show that the plea of complete adjustment is not genuine, and this finding he has given without recording the evidence of the defendant. I need give no reasons for holding that the final conclusion of the learned Senior Sub-Judge is erroneous except those given by him in the extract that I have first given above.

A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Moti Sagar, who appeared for the respondents, that no appeal lies from the order complained against. In my opinion there is no force in this objection. O. 43, R. 1 (m) permits an appeal from order under R. 3, O. 23 recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction. Therefore, an order refusing to record a compromise or adjustment is appealable. The counsel urges that in this case there has been no adjudication by the Sub-Judge on the merits of the defendant's claim that there was an adjustment but that his application has been dismissed on the ground that it was belated. But the net result of the order of the Sub-Judge is, whatever may be the reason therefor, that he has declined to record the adjustment or compromise. I hold, therefore, that the order is appealable and that it cannot be sustained for the reasons already given.

(1) [1916] 107 P. R. 1916=36 I. C. 700.
(2) [1905] 29 Bom. 234=6 Bom. L. R. 1013.

I set aside the order of the Senior Sub-Judge and remand the case to him with direction to record the evidence of the parties and to give a finding whether or not the case was compromised or adjusted as alleged by the defendant and to proceed with the case in accordance with law. Costs will abide the result.

Niaz Muhammad and Muhammad Amin—for Appellant.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Respondents.

Zafar Ali, J.—The last male owner of the land in suit was Khuda Baksh, a Musalman Naru Rajput of village Harta in the Hoshiarpur District. On his death there was a contest as to succession between his daughter Mt. Mamon and his collaterals in the sixth degree; but the suit brought against her by the collaterals ended in dismissal. Mt. Mamon enjoyed possession of the estate all her life and died some four years before the present suit, leaving her surviving a daughter named Chiragh Bibi. On the death of Mt. Mamon the collaterals again laid claim to the estate of her father and took possession of it. But the revenue authorities sanctioned mutation in favour of Mt. Chiragh Bibi. The collaterals therefore sue for a declaration that by the customary law of inheritance the estate reverted to them on the death of Mt. Mamon and that they were entitled to oust Mt. Chiragh Bibi. The latter contested their claim and pleaded that the estate should descend to her. So the sole question on which the parties joined issue was whether, where the daughter of the last male owner had succeeded to his ancestral estate excluding his collaterals in the sixth degree, the latter were entitled to succeed on her death in the presence of her daughter. The suit was tried by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge of Hoshiarpur who granted the plaintiffs the declaration that they sought, holding that a daughter's daughter had no right to succeed. Mt. Chiragh Bibi appeals.

In arriving at the above finding the learned Judge of the Court below has given effect to the general rule of the customary law of the province that a daughter like any other female successor is a limited owner and that she inherits the estate of her father to transmit it eventually to his agnates or to her own sons but not to her daughter. He failed to realise that the real question for determination was one of a special custom which might obtain in a particular tribe in spite of the general custom being to the contrary. Almost every general rule has exceptions to it, and no person is precluded from establishing a special custom at variance with the general one

In the present case the appellant's claim was that she was by custom entitled to succeed to the exclusion of the distant collaterals of her maternal grandfather. One thing is quite clear, viz., that among Naru Muhammadan Rajputs of Hoshiarpur daughters are by custom entitled to succeed in presence of collaterals more remote than the descendants of the great grandfather of the deceased proprietor. This was ruled so far back as 1889, vide Ranjhi Khan v. Mt. Kaman (1). The appellant goes a step further and claims her right of succession by custom on the death of her mother. This claim should not have been thrown out merely because it was opposed to the general custom. The question is whether the special custom set up by the daughter was proved or not. For an answer to a question of this description one naturally looks first of all to the Riwaj-i-am of the District, but the Riwaj-i-am was unfortunately not consulted by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, presumably because his attention had not been drawn to it. But Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt. Budhi (2), was brought to his notice in which a division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court had held that:

among Muhammadan Rajputs of Hoshiarpur (an endogamous tribe) where daughters have succeeded to their father's land as heirs, excluding his collaterals, their daughters are entitled to succeed to their mother's estate in the absence of direct male heirs, ...

The Court below refused to follow the above ruling on the greund that " the weight of authority was against the defendant.

It may be observed here that the plaintiffs examined no less than ten witnesses but every one of them made a very brief statement each to the effect that among Muhammadan Naru Rajputs where a daughter succeeded to the ancestral estate of a sonless proprietor the collaterals of the latter, however remote, excluded from succession the daughter's daughter. None of them could, however, give even one instance of the exclusion of a daughter's daughter by the collaterals. The Riwaj-i.-am being however clearly against the plaintiffs on this point, the onus of establishing the alleged custom lay heavily upon them. The defendants produced only two witnesses who cited a judicial instance. This was no other than that of Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt. Budhi (2). We could not decide the case without taking into consideration the Riwaj-i-am and we, therefore, allowed the appellant's counsel to refer to it. We did not consider it necessary to remand the case because the plaintiffs were not in a position to supplement their evidence in order to rebut the Riwaj-i-am when confronted with it.

The question and answers of the Riwaj-i-am that are in point are Nos. 45 and 47. To question 45:

Under what circumstances can daughters inherit?

the answer of Rajputs and several other tribes was that daughters can succeed in the absence of descendant of a great-grandfather.

To the further question No. 47:

What is the nature of the daughter's interest in property that she inherits ?

the answer was:

Where a daughter succeeds by inheritance as is related in answer to question 45, if she has children she succeeds as full owner, if she is childless she succeeds to a limited life estate the same as that of a widow " without rights of alienation."

The word " children " (aulad) applies to sons as well as daughters, and it was held in Chiragh Bibi v. Hassan (3), that in places where the right of females to succeed is widely recognized the word "aulad" should be construed as including both male and female issue.

The answer to question 47, therefore, is to the effect that a daughter becomes full owner if she has sons or daughter.

In Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt. Budhi (2), counsel for the plaintiff's collaterals contended that as the daughter left only daughters and no sons, the daughter's daughter could not succeed in the presence of collaterals. In respect to this contention the learned Judges observed as below :

Now this is a proposition (i. e. a daughter's daughter cannot succeed and the collaterals are entitled to come in) which we are unable to accept. We have considered the ruling quoted to us for the appellant, Lehna v. Mt. Thakri (4), inter alia, Roe's Tribal Law, p. 61, S. 13, etc. We do not think that there is sufficient authority for saying that when a daughter has been allowed to succeed as heir to her father's estate her daughter again cannot succeed to her. We admit that in dealing with customary law, logic is often apt to lead us astray, but we can see no logic in the proposition: why is the succession to be limited to one female step ?

(4) [1895] 32 P. R. 1895 (F. B.)

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge chose for his guidance Lehna v. Mt. Thakri (4), and certain other rulings to the same effect based generally on the principles laid down in Roe and Rattigan's Tribal Law at p. 61, S. 13. Now all that was decided in Lehna v. Mt. Thakri (4) was that the ancestral estate of a sonless proprietor does not cease to be ancestral when it devolves upon his daughter or descends from her to her sons etc. There can be no quarrel with this proposition in the present case. In Roe and Rattigan's Tribal Law, S. 13, general principles are stated relating to the rights of female successors but exceptions to the general custom are also noted and it is mentioned that in Multan and Dera Ismail Khan where a daughter succeeds at all she succeeds absolutely with a full power of disposing, as she pleases, of the property. Thus the right to succeed as full owner is given to daughters by some tribes and there can be no wonder if Naru Rajputs did the same. In Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt. Budhi (2) Roe and Rattigan's Tribal Law, S. 13, and Lehna v. Mt. Thakri (4), were taken into consideration and these authorities do not in any way militate against the finding arrived at in Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt Budhi (2).

Another case relied upon by the Court below was Sharfo v. Ramzan (5). The parties to that case were Gujars of the Gujrat District and it was found that among Gujars of that District a daughter's daughter had by custom no right to succeed. Obviously it does not follow that Naru Rajputs of Hoshiarpur follow the same custom.

The Riwaj-i-am being in favour of the daughter's daughter and Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt. Budhi (2) being in accordance with the Riwaj-i-am, the plaintiff's claim to the contrary must fail. This appeal is accordingly accepted and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Judgment. — The petitioner Atma Singh was sent up for trial under S. 379 I. P. C., before the Magistrate, First Class, Kasur, for having picked the pocket of a passenger at the Patti Railway Station and taken Rs. 5 in cash and a few cardamom seeds. Seven witnesses for the prosecution were produced but the Magistrate in a well-considered judgment discharged the petitioner on the 11th September 1926.

On revision at the instance of the Assistant Inspector General of the Railway Police, the District Magistrate of Lahore has set aside the order of discharge and sent back the case for further enquiry by another Magistrate. Against this order the petitioner has filed a petition for revision in this Court and after hearing Mr. Brij Lal for the petitioner and Mr. Mathur for the Crown, I am of opinion that this petition must succeed.

The learned District Magistrate in his order cancelling the order of discharge gives no reason whatsoever for his decision. The rule of law is firmly established that, generally speaking, further enquiry after discharge is improper, unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or foolish or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete : Emperor v. Kiru (1). It cannot be said that the order of the Magistrate in this case was manifestly perverse or foolish. The prosecution produced seven witnesses and closed their case. The Magistrate considered this evidence and discharged the accused. The mere fact that the prosecution did not choose to produce evidence as to identification of thumb-marks is in itself no ground for ordering further enquiry. As already pointed out the District Magistrate has given no reason in support of his order and Mr. Mathur for the Crown has very properly and frankly admitted that he is unable to support it.

I, therefore, accept the petition for revision and set aside the order of the District Magistrate and cancel the order of discharge.

Order

Tek Chand, J.—Three persons Saru Khan, Piru Khan and Amir, descendants of one Hakim, instituted the suit out of which this second appeal arises for possession of land, alleging that the occupancy rights in the land were acquired by their ancestor Hakim and that they were entitled to hold the tenancy, and that the defendants who are the descendants of Nawab, brother of Hakim, had no right to be in possession of these rights. The suit was decreed in favour of all the three plaintiffs by the trial Court. On appeal by the defendants, the learned District Judge dismissed the suit with costs in both Courts.

Against the appellate decree of the District Judge a second appeal has been preferred to this Court and in the memorandum of appeal Saru Khan, plaintiff 1, alone has been shown as the appellant. The contesting defendants Jan Muhammad and Sheru and Kartar Singh and Sher Singh, who were pro forma defendants, were made respondents. The other two co-plaintiffs, namely, Piru and Amir, were not impleaded as parties to the second appeal. To the memorandum of appeal, however, was added a foot-note by Mr. Amar Nath Chopra, the learned advocate, who had preferred the appeal on behalf of Saru Khan, that the appeal was for the benefit of all the plaintiffs.

On the case coming up for hearing before us to-day Mr. Kishan Dayal for the respondents raised a preliminary objection that it was not competent to Saru Khan to appeal on behalf of all the other co-plaintiffs without making those co-plaintiffs parties to the second appeal as respondents. In reply reliance is placed on O. 41, R. 4, and it is argued that Saru Khan could appeal on behalf of the other co-plaintiffs, without joining them as parties to the appeal. That Rule, however, authorizes one of the plaintiffs to an action, in which other co-plaintiffs, are also interested, to appeal for the benefit of the latter, only if they are made parties to the appeal. The proposition is too obvious to require discussion. Authority for it will be found in Ambika Prasad v. Jhimull Singh (1), Balkaran Lal v. Malik Nandar (2), Jitendra Nath v. Juku Mandar (3) and Haji Begum v. Shankar Rao (4). We, therefore, hold that Saru Khan was not entitled to appeal on behalf of Piru and Amir, plaintiffs.

Mr. Amar Nath Chopra, however, states that he omitted to implead these two persons as parties under the erroneous belief that under O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C., it was not necessary for him to implead them as parties. He has now frankly admitted his mistake and asks us that we should exercise our powers under O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C., and implead Piru and Amir, plaintiffs, as respondents to the appeal. After hearing Mr. Kishan Dayal for the respondents we are of opinion that it is not desirable to decide the case in the absence of the other plaintiffs and we think this to be a fit case in which we should exercise our powers under O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C. We, therefore, direct that Piru and Amir be made respondents to the appeal. Mr. Amar Nath Chopra undertakes to communicate with these two persons so that they may be present or be represented before us at the next hearing.

As the case is a very old one, we are not inclined to adjourn the case for a long time. We accordingly direct that it be placed before us as No. 1 on the list on Monday, 20th June 1927. As the adjournment is caused by an omission on the part of the appellant to implead these two persons as parties, we allow Mr. Kishan Dayal Rs. 32 as costs of the adjournment, which must be paid by the appellant on or before the next date of hearing.

Judgment.—The main facts of the case are given in our order of 15th June 1927 which should be read as a part of this judgment. By that order we decided to implead Piru and Amir, plaintiffs, as respondents to the appeal under O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C., and Mr. Amar Nath Chopra for Saru Khan, appellant, undertook to communicate with these two persons and to produce them to-day. Amir has appeared to-day and is present in Court. He states that Piru died sonless more than two years ago. This fact is admitted by Mr. Amar Nath Chopra for the appellant and by Jan Muhammad, the contesting respondent, who is also present in person. As Piru deceased claimed to be a joint occupancy tenant of a common holding, and as he has died sonless, his rights in the tenancy lapse to his co-tenants, namely, Saru Khan appellant, and Amir, respondent, both of whom are already on the record. It is, therefore, not necessary to adjourn the hearing of the case to implead the heirs, (if any), of Piru, deceased, as respondents. Piru's name will be struck off the record.

On the merits the second appeal can be disposed of very briefly. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging that their ancestor Hakim had acquired the occupancy tenancy in question, that they were in possession of these occupancy rights but that on a notice issued by the defendants they had been wrongly ejected by order of the revenue authorities. They, therefore, sued to recover back possession of the land comprised in the occupancy tenure. The defendants resisted the suit on the plea that the occupancy tenancy in question was not acquired by Hakim, but that it was acquired by Sher Khan who was the father of Hakim and of Nawab Khan, the grandfather of the contesting defendants. The plaintiffs in their replication denied that the occupancy rights were acquired or that the land was ever occupied by Sher Khan. The Subordinate Judge found against the defendants' contention and held that on the materials on the record it could not be held that the land was occupied by Sher Khan.

In their grounds of appeal before the learned District Judge the defendants reiterated their contention that Sher Khan, the common ancestor of the parties, had held possession of the land. The learned District Judge, however, gave no finding on this point. On the other hand he held that though the occupancy rights were held by Hakim alone in the settlements of 1852 and 1865, after the death of Hakim for some reason or other the plaintiff's line decided "to pool the occupancy land of the family" and that it was in pursuance of some arrangement that the occupancy rights were transferred by the plaintiff's branch of the family to the defendants. This, however, is an entirely new case which the learned District Judge has set up in appeal for the defendants, but which he was not entitled to do. No such arrangement was put forward in the written statement, nor was any issue framed on it. As pointed out already the defendants' main plea was that the occupancy rights had been acquired by Sher Khan. The learned District Judge does not discuss the point at all. His judgment in so far as it proceeds on grounds not put forward in the pleas, cannot be supported.

The learned District Judge further bases his judgment on the decision of the Revenue Assistant dated 17th June 1920, in a suit brought by Amir plaintiff to challenge a notice of ejectment issued by the defendants in regard to the land in suit. He also relies upon the evidence that was led before the revenue authorities in that litigation and also in certain previous litigation. Now, there can be no doubt whatever, that neither the findings in the ejectment proceedings before the revenue authorities nor the evidence led in these proceedings could be legally relied upon in this case. Mr. Kishan Dial for the respondent has very properly conceded that he is unable to contend that this evidence was legal evidence in the case. The learned District Judge also relies on a certain lease, alleged to have been executed by Amir plaintiff in favour of the defendant. But his discussion of this matter is very confused. For the foregoing reasons the judgment of the learned District Judge cannot be called a proper judgment and we are constrained to set it aside. The case will have to be sent back to the lower Court for re-decision in accordance with law. The Court must examine afresh such of the evidence as is on the record and come to a definite finding on the issues that arose in the case. The appeal is accepted and the case remanded to the District Judge for decision in accordance with law. Court-fee on appeal will be refunded. Costs will be costs in the case.

Second Appeal No. 2450 of 1922, Decided on 18th June 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 1—Decision on preliminary points.

Some preliminary issues were decided on a previous date and the suit was decided later. The memorandum of appeal was presented with the final judgment but without the order which was passed deciding preliminary issue. This decision was objected to in the grounds of appeal.

Held : that there was no proper presentation of the appeal. [P 46 C 1]

Shamair Chand—for Appellants.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal — for Respondents.

Campbell, J.—In the suit out of which this second appeal arises three preliminary issues were framed as follows :

(1) Was the order of the District Judge without jurisdiction ?

(2) Does S. 11 bar the suit ?

(3) Does O. 2, R. 2 bar the suit ?

These issues were decided against the defendants by the Subordinate Judge on the 12th November 1919, in an order of that date. Further issues were then framed on the remaining points arising in the suit and were decided by order of the Sub-Judge dated the 12th August 1921. An appeal to the District Judge failed and the defendants have come to this Court on second appeal.

A preliminary objection has been taken that there is no proper presentation of the second appeal because although a copy of the order of the 12th August 1921, has been filed with it, no copy has been filed of the order of 12th November 1919, and the requirements of O. 42, R. 2, Civil P. C., have not been complied with.

According to O. 42, R. 1, the rules of O. 41, apply, so far as may be, to appeals from appellate decrees, and by O. 42, R. 2, in addition to the copies specified in O. 41, R. 1, a memorandum of second appeal must be accompanied by a copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance. "Judgment" is defined in S. 2, sub-S. (9), of the Code as the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order Under O. 41, R. (2), which read with O. 42, R. 1, applies to appeals against appellate decrees, the memorandum of appeal must set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed from.

The first two grounds of objection set forth in the memorandum of appeal before us are : (1) that the suit was barred by S. 11, Civil P. C., and (2) that the suit was also barred by O. 2, R. 2 of the Code.

The judgment of the trial Court on these two points was recorded and delivered on 12th November 1919, and was manifestly a part of the judgment on which the decree is based. The situation is that a copy of the judgment of the Court of first instance has not been filed with the memorandum of appeal, but only a portion of that judgment.

In these circumstances there was no proper presentation of the appeal within time, and we see no reason for granting further time for the deficiency to be made good. We must accordingly, dismiss the appeal, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

F. A. No. 1578 of 1922, Decided on 24th September 1927, from the decree of the Sr. Sub-Judge, Gurgaon, D/- 31st March 1922.

 Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 1—Judgment on preliminary issue referred or not referred in final judgment copies of both must be filed with memo.—Preliminary judgment incorporated in final—Copy of preliminary judgment need not be filed—Absence or presence in memo. of appeal of grounds attacking preliminary judgment may be considered for dispensing with the preliminary judgment or extending time for its filing.

Where the judgment on the preliminary issue is not referred to at all in the final judgment, the latter cannot be held to be the complete judgment in the case, and, therefore, copies of both are necessary: [A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 451, Ref.] In such a case the judgment is really embodied in two documents. So also where there is a reference in the final judgment to the judgment on the preliminary issues, so that the intention of the Court may be by that reference to make the previous judgment a part of the final judgment, the judgment is embodied in two separate documents and the appeal is not properly presented unless both the documents are filed along with the copy of the decree. [P 47, C 1, 2]

Where, however, the Court incorporates the judgment on the preliminary issues in the judgment finally delivered, the judgment finally delivered is the whole judgment in the case and the appeal will be properly presented even though the first judgment is not filed with it. [P 47, C 2]

The question whether the grounds of appeal did or did not attack the preliminary judgment, would be a good ground for dispensing with the preliminary judgment, or for extending time for the filing of that judgment or the contrary, but it has nothing to do with the question whether the appeal when filed was properly presented or not: (Case-law discussed.) [P 47, C 2, P 48, C 1]

Kishan Dyal and Bishan Narain—for Appellants.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Lal Chand—for Respondents

Dalip Singh, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that the provisions of O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., have not been complied with and that, therefore, there was no proper presentation of the appeal.

The facts are that a preliminary issue as to jurisdiction was decided by the Court in favour of the plaintiff on the 25th February 1921. The Court then proceeded to try the other issues and finally on the 31st March 1922, gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed and put in a copy of the judgment dealing with the issues other than the issue of jurisdiction. So far as the judgment on the question of jurisdiction is concerned at the time of the presentation of the appeal the counsel made a note that this judgment would be supplied before the preliminary hearing. When the appeal was filed the office again reminded the counsel of the absence of the judgment and the counsel again undertook to supply the missing portion of the judgment before the date of the hearing. The copy, however, was never supplied and was, therefore, never included in the appeal as presented.

The case was admitted to a Division Bench by a Single Bench of this Court and the usual order for printing the record was passed. The objection taken is that as O. 41, R. 1 requires that a copy of the decree appealed from and of the judgment on which it is founded should be filed with the appeal, the appeal in this case has not been properly presented because only a portion of the judgment so required has been filed with the appeal.

Counsel for the respondents has cited a number of rulings which support his contention. In Bhiwani Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mill Co Ltd. v. Firm Bishen Sahai Bhagwan Dass (1) in a similar case this Court held that the appeal was not properly presented and that, therefore, the appeal failed. This case was followed in another Division Bench ruling reported in All India Reporter 1926 Lahore 638. In A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 449 another Division Bench similarly held that there was no proper presentation of the appeal though they extended the time for filing the missing judgment in the circumstances of that particular case. In A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 451, another Division Bench ruling, the appeal was dismissed and the preliminary objection was sustained. So also in civil appeal No. 2055 of 1923, a Division Bench ruling, the preliminary objection was sustained and the appeal failed, as also in a Single Bench judgment civil appeal No. 876 of 1927 which is the latest ruling on the point. On the other hand in H. B. Morton v. E. Woodfall (2) a Division Bench of this Court held that the judgment in that particular case was a self-contained judgment and that, therefore, the preliminary objection failed, and in Dhani Ram v. Mt. Goman (3) another Division Bench held that as no grounds of appeal were taken against the judgment on the preliminary issue it was unnecessary to file a copy of the judgment and the preliminary objection was rejected. In H. B. Morton v. E. Woodfall (2) the final judgment referred to the decision on the preliminary issues and gave a succinct account of that preliminary issue and the result of the decision and stated that certain evidence had been held to be inadmissible in the case by reason of the provisions of S. 92, Indian Evidence Act. This case, in my opinion, is clearly distinguishable. The essence of the judgment is that the final judgment is a self-contained document which by the terms of its reference to the previous order incorporated and embodied the decision given on the preliminary issues in the final judgment and, therefore, the final judgment did contain a decision of all the issues.

In cases of this nature various classes of cases can arise. There may be a case in which the judgment on the preliminary issue is not referred to at all in the final. Such a case occurred in the ruling reported as A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 451. It is difficult to see how in any circumstances the final judgment in such a case can be held to be the complete judgment in the case. It seems to me that in such a case the judgment is really embodied in two documents and the decree is founded on the judgment contained in these two documents and not on the judgment which disposes of the remaining issues in the case.

In another class of cases there may be a reference in the final judgment to the judgment on the preliminary issues and the intention of the Court may be by that reference to make the previous judgment a part of the final judgment. In other words the Court either expressly or impliedly states that the judgment on the preliminary issues should be read and considered as a part of the judgment delivered at the end of the case. In such a case again it seems clear to me that the judgment is embodied in two separate documents and the appeal is not properly presented unless both the documents are filed along with tha copy of the decree.

In a third class of cases the Court may intend to incorporate the judgment on the preliminary issues in the judgment finally delivered and, however succinctly, embody the preliminary judgment in the final judgment, and in a such a case the judgment finally delivered, is the whole judgment in the case and the appeal will be properly presented even though the first judgment is not filed with it.

H. B. Morton v. E. Woodfall (2) seems to me to fall into this last category of cases If, however, it be held that it falls really in the first or second of these classes then with the greatest respect to the learned Judges who decided that case, I must differ from it and it seems to me that the whole trend of the authorities of this Court is against that particular judgment.

In some judgments it seems to have been successfully contended that the question whether the grounds of appeal did or did not attack the preliminary judgment would make some difference in the case. But it seems to me that the presence or absence of grounds of appeal attacking the preliminary judgment, while it may very well be a good ground for dispensing with the preliminary judgment, or for extending time for the filing of that judgment, or the contrary, has nothing to do with the question whether the appeal when filed was properly presented or not. In order to determine this question what we have to look at is only to see whether the provisions of O. 41, R. 1, have been complied with or not and the presence or absence of grounds of appeal against the preliminary judgment has nothing to do with the question at all.

(2) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 103=8 Lah. 257.
(3) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 610.

Mr. Kishan Dyal for the appellant has contended that in all these classes of cases the judgment finally delivered is the whole judgment in the case. The decisions of the previous issues according to him are orders and the reasons given for those orders are judgments on which the order is based. The final judgment according to his contention rests on the orders so passed and the reasons for those orders are wholly unnecessary to the final judgment. This argument would imply that the provisions of O. 20, R. 5 do not apply to a case in which certain issues of law or fact are separately dealt with under the provisions of O. 14, R. 2, but O. 20, R. 5 does not make any such distinction and it seems to me that to hold what counsel wishes us to do might involve this Court in great absurdities. For instance it would logically follow from the arguments of the counsel that a judgment which contained nothing except a reference to decisions of all the issues, would be a complete and good judgment in the case. This seems to me to be wholly unreasonable and it is the more logical way of looking at the matter to take the view that the provisions of O. 20, R. 1 have not been complied with by the Court in that the judgment has not been delivered finally in the case, but has been delivered piecemeal, a proceeding which is not really contemplated by the terms of the Code of Civil Procedure and which is an irregularity, though, of course, it does not really affect the merits of the case in any way. From this point of view the decision in Dhani Ram v. Mt. Goman (3), may be upheld on the ground that what the Court really did, was to dispense with the necessity of putting in a portion of the judgment which was contained in a separate document and which was not attacked in the ground of appeal in any way. In the present case the very first ground of appeal does attack the decision of the preliminary issue and, therefore, the case is not on all fours with Dhani Ram v. Mt. Goman (3). Further, it is clear that the counsel in the case thought that it was necessary to file the judgment and it was merely carelessness, either on his part or on the client's part, that the judgment was not so filed. There is, therefore, no occasion for this Court to exercise any dispensing power in favour of the appellant.

It has been contended that as the case was admitted by a Single Bench as a first appeal and a note existed that a copy of the judgment would be supplied later and had not been so supplied it should be presumed that the learned Judge who admitted the case dispensed with a copy of this judgment. It seems to me far more probable that the point was not brought to the notice of the learned Judge at all, and G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. Radha Kishan Jai Kisan (4), is a ruling which is distinguishable even if that ruling lays down correct law. It was further contended that the preliminary issue decided, being only one of jurisdiction, the decree was not founded on that portion of the judgment in any way, and that, therefore, it was not necessary to file that portion of the judgment. There might be much to say for this line of argument if the matter were res integra, but I do not see that the matter is open so far as this Court is concerned in view of the decision of the Full Bench reported in Lal Chand Mangal Sen v. Behari Lal Meharchand (5). There may possibly be cases where the decree may not be founded on the judgment on the preliminary issue, but I must not be taken to express any opinion on this point.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the preliminary objection must prevail and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been ordered by a Magistrate of the First Class to execute a bond with one surety in the sum of Rs. 1,000 under S. 110, Criminal P. C., to be of good behaviour for three years on the finding that he is a habitual thief or receiver of stolen property. His appeal has been dismissed by the learned District Magistrate.

Twelve prosecution witnesses were examined. A Sub-Inspector of Police, a Sufed posh of Khithal, and a Zaildar of another circle gave evidence of his general repute. Three persons stated that their stolen cattle were restored through the petitioner's influence on payment of various sums of money or otherwise. Their evidence standing alone is of little value. Four persons said that their stolen cattle were traced to the petitioner, though not recovered. This evidence does not amount to more than that the petitioner was suspected by these witnesses of being concerned in thefts of their cattle.

The Zaildar of petitioner's own circle deposed that. though he used to hear complaints against him, he had not done so for seven or eight months.

Mere suspicion of complicity in this or that isolated offence is not evidence of general reputation. The petitioner was challaned twice by the police, but this was very many years ago, and of late years no complaint has been made against him of being concerned in any crime. He has never been convicted of offence and he has from time to time been helping the police in various investigations. The principal evidence against the petitioner is, therefore, that of three witnesses first mentioned above. None of them belongs to his own village, but the Sub-Inspector of Police and Sufed posh would have better means of knowing his reputation, as the petitioner lives within their circle, than the Zaildar who belongs to a different circle.

On the other hand the petitioner has produced 46 respectable witnesses. Ten of these are lambardars of neighouring villages and nine are residents of his own village. Numerous mahajans, who pay income-tax, belonging to the neighbouring town of Kaithal, have also given evidence in his favour, while Jats of neighbouring village have done the same. All have deposed that his character is reputed to be good. The trial Magistrate was unable to say that the defence witnesses were not respectable, but he rejected their evidence on the ground that, as the petitioner was so influential as to be able to produce so many witnesses, the few who gave evidence against him must be speaking the truth. I am unable to understand this point of view. The learned District Magistrate thought that the defence witnessses gave evidence either because they had dealings with the petitioner or were respectable but timid people who were afraid to refuse to help him. This is going beyond the record. The mahajans of Kaithal are in a secure position as they do not live in villages. The lambardars and other Jats cannot be said to be timid and have not been proved to have dealings with the petitioner.

A man's general reputation is that which he bears amongst the fellow townsmen or in the neighbourhood in which he lives. It was held in Soman v. Emperor (1), that where a large body of apparently respectable witnesses of the neighourhood testify to the good character of the accused as against the evidence of police officers, an order demanding security is not justifiable. The zaildar and Sufed posh are not police officers, but it is to their interest to give evidence on the police side. There should be no doubt what a man's general reputation is : [Wasir Bukhsh v. Empress of India (2).] Can it be said that there is no doubt in this case, when the defence is considered ? When as good witnesses come forward to state that a man's reputation is good as those who state the contrary, it cannot be said that his reputation is bad, unless there is something to corroborate the witnesses against him : [Ajmal Shah v. Empress (3).] In the present case there is nothing to corroborate the witnesses against the petitioner as suspicion is of little or no avail, and the three witnesses who state that they recovered their cattle through him are not corroborated and their evidence is also of little value.

In my opinion the evidence of the respectable witnesses for the defence establishes beyond any doubt that the general reputation of the petitioner is good. Such a large volume of evidence cannot be rejected with safety, especially in view of the meagre prosecution evidence. I accept the petition and discharge the petitioner from his security.

Cr. Revn. Petn. No. 166 of 1927, Decided on 14th October 1927, for quashing the connected proceedings in the Criminal Court.

* Divorce Act, S. 61—The section does not forbid the Crown to prosecute and punish an alleged adulterer under S. 497, I. P. C., when moved to do so by an injured husband—Penal Code, S. 497.

Section 61, Divorce Act, is not intended to be anything more and does nothing more than preclude a civil suit for damages of the nature of the English common law action, for criminal conversation which lay at the suit of a husband to recover damages against an adulterer. There is no authority statutory or otherwise, warranting the view that S. 61 forbids the Crown to prosecute and punish an alleged adulterer under S. 497, I. P. C., when moved to do so by an injured husband. [P 50 C 2]

Norman Edmunds—for Petitioner.
Sain Das—for Opoposite Party.

Order.—The applicant is being prosecuted in the Court of Mr. Phailbus, Magistrate, 1st Class, Lahore, under S. 497, I. P. C., and is at the same time being proceeded against as a co-respondent in a divorce petition (based on the same allegations as are made in the criminal action) presented by the complainant and now pending in the High Court. He asks: (1) that the criminal proceedings be quashed on the ground that S. 61, Indian Divorce Act, renders the criminal prosecution unmaintainable. In the event of this request being refused he prays: (2) that the criminal proceedings be stayed pending the decision of the divorce proceedings. Mr. Edmunds, who appears for the petitioner, has addressed me at great length in support of his contention that the use of the word "suit" in S. 61, Indian Divorce Act, shows that the intention of the section was to bar not only civil suits but criminal prosecutions at the instance of a person competent to present a petition under Ss. 2 and 10. He cannot, however, cite any judicial decision in favour of his interpretation.

There is in my mind no doubt whatever that S. 61 was not intended to do anything more, and does nothing more, than preclude a civil suit for damages of the nature of the English common law action for criminal conversation which lay at the suit of a husband to recover damages against an adulterer, a form of action which had been abolished in England by S. 59, Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. I can find no authority, statutory or otherwise, warranting Mr. Edmund's view that S. 61 forbids the Crown to prosecute and punish an alleged adulterer under S. 497. I. P. C., when moved to do so by an injured husband, who is entitled to relief under the Indian Divorce Act. There does not appear to be anything illegal in the prosecution and the request that the proceedings be quashed is rejected.

After hearing Mr. Sain Das, who, on behalf of the complainant-respondent, opposes the petition for stay of proceedings and having regard to all the circumstances I think it proper to pass the following order. The proceedings will continue provided that: (1) the judgment is not pronounced till the divorce petition presented by the complainant has been disposed of and (2) Mrs. Kirk is not called upon to give evidence until after the date of the first hearing in the divorce proceedings.

S. A. No. 413 of 1927, Decided on 29th June 1927, from a decree of the 1st Class Sub-Judge, Shahpur.

Registration Act, S. 17 (1) (c)—Receipt for consideration for oral sale of immovable property is inadmissible for want of registration.

A receipt for a certain amount in lieu of an oral sale of a certain land is only a receipt and not a contract of sale: and this receipt is inadmissible for lack of registration; but oral evidence can be given to prove the sale and the payment of money aliunde. [P 51 C 1, 2]

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellant.

Shambhu Lal Puri—for Respondent

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this case sued for possession of certain property alleging that the defendant had forcibly taken possession of it a few days before the suit. The defendant pleaded that the land was orally sold to him by the plaintiff in lieu of Rs. 460 and that a receipt for the amount was subsequently given by the plaintiff on the 20th December 1916. The trial Court held that the oral sale, etc., was proved and that the plaintiff's suit failed. The appellate Court held that the receipt was really a contract of sale and was inadmissible in evidence for lack of registration and no oral evidence could also be given because of S. 91, Indian Evidence Act. It, therefore, decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

In second appeal it has been argued that this document is not a contract of sale. Rulings have been cited by counsel on either side. I hold, however, with respect to this particular document that it is only a receipt and not a contract of sale.

Next it is contended by counsel for the respondent that even if it is a receipt it comes within S. 17 (1) (c), Indian Registration Act. Ram Chand v. Chattar Singh (1) which was followed in Sher Khan v. Muzaffar Khan (2) supports this contention, and I hold accordingly that this receipt is inadmissible for lack of registration. But it follows then that oral evidence can be given to prove the sale and the payment of money aliunde. No decision has been given on the evidence produced in the case by the appellate Court.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. to the lower appellate Court for decision on the merits with reference to the above remarks. Costs will abide the event. The stamp on appeal will be refunded.

G. S. Salariya—for Petitioners.

Kishan Dayal—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff firm as commission agents supplied the defendant firm with certain goods. When the dealings ceased, the accounts were stated and the defendant firm struck a balance of Rs. 4 0-14-0 in the books of the plaintiff firm. The plaintiff firm then sued the defendant firm, stating that Rs. 150 only had been paid. They claimed Rs. 578-0-6 for the balance unpaid together with interest. They obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court for Rs. 160 and against this decision this revision petition has been admitted.

The case of the defendant firm was that Rs. 280 had been paid at Delhi in Sambat 1979 and later Rs. 150 was paid at Gangapore in full settlement of the claim. It was also pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation as it was a suit by commission agents and, therefore, fell within Art. 85, Sch. 1, Limitation Act. The Small Cause Judge, however, held that the suit fell within Art. 64 as accounts had been stated between the parties.

The petitioner's counsel first argued that the suit was barred by limitation. In my opinion, as accounts were stated and a balance struck the Court below was correct in holding that Art. 64 applied. Besides a wrong decision on a question of limitation is not per se ground for interfering in revision as was held in Ghasita v. Sultan (1).

The next point taken was that the judgment of the Court below was perverse in holding that the receipt for Rs. 150 was not in full settlement of the account between the parties. This question requires serious consideration. The defendant firm examined two witnesses who proved that two men came from Delhi to collect the debt for the plaintiff firm and they have both deposed that at that time the receipt in question for Rs. 150 was given in full settlement of the account between the parties. It is also in their evidence that the return third class fare for one man from Delhi to Gangapore City is only Rs. 7, whereas in the accounts of the plaintiff firm a sum of Rs 16-8-0 is debited for the expenses of the persons who went to Gangapore City in connexion with this account. This means that two persons undoubtedly went. In the official Railway Guide book Rs. 7-2-0 is the ordinary third class return fare from Delhi to Gangapore City. It must, therefore, be held that two men did go to collect this debt.

The defendants' statement is to the effect that the body of the receipt was written by one of these persons, namely, Madan Mohan, while Data Ram signed the receipt. The plaintiff stated that Data Ram was his agent and that he did go to collect money from the defendant firm. He added that Data Ram had gone out of Delhi. He denied employing a man of the name of Madan Mohan. He admitted that Part B of the receipt was written by his agent Data Ram, but he could not say who wrote the first Part A of the receipt.

I have seen this receipt. The first portion is written in Deva Nagri characters while the second portion is written in Mandi characters. The plaintiff, therefore, admits that the writing in the Mandi characters was by his agent Data Ram, but he stated that he did not know who wrote the other portion. But what was written by Data Ram is merely the signature, which could not stand by itself. He has, therefore, merely admitted the signature to the receipt while stating that he does not know who wrote the body of the receipt. As he had failed without sufficient cause to produce his admitted agent, Data Ram, it must be held in face of the above evidence that the sum of Rs. 150 was taken in full satisfaction of the account. This means that the defendants' case that Rs. 280 were previously paid in Delhi was correct.

The exact words written by Data Ram are as follows:

dastkhat Data Ram munim ropaya 150 ankan 150 rokar liya babat Daya Nand-Damodar Daske.

If this had been the only receipt the signature would have come last. It is the usual thing for the person signing the receipt to add the amount received again, though this has been written in the body of the receipt. This is all that Data Ram did and it must be presumed that he knew what the receipt was which he signed. When the plaintiff has admitted his signature it was upon him to prove that Data Ram was deceived or that Data Ram was not authorized to settle the account as he did. No such attempt has been made. In these circumstances the plaintiffs' suit should have been dismissed. I accept the revision petition with costs and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit.

R.D. Revision accepted.

District Board, Sialkot—Defendant—Appellant.

Sultan Muhammad Khan and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

S. A. No. 1087 of 1927, Decided on 31st October 1927, from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Sialkot, D/- 18th January 1927.

(a) Punjab District Board's Act, (1883), Ss. 30, 31 (2)—Profession tax on vakils is not illegal.

Where a Notification issued under S. 31 (2) described the class of persons to be taxed as "All persons who carry on any trade or follow any profession or calling within the said area"

Held: the notification sufficiently defined the class of persons to be taxed.

It may be that this definition may give rise to certain suits on the ground that the persons taxed do not carry on a trade or follow a profession or calling and that they are therefore not liable to be taxed. The tax is not therefore illegal by reason of the want of definition of the class of persons to be taxed and the members of the bar cannot object to its imposition as they come within the class defined. [P 54, C 1, 2]

(b) Tax—Second income-tax cannot be imposed without sanction of Governor-General—Income-tax.

A second income-tax cannot be imposed though a tax on professions, trades or callings can be imposed. If the method of assessment in reality makes the tax one on income, it is illegal and ultra vires even though it purports to be a tax on persons practising a profession or carrying on a trade or calling. The tax which can be imposed without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, on professions, trades or callings must be one which is not a second tax on the incomes of such persons, i. e., there must be a flat rate imposed by the tax on each profession, trade or calling, or rather on all persons practising a particular profession or carrying on a particular trade or calling. [P 54, C 2]

(c) Jurisdiction—Civil Court—Tax illegally imposed—Civil Court can grant relief.

A civil Court has jurisdiction to determine whether the impositon of a tax is illegal or ultra vires and to give relief if it has been levied from persons who for that reason are not liable to pay the same: A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 147, and 74 P. L. R. 1918, Rel. on. [P 55, C 1]

Abdul Rashid—for Appellant.

Badri Das and Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—Sixty-two members of the Sialkot Bar sued the District Board of Sialkot for a declaration that a certain tax imposed by that local body was ultra vires and illegal, and for an injunction restraining the Board from recovering the tax from them. The trial Court decreed the suit on the ground that the tax, though it purported to be a tax on trade, professions and callings, was in reality a tax on the incomes of persons carrying on trades or following professions or callings and that as an income-tax could not be imposed without the consent of the Governor-General in Council it was illegal. On appeal the Senior Subordinate Judge held that it was not a tax on incomes but that it was illegal as the class of persons to be taxed was not defined. Against this decision the District Board has preferred this second appeal.

It is clear that under S. 30, Panjab District Boards Act, a District Board may impose a tax on trades, professions and callings, and the procedure in imposing a tax of this nature is given in S 31 of the Act. Under S. 31 (2) it is the duty of the Board to publish a notice defining the class of persons, or descriptions of the property proposed to be taxed, the amount or the rate of the tax to be imposed, and the system of assessment to be adopted This is, of course, prior to imposing the tax. When, however, the imposition has been notified, it is enacted by S. 31 (7) that the notification shall be conclusive evidence that the tax has been imposed in accordance with law.

The tax in question was imposed by Punjab Government Notification No. 14672, dated 23rd May 1924. This notification gave the class of persons to be taxed and the rate of the tax and runs as follows:

Under Sub-S. (7) of S. 31, Punjab District Board Act, 1883, the Punjab Government (Ministry of Education) are pleased to notify that with the requisite sanction the District Board of Sialkot has directed that, with effect from the 1st June 1924, the following tax be imposed within the area, exclusive of Notified Area, subject to its jurisdiction.

DESCRIPTION OF TAX.

(1) Class of persons to be taxed. All persons who carry on any trade or follow any profession or calling within the said area.

(2) Rate of tax.

The tax shall be levied according to the following scale on the total annual income derived by each assessee from any such trade, profession or calling, provided that such annual income shall not include that (a) received by way of wound or disability pensions for service in His Majesty's Naval, Military or Air Forces; (b) received on account of wages in kind by agricultural Kamins for Sep work done by them; and (c) derived from land subject to local rate or from livestock and agricultural produce owned by persons mainly defendant on agriculture for their livelihood :

Group	Annual Income	Amount of tax payable.
	Rs.	Rs.
1	201-300	2
2	302-400	4
3	401-750	7
4	751-1000	12
5	1001-1500	15
6	1501-2000	20
7	2001 and over	30

The method of assessment was given in a subsequent Notification.

It was contended by the learned counsel who appeared for the appellant that the class of persons to be taxed was sufficiently defined by stating that all persons who carry on any trade or follow any profession or calling were to be taxed. It was further contended by him that in any case the plaintiffs had no cause of action as they undoubtedly are following a profession within the jurisdiction of the District Board of Sialkot. Lastly, it was contended by him that under sub-S. (7) of S. 31 the Notification must be taken to be conclusive evidence that the tax was imposed in accordance with law.

There is no doubt that sub-S. (2), S. 31, has reference only to the stage when it is proposed to impose the tax and that at that stage no objection seems to have been taken. The notification, therefore, must be taken to be conclusive evidence that the tax was imposed in accordance with law. In any case, I would hold that the words of the Notification already quoted 'sufficiently define the class of persons on whom the tax is imposed. All persons carrying on any trade or following any profession or calling come within the definition and that is as good as to give an exhaustive list of all trades, professions or callings. It may be that this definition may give rise to certain suits on the ground that the persons taxed do not carry on a trade or follow a profession or calling and that they are, therefore, not liable to be taxed. But it is clear that the plaintiffs are liable to be taxed under the notification. In fact, in nearly all cases this will be evident. I therefore hold that the tax is not illegal by reason of the want of definition of the class of persons to be taxed, and I further hold that this objection is not open to the plaintiffs who clearly come within the class defined.

It remains to decide whether the tax, though purporting to be a tax on trades, professions or callings, is in reality an income-tax or not. If it is an income-tax it is conceded that it cannot be imposed under S. 80, Punjab District Boards Act without the consent of the Governor-General in Council. This sanction has not been obtained. The Notification makes it clear that the tax is on the incomes of persons, practising any profession or carrying on any trade or calling within the jurisdiction of the District Board. These incomes are already liable to ordinary income tax. Prima facie the tax under discussion does impose a second tax on the incomes of persons practising professions or carrying on trades or callings. It was argued, however, on behalf of the appellant that as it is a tax only on persons practising a profession or carrying on a trade or calling, it is legal even though the method of assessment amounts to imposing a tax on the incomes of those persons. This argument appears to me to be fallacious. A second income tax cannot be imposed though a tax on professions, trades or callings can be imposed. If the method of assessment in reality makes the tax one on income, it is illegal and ultra vires even though it purports to be a tax on persons practising a profession or carrying on a trade or calling. The tax which can be imposed without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, on professions trades or callings must be one which is not a second tax on the incomes of such persons, i. e., there must be a flat rate imposed by the tax on each profession, trade or calling, or rather on all persons practising a particular profession or carrying on a particular trade or calling. This difficulty seems to have been realised subsequently, and I notice that flat rates are given in the case of Punjab Government Notification No. 23447, dated 16th August 1926. By this Notification a tax on trades, professions or callings was imposed within the area subject to the jurisdiction of the District Board at Multan.

A tax on animals is another tax which can be imposed by District Board with the previous section of the Local Government only. There are numerous instances of such a tax being imposed and the method adopted is to impose a flat rate on each class of animals. If the present tax, however, is legal, it would also be legal to impose a tax on animals as follows namely the tax to be so much on an income of so much and rising or falling in accordance with the incomes of the persons owning the animals Can it be said that such a tax is not an income tax, that is a tax on incomes? In my judgment there is no escape from the conclusion that the tax imposed under Punjab Government Notification No. 14672, dated 23rd May 1924 within the area subject to the jurisdiction of the District Board of Sialkot is illegal and ultra vires in that it is a second income tax on persons practising professions or carrying on trades or callings. There is clear authority of this Court in Pala Ram v. Notified Area Committee Kotaddu (1) and Committee of Notified Area Una v. Chatar Behari (2) that a civil Court has jurisdiction to determine whether the imposition of a tax is illegal or ultra vires and to give relief if it has been levied from persons who for that reason are not liable to pay the same.

In these circumstances I would dismiss this appeal but leave the parties to bear their own costs.

S. A. No. 993 of 1923, Decided on 23rd May 1927, from the decree of the Dist. J., Shahpur, D/- 8th March 1923.

Will—Construction—Legatee dying after testator but before a life-holder created by the will—Legatee's heir takes after the life-holder.

Where by a will the testator bequeaths his property to his adopted son subject to the life interest of his widow and the adopted son dies during the widow's lifetime leaving behind him a son, a heritable vested interest is created in favour of the legatee on the testators' death and his son is the rightful successor to the property after widow's death : *A. Zafar Ali. J.—The plaintiff sues for a declaration of his title to the property of which the last male owner was Hardit Singh and which is now in the plaintiff's possession. His claim is based on a deed executed by Hardit Singh on 20th August 1895, by which he gifted the whole of his property to Attar Singh, father of the plaintiff, with this reservation that he (Hardit Singh) would have full power to deal with his property so long as he would live and that after his death his wife Har Devi, whose nephew Attar Singh was, would have the same power during her lifetime. Thus the gift was not to take effect immediately. It was further recited in the deed that Attar Singh was the duly adopted son of Hardit Singh. Hardit Singh died in 1896 leaving him surviving his wife Har Devi and his adopted son Attar Singh and in accordance with the provisions of the deed Mt. Har Devi succeeded to his entire estate.

Attar Singh died in 1903. His son, the plaintiff, lived with Mt. Har Devi till her death which occurred in 1920. Mt. Har Devi during her lifetime put the plaintiff in possession of her property and applied for mutation of the landed estate in his name. This was sanctioned about a week before her death. Hardit Singh's collaterals (who figure as defendants in this litigation) appealed against this mutation order and the Collector accepting their appeal directed the plaintiff to establish his title in a civil Court. This is the origin of the suit.

The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the document was a forgery and that even if it was genuine it was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration because it was a deed of gift. The trial Court overruled both these pleas and decreed the plaintiff's suit, finding that the deed was duly executed by Hardit Singh and was to all intents and purposes a will and that as Attar Singh had a vested interest in the property of Hardit Singh, who had died before him the collaterals of Hardit Singh could not divest the son of Attar Singh of that interest. On appeal the District Judge also came to the conclusion that the document was genuine and that it was not a deed of gift ; but relying on Mela Singh v. Gur Das (1), he dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that what Hardit Singh intended was to appoint Attar Singh his heir and that the son of the heir thus appointed had no right of succession. Against that decision the plaintiff has appeared in this Court in second appeal.

From the provisions of the deed taken as a whole it appears to us that it is not a deed of gift or alienation or adoption as contended by the respondent's counsel nor is it a deed appointing an heir as held by the lower appellate Court. It is clear that Hardit Singh did not adopt Attar Singh as his son by this deed. The adoption had taken place some time before the execution of the deed, and the deed only contains a recital of that adoption. Further, the intention of the executant, as evidenced by the deed, undoubtedly was to bequeath his property to his adopted son or the heir appointed by him, because the incidents enumerated in the deed appertain to a disposition by will and not to a gift. Consequently the term "gift" applied to the disposition was undoubtedly a misnomer. Further it is clear that the legatee acquired a heritable vested interest in the property on the death of the testator, as the property was certainly to come to him on the death of the testator's widow who had succeeded only to a life interest therein. This being so, the plaintiff was the rightful successor on the death of the widow. The principle laid down in Mela Singh v. Gur Das (1), does not affect the plaintiff's right, his father having as the appointed heir survived the appointer.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and, reversing the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court, restore that of trial Court. The respondents will pay the plaintiff's costs throughout.

Civ. Revn. Petn. No. 278 of 1927, Decided on 5th November 1927, from the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge, Delhi, D/- 31st January 1927.

(a) Railways Act, S. 72—Evidence of railway servants should not be disbelieved merely because they would not admit failure of duty.

In the majority of cases of claims against railway for loss, the railway can produce no other evidence of how it dealt with the goods except by producing those of its servants who had dealt with the goods and therefore to disbelieve the evidence of these servants on the ground that they naturally would not admit any dereliction of duty would be to cast an impossible onus on railway administration. [P 57 C 2]

✻ (b) Railways Act, S. 72—Risk-note Form B—New form—Nature of pleadings of parties indicated.

Under the new form of risk-note B, possibly it is initially the plaintiff's duty to call upon the railway administration to disclose its dealings with the consignment, and the railway should in its pleadings disclose how the consignment was dealt with. The plaintiff should call upon the railway to prove either its pleadings of its previous disclosure or the Court should decide if it is necessary for the railway to give evidence. [P 57 C 2]

Jai Gopal Sethi—for Respondonts.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff sued the Secretary of State for India on the ground that he had delivered certain bales to the defendant railway and two of these bales had not been delivered by the railway. Various pleas were taken but they were evidently based on an entire misconception of the facts of the new form of risk-note B. As the form is new I propose in this case to point out possible constructions of the meaning of the form in order that the public and the railway may be warned what sort of evidence should be led or expected of them in future cases. The Court below held that the railway administration had failed to explain how the consignment was dealt with when it was in its possession or control and it, therefore, held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs. 258 and decreed accordingly.

The relevent words in the new risk-note are as follows :

The railway administration shall be bound to disclose to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control and if necessary to give evidence thereof before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct but if misconduct on the part of the railway administration or its servants cannot be fairly inferred from such evidence the burden of proving such misconduct shall lie upon the consignor.

It has been contended by the learned Government advocate in revision that these words mean that the plaintiff in every such case should call npon the railway to make the necessary disclosure and thereupon the railway shall be bound to make the said disclosure and that if the plaintiff is dissatisfied with the disclosure or does not accept the truth of the disclosure made, he can call upon the railway to give evidence of its dealings with the consignment. If this evidence itself is sufficient to lead to an inference of misconduct then the case can be decided against the railway. If it is not so sufficient then it is open to the plaintiff to give evidence tending to prove such misconduct, but if the railway has not been asked to make the disclosure it is not necessary for it to give any evidence, or if it is not called upon to give evidence it is not necessary for it to give any evidence, and therefore, the Court below was wrong in decreeing the plaintiff's suit without any proof of misconduct on the part of the railway administration on its servants. It is clear to me from the pleas of the railway that the parties seem to have been under the impression that the old risk-note form was still being used and therefore the position of neither side was clearly grasped in the trial in the Court below. Counsel for the respondent has contended that the fact that the railway tendered such evidence purporting to show how it dealt with the consignment proves that the railway did realise its position. This, however, is not necessarily so.

The railway did not give evidence disclosing their dealings throughout the time that the consignment was in their possession or control. It seems to me that they were endeavouring to prove that there had been a loss of the consignment. This conduct could be explained by reference to the conflict of rulings under the old risk-note form, as to whether it was sufficient for the railway merely to plead loss or whether the railway had to go further and prove loss before they could claim exemption under the risk-note form B. I, therefore, think that the best course in the circumstances is to remand the case for retrial to the Court below and give both parties a chance of producing what evidence they may wish to. The plaintiff will be presumed to have called upon the railway to give evidence as to how they dealt with the consignment throughout the time it was in their possession or control, and the railway shall give such evidence as they may consider fit as regards this. In this connexion, I will point out that the Court should not have disbelieved a railway servant merely on the ground that he was a railway servant and that, therefore, he was bound to state that he had done his duty. It is obvious that in the majority of cases the railway can produce no other evidence of how it dealt with the goods except by producing those of its servants who had dealt with the goods and to disbelive the evidence of these servants on the ground that they naturally would not admit any dereliction of duty would be to cast an impossible onus on the railway administration. At the same time I would point out that wherever possible the railway should support the oral evidence of its servants by books which should be proved to have been duly kept in the course of business. But before the Court can disbelieve the railway servants the plaintiff must cross-examine these servants or otherwise prove that relevant books could have been forthcoming and that there was no reason for their non-production. If this is done, it, of course, is open to the Court to disbelive the oral evidence on the ground that the corroborative evidence of the books had not been produced in the case.

I now proceed to point out the possible construction of the new form of risk-note in order that the parties may be warned, as I have said before, as to what their respective rights and duties are. It is possible to hold that it is initially the plaintiff's duty to call upon the railway administration to disclose its dealings with the consignment. It is also possible to hold that what the risk-note really means is that the railway should in its pleadings disclose how the consignment was dealt with. As regards the construction of the words "if necessary" it may be that it means that the plaintiff may call upon the railway to prove either its pleadings or its previous disclosures or it may mean that on the pleadings and facts stated it is for the Court to decide if it is necessary for the railway to give evidence. In the circumstances I would, therefore, if I were plaintiff, give due notice to the railway to disclose and if not satisfied with the disclosure I would call upon the railway to give evidence making this a portion of my pleas. On the other hand if I were the railway then whether called upon or not by the plaintiff I would take the precaution of disclosing the dealings in my pleadings and would enquire from the Court whether it would require further evidence thereon other than pleadings supported by such relevant copies of entries from books as the railway might think fit to put in along with its pleadings or at the time of production of documents. Both parties will then be in a position, whatever interpretation was given by the Courts to this risk-note, to avoid the expense of retrial and appeals or revisions. In the present case, I, as stated above, hold that the plaintiff may be presumed to have called upon the railway to give evidence of its dealings and produce such evidence, oral or documentary, as it may think fit and the plaintiff shall then be at liberty to give evidence tending to prove misconduct if so advised. In my opinion, as at present advised if the Court is not satisfied that the railway have given good evidence to prove its dealings with the consignment it is open to the Court to decree the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the railway have failed to discharge a statutory obligation. I must not, however, be taken to decide this point finally and it is open to the Court to hold that even if the evidence given by the railway is not satisfactory it is still for the plaintiff to prove misconduct before the railway can be saddled with responsibility. No order as to costs in this revision.

F. A. No. 1873 of 1923, Decided on 30th March 1927, from the decree of the 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Jhang, D/- 8th May 1922.

Hindu Law—Widow having only one daughter, inheriting property worth Rs. 8,000*—Gift of property worth Rs.* 2,000 to son-in-law at the time of marriage is valid.

It is established beyond any doubt whatever that a Hindu widow may make a gift of a reasonable portion of her deceased husband's estate to her son-in-law on the occasion of her daughter's marriage. The amount of land which may be alienated for this purpose depends in each case upon the whole of the circumstances, upon the position of the family, the number of children to be provided for, the nature of the land alienated, and any other circumstances which may arise in a particular case. [P 59 C 2]

Where a Hindu widow, having no sons but only one daughter, made a gift to her son-in-law, at the time of her daughter's marriage, of property worth about Rs. 2,000 out of the property worth about Rs. 8,000 inherited by the widow from her husband [P 60 C 1]

Held: that the gift was valid.

Amar Nath Chona and Gobind Ram Khanna—for Appellants.

Jiwan Lal Kapur and Anant Ram Khosla—for Respondents.

Fforde, J.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for a declaration that certain alienations made by Mt. Jiwan Devi, defendant 1, shall not affect their reversionary interests in the property, and they also asked for an injunction to prohibit Mt. Jiwan Devi from making further alienations. The alienations which have been attacked are four namely:

(a) A lease for a term of five years dated 22nd February 1921, in favour of Karm Narain, defendant 2.

(b) A gift of three marlas of land in favour of Chanan Das and his wife Mt. Maya Devi, defendants 3 and 4, dated 28th May 1921

(c) A mortgage of three marlas of land mortgaged to Lal Chand defendant 5 by deed dated 15th June 1921, for Rs. 1,175 and

(d) A sale of certain lands for Rs. 600 to Lal Chand, defendant 5, by deed dated 1st December 1921.

So far as the lease is concerned the trial Judge held that the alienations referred to as (a), (b) and (c) were valid and he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in respect of these particular matters. He held, however, that the sale of the 1st December 1921, was invalid and he gave the plaintiffs the decree sought in respect of this alienation. The injunction was refused. The plaintiffs-appellants do not pres for a declaration in respect of the lease, as the lease has now expired; nor do they press for the injunction, but they now appeal against the decision in favour of the validity of the gift of the 28th May 1921, and the mortgage of the 15th June 1921 Mr. Amar Nath Chona who appears for the plaintiffs-appellants contends that the mortgage is invalid inasmuch as it was not made for legal necessity and consideration. The deed sets out with meticulous care everyoney in respect of which the mortgage money was required. The sums in question are recited as being required for the expenses of the marriage of defendant 4, Mt.

Jiwan Devi's daughter, Mt. Maya Devi, to Chanan Das defendant 3. These sums amount to Rs. 946-4-9. In addition to these particular items the deed states that a further sum of Rs. 179-9-0 was paid to discharge a debt due by Mt. Jiwan Devi's deceased husband Har Dial to a stranger, Rs. 35 was stated to have been paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar for the discharge of revenue, etc., and Rs. 14-2-3 had been taken in cash for the purchase of stamp paper. The total of these sums comes to Rs. 1,175-0-0 which is the amount for which the lands are stated to have been mortgaged.

It is not denied that the marriage in question did in fact take place on the 26th May 1921. A number of witnesses have been produced by the defendants to show that the sums alleged to have been expended upon the marriage ceremonies and festivities have been accurately stated in the mortgage-deed. The witnesses include the person who supplied the provisions, the person who made the ring, and the tailor who provided the clothing. In some instances these witnesses have produced their account books to show that the sums they have charged correspond with the sums that appear in the mortgage-deed. I can see no reason why these witnesses' testimony should not be believed, especially as the total expended on the marriage celebrations cannot be said to be excessive in view of the rank and position in life of the parties to the marriage.

The item of Rs. 179-9-0 has been proved by the production of the bahi of B. Hari Das the creditor concerned and the evidence of Tara Chand, D. W. 20, the scribe of the entry. The evidence in respect of the other smaller items, in my opinion, is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Amar Nath Chona has very strongly urged that Mt. Jiwan Devi was not driven by need to raise the sums in question by mortgaging the land, as she was already possessed of an annual income out of which she could have defrayed these expenses. This the plaintiffs have attempted to substantiate by calling a number of witnesses to show that Mt. Jiwan Devi was in affluent circumstances. The plaintiff Sakhir Chand, however, has himself admitted that he acted as agent for Mt. Jiwan Devi in the managing of her property. He has also added that he had got no regular accounts of her income and expenses, though he admits that she had sold several lands. He alleges that she never trusted him with the bahis though he admits that he never took a receipt from her for sums paid to her. He also states that he did not remember the prices which he received for these pieces of land.

It seems to me on the whole of the evidence that Mt. Jiwan Devi was not in affluent circumstances and that she was driven to mortgaging the land in question for the purposes of defraying the marriage expenses of her daughter. I would, therefore, uphold the decision of the trial Judge as regards the mortgage transaction.

With regard to the gift, the main contention of Mr. Amar Nath Chona is that the gift is invalid under Hindu Law as it exceeds a reasonable portion of the inheritance of Mt. Jiwan Devi's deceased husband. It is now established beyond any doubt whatsoever that a Hindu widow may make a gift of a reasonable portion of her deceased husband's estate to her son-in-law on the occasion of her daughter's marriage The amount of land which may be alienated for this purpose depends in each case upon the whole of the circumstances, upon the position of the family, the number of child en to be provided for, the nature of the land alienated, and any other circumstance which may arise in a particular case.

The only question which we have to decide in this appeal is whether or not the gift in question exceeds a reasonable portion of the deceased husband's estate. According to the plaintiff the value of the property left by Har Dial amounts to Rs. 8,000 and according to the same interested witness the value of the portion gifted amounts to Rs. 4,000. The probabilities are that the property left amounts to a great deal more than Rs. 8,000, in view of the fact that this witness has himself admitted having sold various portions without having kept any accounts of such sales. But, even accepting the value to be Rs. 8,000 0-0 the defendant has produced some evidence to show that the land gifted was valued only at Rs. 760-0-0 per marla. This would bring the total value of this land to about Rs. 2,000-0-0.

In my opinion, taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration, the fact that Mt. Jiwan Devi had only one daughter who on her mother's death would ultimately succeed to the whole inheritance, and the fact that the land gifted amounts, according to the defendants' evidence which I see no reason to disbelieve, to less than one-third of the whole inheritance, I would agree with the learned trial Judge that this gift is valid under Hindu Law. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

Faqir Chand—for Appellant.

Nand Lal—for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by one Joti Ram against Sardar Harbakhsh Singh and another. It was based on S. 18, Specific Relief Act.

The facts briefly are that the defendants were tenants of Government under Act 5 of 1912 in the year 1916. In 1919 they executed a lease transferring the land to Joti Ram for a period of five years on certain conditions. That lease was not given effect, inasmuch as Joti Ram was not put in possession. In 1920 defendants completed the payment of the instalments due to Government which would render them entitled to proprietary rights in the land In March 1921 the present suit was instituted and it was prayed that specific performance of the agreement to lease should be decreed or in default damages awarded.

The trial Court granted a decree for damages, but on appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the contract of lease offended against the provisions of S. 19, Act 5 of 1912, and being void could not be specifically performed and could not give rise to any relief by way of damages.

Against this decision Joti Ram preferred this appeal to this Court which was admitted to a hearing on 6th November 1923. On the case coming before us yesterday Dr. Nand Lal for respondents raised a preliminary objection to the effect that the appeal was incompetent for the following reasons :

It appears that when the defendants filed their written statements certain objections were taken to the form of the suit, to its valuation and to the jurisdiction of the civil Courts. Issues were framed on these points and decided by a separate order. The decision being in favour of the plaintiff the suit proceeded. Further issues were settled and the case decided as has already been stated. When this appeal was filed, with the memorandum of appeal were attached a copy of the judgment of the learned District Judge, a copy of the judgment of the trial Court dated 14th May 1922, and a copy of the decree. A copy of the intermediate order disposing of the preliminary issues was not attached. Dr. Nand Lal's contention was that under the provisions of O. 42, R. 2, Civil P. C., a copy of this intermediate order was absolutely necessary, inasmuch as the judgment of the trial Court consisted not of the judgment dated 14th May 1922 alone but of that judgment and the judgment which culminated in the order deciding the preliminary issues.

Mr. Fakir Chand for appellant contended that the view pressed by Dr. Nand Lal was erroneous and would lead to all sorts of difficulties It has been held in certain unreported cases of this Court which are to be found in Abdullah v. Behari Lal (1) and Bhiwani Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mill v. Bishen Sahai (2) that an order such as was passed in the present case formed part of the judgment of the trial Court and the absence of a copy with the memorandum of appeal was fatal to the appeal.

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 638.

(2) A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 45.

After hearing counsel on this point we decided to hear the appeal itself in which the point for determination is whether the contract in question was void having regard to the provisions of S. 19, Act 5 of 1912. As to this it has been urged that under this contract what was transferred were not the tenancy rights but the proprietary rights in the land and that therefore there was no contravention of the section in question. The learned counsel on both sides have cited a large number of authorities dealing with the result of void contracts. There is, I think, something to be said for the view contended for by Mr. Fakir Chand, but it seems to me that the appeal must fail on the ground that the copy of the trial Court's judgment was not filed along with the memorandum of appeal.

Having regard to the authorities referred to, there can be no doubt that the copy of the order disposing of the preliminary points was a part of the judgment of the trial Court. It was contended, however, that under the provisions of O. 42, R. 2, applicable to this Court as amended by Punjab Government Notification No. 138-G, dated 19th March 1926, this Court has power to dispense with this portion of the judgment. No doubt the rule, as it now stands, gives this Court power to dispense with the judgment of the trial Court. At the time when this appeal was admitted, however, no such power was possessed by this Court and it cannot, therefore, be assumed that the Judges admitting the appeal had decided to dispense with a copy of the judgment. As at present advised I am inclined to the opinion that the power to dispense with a judgment should ordinarily be exercised at the first hearing. In this view of the case it is not necessary to deal further with the appeal which is accordingly dismissed. In the circumstances, however, we leave the parties to pay their own costs in this Court.

Judgment.—The facts of this appeal are as follows :—

The decree-holder, Pandit Thakar Datt, got Ram Singh, judgment-debtor, arrested in execution of a decree. Bhaget Mukand Lal stood surety for the appearance of the judgment-debtor on the 4th August 1926. It is not apparent on the record and neither counsel has been able to show me under what section the Court purported to act in taking security from the judgment-debtor. Order 21, R. 40, Civil P. C. has been suggested by counsel for the decree-holder, but there is nothing to show that the conditions necessary for the application of this section were present to the Court's mind or on the record at the time when this order was passed.

On the 4th August 1926, neither the surety nor the judgment-debtor put in an appearance and on the application of the decree-holder notice was issued to the surety to show cause why the full decretal amount should not be realized from him in accordance with the terms of his bond. On the 1st October 1926, the surety appeared and put in objections to the execution of the decree against him on the ground that the judgment-debtor was ill on the 4th August 1926, and, therefore, was unable to attend; and secondly that the judgment-debtor's counsel was present and that was sufficient appearance within the meaning of the bond on behalf of the judgment-debtor. The 29th October 1926, was fixed for evidence of the parties on these issues and on the 29th October, the judgment-debtor and all parties were present and the Court ordered the arrest of the judgment-debtor. Before, however, anything was done the judgment-debtor applied to be given time to make an application in insolvency and on his furnishing the requisite security the Court ordered him to be released. On the same date the case was adjourned to the 1st November 1926, because it was represented to the Court that the parties might arrive at a compromise on the 1st November 1926, the surety put in an application stating that the decree-holder had compromised the case or had agreed to compromise the case against the surety for Rs. 500 and that the surety was willing to pay a cheque for Rs. 500 to the decree-holder in accordance with the arrangement made at the last hearing. The cheque was accordingly tendered duly in Court. The Court then framed a preliminary issue as to whether the question of the parties having entered into a compromise could be gone into by him as the decree-holder denied the alleged compromise. The trial Court thereupon held that this alleged adjustment with the decree-holder could not be considered by him at all and that the surety had given no proof of the alleged illness of the judgment-debtor and, therefore. it held that the surety was liable for the decretal amount and directed that execution should also be issued out against him. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that the question of the compromise could not be gone into by the Court at all and that at best it was inchoate contract and as such could not, therefore, be pleaded in bar of the execution. He also held that the trial Court should have given an opportunity to the surety to prove the fact of the illness of the judgment-debtor and that he would have been prepared to remand the case for this purpose. He, however, did not remand the case as he decided on the authority of Makanji Mavji v. Bhukan Das Nagar Das (1), Tan Kin Shan v. U. Che Si (2) and Abdul Hussein v. D. J. Mistri & Co. (3) that S. 145, was not mandatory and the Court could in its discretion either refuse to execute against the surety or that having taken action against the judgment-debtor the Court had no power also to proceed against the surety.

Makanji Mavji v. Bhukan Das Nagar Das (1) and Abdul Hussein v. D. J. Mistri & Co. (3) are authorities under S. 55 (4) Civil P. C. and have no application to the present case. In Tan Kin Shan v. U. Che Si (2) the surety produced the judgment-debtor two days after the due date and there were other factors also in the case; it was held by the Court to be substantial compliance with the terms of the bond. In this case, however, the judgment-debtor was not produced till nearly 2½ months after the due date and there is no explanation at present of the cause of this long delay. Therefore, it seems to me that none of the rulings relied on by the learned Additional District Judge applies to this case at all and I hold that the learned Additional District Judge was in error in discharging the surety from the liability incurred on the security bond. A security bond in essence is no more than a contract for the due performance of a certain thing and a party is entitled to have that contract enforced by the Courts unless there is some reason why it should not be so enforced.

It has been further contended by counsel for the decree-holder that as the bond provides for the surety being liable, if the judgment-debtor fails to appear and this term is quite unconditional therefore, there can be no point in going into the question of the judgment-debtor's illness. He has cited Rameswar Das v. Sri Lal (4) in support of this contention. In that case, however, it was held that the possible absence of the judgment-debtor by reason of his conviction in a criminal case was present to the mind of the surety, who had full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances of the case There is nothing to show that the present surety had in mind the possible serious illness of the judgment-debtor. I, therefore, consider that evidence may be led on this point and it will be for the Court to decide whether in view of all the circumstances the parties may be considered to have bound themselves unconditionally or whether a serious illness of the judgment-debtor, if proved, would execuse the surety. See S. 56, Contract Act.

Counsel for the surety has further argued that the factum of compromise can be proved by the surety. Counsel for the decree-holder urges that O. 21, R. 2 bars, or is not applicable to such an alleged adjustment. He further contends that as the so-called adjustment was

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 423=48 Bom. 500.
(2) A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 135=2 Rang. 567.
(3) A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 340=46 Bom. 702.
(4) A. I. R. 1922 All. 390=44 All. 174.

really an agreement to adjust, the Court could not take notice of such an alleged agreement to adjust even if it could take notice of an adjustment. It seems to me that the Civil Procedure Code is not exhaustive and an adjustment might be proved unless there was something to bar its proof. There is no reason why the ordinary rule of law should not apply and why a party should not be able to prove such an adjustment. Under O. 23, R. 3, if the decree-holder had brought a suit instead of putting in an application to execute the decree against the surety and the surety had alleged that a compromise had taken place, the surety could have proved such a compromise. It is at present impossible to decide whether the so-called compromise was an adjustment or an agreement to adjust or what difference that fact would make in the case. I, therefore, allow the surety to put in such proof as he likes as to the alleged compromise. The Court should before proceeding to take evidence record in detail what the statement of the surety as to the place and the time and the terms of the compromise is. After taking all the evidence both as to the illness of the judgment-debtor and as to the terms of the compromise, if any, the Court will proceed to decide the case. I leave it open to the Court to decide whether the agreement to adjust, as distinct from adjustment, can or cannot be proved and I leave it open to the Court to decide whether, on the facts proved as to the illness of the judgment-deb or, the surety's conduct is or is not excusable.

I accept the appeal and remand the case to the trial Court for disposal. As both sides have succeeded to some extent, I make no order as to costs, which will throughout this case abide the event.

Shambu Lal for M. L. Puri—for Appellants.

Sain Das—for Respondents.

Jai Lal, J.—This is an appeal by Azim, Jalal and Gulab, the vendee-defendants, in a suit for pre-emption.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that Azim appellant has died and that his legal representatives not having been substituted in his place within the time fixed for the purpose, the appeal has abated. An affidavit has, however, been filed by counsel for the appellants from which it appears that Jalal and Gulab, the two remaining appellants, are the sole heirs of Azim. We, therefore, hold that the right to appeal survives in favour of Jalal and Gulab and overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits the only ground taken before us is that the plaintiff had waived his right to sue for pre-emption, the other ground that the suit was barred under O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. having been expressly abandoned.

It appears that the land in suit was originally mortgaged to the appellants for Rs. 1,000 on the 25th February 1920. It was then mortgaged to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,800 on 3rd January 1921. Rs. 1,000 out of this were to be paid to the appellants in satisfaction of the mortgage of the 25th February 1920. Then it was sold to the appellants on 20th of April 1921. On 8th February 1922 the plaintiff instituted a suit for redemption of the mortgage of the 26th February 1920, in his capacity as a puisne mortgagee by virtue of the mortgage dated 3rd January 1921, and apparently succeeded. Thereafter he instituted the present suit for pre-emption.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that in the redemption suit the plaintiff, not having mentioned in the plaint that he reserved his right to pre-empt the sale which had taken place in favour of the defendants before the date of that suit, is now estopped from pre-empting the sale, and reliance is placed in support of this contention on Bawa Lehna Singh v. Jagan Nath (1) and Chandras v. Itbar Khan (2). In both these cases the plaintiffs were mortgagees of the land sold and instituted suits against the vendees for recovery of the amount due to them as mortgagees. The liability of the defendants was based on the sales in their favour which were subsequently sought to be pre-empted. It was held by the Chief Court that the plaintiffs having sued to recover the mortgage debt from the vendees accepted the validity of the sales and were, therefore, estopped from denying it in the pre-emption suits. The facts in the present case are quite different. In the previous suit for redemption of the mortgage instituted by the plaintiff the liability of the defendants was based on the mortgage-deed in their favour on the 26th February 1920. They were not, either expressly or impliedly admitted to be the owners of the land, but were sued merely as mortgagees. There is no provision of law which requires the plaintiff under the circumstances mentioned above to reserve, in the plaint, any other rights that he may possess by virtue of separate transactions or causes of action. Holding that there has been no waiver of the plaintiff's right to pre-empt the sale in question. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

* Criminal P. C., Ss. 118 and 123 (2) — Security not given immediately—Accused sent to jail — Security offered afterwards—Magistrate can accept.

A man was ordered by a Magistrate of the first class under S. 118 to give security for his good behaviour under S. 110 for a period of three years. He failed to furnish security then and there and he accordingly was ordered to be detained in prison, pending the orders of the Sessions Judge. A day or so later he offered security to the Magistrate who accepted it and he was released from jail.

Held : that the Magistrate can accept security. A reasonable view of the matter should be taken as there is nothing in the Act, clearly indicating what should be done if security is offered to the Magistrate after he has referred the matter to the Sessions Judge and before the latter has heard the reference. The purpose of the security sections is not that the persons proceeded against should be sent to or kept in jail but that should only be done when they are unable to give security.

Held : further that reference to the Sessions Judge automatically ends with the acceptance of security by the Magistrate. [P 65 C 1]

Order.—This is a case reported by the Sessions Judge of Delhi, one Muhammad Akbar was ordered by a Magistrate of the first class under S. 118, Criminal P. C., to give security for his good behaviour under S. 110, Criminal P. C., for a period of three years. Muhammad Akbar failed to furnish security then and there and he accordingly was ordered to be detained in prison, pending the orders of the Sessions Judgr, in accordance with the provisions of S. 123 (2), Criminal P. C. A day or so later he offered security to the Magistrate who accepted it and he was released from jail. This came to the notice of the learned Sessions Judge when he was hearing the reference. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to accept the security after making the reference to him and he had accordingly forwarded the proceedings of the Magistrate to this Court with the recommendation that the Magistrate's order accepting the security be quashed and Muhammad Akbar be ordered to be re-arrested and detained in prison, pending the orders of the Sessions Judge on the reference.

Sub-S. (1), S. 123, Criminal P. C., directs that in cases where security is demanded up to the limit of one year and security is not given the person ordered to give security shall be committed to prison until the security is given or the period fixed expires. Sub-S. (2) provides that where security for a period exceeding one year is demanded from a person the Magistrate shall, if security is not given, issue a warrant directing him to be detained in prison, pending the orders of the Sessions Judge before whom the proceedings shall be laid. Sub-S. (3) lays down that the Sessions Judge after examining the proceedings may pass such orders as he thinks fit. Finally, sub-S. (4) is to the effect that if security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail he shall forthwith refer the matter to the Court or Magistrate who made the order and shall await the orders of such Court or Magistrate.

The argument of the learned Government Advocate was that it follows from the fact that sub-S. (4) comes after both sub-Ss. (1) and (2) that it is left to the Magistrate who made the order to deal with the security offered in both cases when such security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail. What corresponded to sub-S. (4) in the old Code of 1882 came at the end of what is now sub-S. (1). According to him the change effected in the later Code was a clear indication that it was intended that the Magistrate should still take security even though the matter had been referred to the Sessions Judge if such security was offered before the Sessions Judge dealt with the case. The matter is not free from difficulty and it must be said that there is nothing in the Act clearly indicating what should be done if security is offered to the Magistrate after he has referred the matter to the Sessions Judge and before the latter has heard the reference. It must be a common occurrence that sureties are only available a day or two later. In my judgment, therefore, a reasonable view of the matter should be taken. The purpose of the security sections is not that the persons proceeded against should be sent to or kept in jail but that that should only be done when they are unable to give security. I do not think that it was intended that persons should remain in jail possibly for months while the Sessions Judge owing to pressure of work was unable to deal with their cases. It must have been meant that they could offer security to the Magistrate when they were able to procure it and in this way get out of jail. That implies that the reference to the Sessions Judge, if not disposed of, would automatically come to an end when security is taken In my judgment this is the most responsible and convenient view to take, seeing that there is no specific provision of the Code dealing with this matter. At the same time it follows that the right of appeal given under S 406, Criminal P. C., to the person from whom security is demanded is revived once he has given security and in the present case if an appeal is preferred the fact that Muhammad Akbar has been engaged in these proceedings should be taken into account by the Court or Magistrate hearing the appeal if one is preferred.

For the reasons given I decline to set aside the proceedings of the Magistrate accepting security and hold that the reference to the Sessions Judge automatically ended when Muhammad Akbar gave security to the Magistrate a day or two after he was ordered so to do, and at the same time that the right of appeal which was in abeyance by reason of the reference revived when he gave security.

In the matter of Mehta Krishan Chandra, Pleader.

Civ. Misc. No. 223 of 1927, Decided on 22nd April 1927, on reference by Dist. J. Multan, on 19th February 1927.

Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879), S. 13 (a)—Pleader drafting complaint for complainant in one case and acting for accused in a different case instituted by same complainant — No offence is committed.

A pleader was consulted by the complainant and he drafted a complaint on his behalf relating to incidents that occurred on a certain date. Later on in a case instituted by the same complainant in connexion with a incident of a different date against the same accused, the pleader not being engaged by the complainant appeared and defended the persons charged.

Held: that he did not commit any breach of S. 13 : 2 P. R. 1904, Dist. [P 66 C 1]

Moti Sagar and Mehr Chand Mahajan —for Respondent.

Order

Broadway, J.—Lala Krishan Chand, a pleader, practising in Multan, has been reported to this Court by the learned District Judge for having committed an offence under the Legal Practitioners Act. It is said that he is guilty of an offence under S. 13 (a), Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 in, that having been engaged by the complainant in certain criminal proceedings he subsequently appeared for some of the persons accused at a later stage of those proceedings. The learned District Judge has found that the complaint which led him to make an enquiry into the conduct of this pleader was clearly the outcome of personal spite and party feeling. He also appears to have found that the main story told by the complainant was false. Nevertheless. on general grounds he appears to have thought that the pleader should be censured and has placed reliance on Ali Muhammad v. Sham Lal (1). In my judgment the facts of that case are quite different from those of the present one. Here all that the complainant has been able to establish is that he had asked the pleader to draft a certain complaint relating to incidents that occurred on 4th September 1925. The complaint itself is cast in very general terms, the names of the parties are not given in it, nor even the date of the occurrence. The proceedings that took place later related to an incident that was alleged to have occurred on 20th November 1925, so that the complaint drafted by the pleader had clearly nothing whatever to do with the proceedings in which he later appeared. The learned District Judge thinks that the complainant must, in the course of consultation have disclosed certain matters relating to title to the pleader. It is not easy to understand what these matters could have been. In any event in my judgment no breach of S. 13 (a), Legal Practitioneas Act has been committed by the pleader. All that appears to have happened is that he was consulted by the complainant, who later on did not think fit to engage him to prosecute the case instituted by him in connexion with a totally different incident. In these circumstances had the pleader appeared and defended the persons charged throughout the case he would not, in my judgment, have committed any breach of the Legal Practitioners Act and no further action is necessary.

Addison, J.—I agree.

C. H. Carden Noad—for Appellaut.

S. R. Laul—for Respondent.

Order.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Hissar Division acquitting the respondent, Walli Muhammad, who was convicted of an offence under S. 161, I. P. C., and sentenced to one years's rigorous imprisonment by the District Magistrate, Gurgaon. The learned Sessions Judge has disposed of the appeal, which had been preferred by the respondent, Walli Muhammad, on a purely legal ground and has ordered his acquittal.

Walli Muhammad, the respondent, was a foot-constable in the Gurgaon District. It is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that he received a currency note of Rs. 100 from one Sohan Lal as illegal gratification. The Deputy Superintendent of Police made a report to the Superintendent of Police about Wali Muhammad's misconduct as a police officer and the Superintendent of Police on the 12th December 1924, submitted the following note to the District Magistrate:

I send these papers to you for information. Foot constable Wali Muhammad is accused of taking Rs. 100 from one Sohan Lal of police station Puhana who was suspected of complicity in tbe Jainarain murder case. The offence against Wali Muhammad is clear. I, therefore, suggest that a judicial enquiry should be held against him under S. 161/165, I. P. C. The note of Rs. 100 is attached with these papers in an envelope bearing on both ends of one side my initials.

On receipt of this note the District Magistrate passed an order in Urdu which may be translated as follows:

The case may be entered in the register. Witnesses and the accused may be called by means of summons for the 14th January 1925, dated the 13th December 1924.

On appeal to the learned Sessions Judge, the counsel for Walli Mohammad raised the objection that as a result of communication addressed by the Superintendent of Police to the District Magistrate, the latter could only punish Walli Mohammad departmentaly but could not take any action against him under the general penal laws. This contention found favour with the learned Sessions Judge who put a certain construction upon S. 190, Criminal P. C., quashed the conviction and sentence and acquitted the appellant without going into the merits of the case.

The sole question, therefore, in appeal is whether the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is correct or not. It may be observed here that before the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act, 1923, the language of Cl. (b), S. 190 (1) was "upon a police report of such facts". By the Criminal Procedure Amendment Act 1923, an organic change was introduced in S. 190, Criminal P. C., and Cl. (b), S. 190 (1) now runs thus:

> Upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer.

This had a very important bearing upon the matter under consideration. As S. 161, I. P. C., refers to a non-cognizable offence the argument on behalf of the respondent is to the effect that a police officer could only make a report of a cognizable offence and that he was not empowered under the law to make a report in a non-cognizable case. In other words, the word "report" as used in the amended clause of S. 190, should be interpreted as meaning "police report" in spite of the change in the phraseology introduced by the amendment and that the words "police report" should be construed as meaning technically the report on a cognizable offence. The learned Government Advocate, on the other hand, argued that this interpretation was no longer possible, having regard to the alteration in Cl. (b) the word "report" not being limited or restricted as meaning "police report", as the words occur in the various sections of Ch. 14, e. g., S. 173.

There has been considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the subject and reference was made during the course of the argument to a number of cases. It is unfortunate that, although the appeal was argued on the 7th and again on the 10th November 1927, the learned Government Advocate did not invite the attention of the Court to the Full Bench decision reported in Public Prosecutor v. Ratnavelu Chetty (1), as this would have shortened the discussion very considerably. It was only a mere accident that the attention of the Court was drawn to this important decision after the arguments had been over. The learned Government Advocate referred to Dilan Singh v. Emperor (2). That case does not seem to have any direct bearing upon the matter in controversy and need not be discussed. The case reported in Mehr Chiragh Din v. Emperor (3) though it does not meet the real point in controversy, yet has some bearing upon the question before us. In this case, at the instance of the Superintendent of Police., the Sub-Inspector filed a document which purported to be a complaint, though it was not addressed to any particular officer, and the Sub-Inspector was not examined under the provisions of S. 200, Criminal P. C. It was held that this defect of the Sub-Inspector not having been examined under the law, as it stood before the amendment, was cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C, seeing that the accused did not suffer any injury, and it was also held that the document filed by the Sub-Inspector was to all intents and purposes a complaint.

The case of Bhairab Chandra v. Emperor (4), was also relied upon. The importance of that decision lies in the fact that, although it was given before the amendment of the year 1923, the learned Judges placed a liberal construction upon the language of S. 190 and held that a "police-report" in a non-cognizable case is either a "complaint" under S. 4 (h) or a "police report" within S. 190 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence disclosed by that report, although the offence may be a non-cognizable one.

Then we come to the case reported in Bholanath Das v. Emperor (5). This case was decided after the amendment of the year 1923, and the learned Judges held that > the provisions of S. 190 extend to any offence and notwithstanding the use of the words "police report" in S. 173, S. 190 (1) (b) cannot be restricted merely to non-cognizable offences, and a Magistrate is empowered by S. 190 (1) (b) to take cognizance both in cognizable and non-cognizable offences, upon a report such as is mentioned in S. 190 (1) (b)

Two more cases were cited by the learned Government Advocate during the course of the argument, namely, Chandri

Bawoo v. Emperor (6) and Lee v. Adhikary (7). The case reported in Chandri Bawoo v. Emperor (6) was decided after the amendment of the year 1923, but the circumstances of that case are peculiar, seeing that the question decided in that case depended largely upon the scope and meaning of certain local Acts and cannot be considered as an exposition of the meaning of S. 190 (1) (b) which may be of general importance. The case in Lee v. Adhikary (7), does not seem to have any bearing upon the question under consideration.

Emperor v. Ghulam Hussain (8) is very important and instructive. It was a case decided after the amendment of the year 1923, and the learned Judges observed as follows:

> Now S. 190 of the Code is, and intended to be very wide. It empowers a Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence in almost every conceivable set of circumstances.

The matter, however, seems to be definitely settled by the Full Bench decision reported in the Public Prosecutor v. Ratnavelu Chetty (1), which, as already stated, was not cited by the Government Advocate. I may observe that during the course of the argument I referred to the provisions of S. 529, Criminal P. C., and observed that, even when a Magistrate is not empowered by law to take cognizance of an offence under S. 190, Sub-S. (1), Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) on the ground that he was not competent to receive from the police the report of a non-cognizable offence, the defect could be cured if he acted in good faith and the proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground that he had not power under the law to entertain the report. I am glad to find that my view finds full support in the judgment of the Full Bench, which lays down, among other things, that the law requires that the Magistrate, who takes cognizance of an offence under S. 190, Sub-S. (1), Cl. (a) or Cl. (b) without having jurisdiction, should only act in good faith, though erroneously, to make his proceedings valid. It further lays down that S. 190 (1) (b) authorizes certain Magistrates to take cognizance of any offence upon a report in writing of facts which constitute such offence made by any police officer, and S. 200 (aa) provides that, where a public servant, acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties, makes a complaint of an offence, nothing shall require the Magistrate to examine him before taking cognizance of the offence. This Full Bench decision fully covers the question raised in the present appeal, and I follow the same, as well as the care reported in Bholanth Das v. Emperor (5).

On behalf of the respondent a certain number of cases were cited, e. g., V. O. Chidambaram Pillai v. Emperor (9), Perumal Naick v. Emperor A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 672; Ram Lal v. Emperor (10) and Sarferaz Khan v. Emperor (11).

V. O. Chidambaram Pillai v. Emperor (9), does not seem to have any direct bearing upon the present case as it merely lays down that, where a police officer files a complaint in a non-cognizable case or regarding an offence of which it is not his duty to report, such complaint is a complaint within S. 4 (b), Criminal P. C., and is not a police report. The case reported in Perumal Naick v. Emperor A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 672 consists of a very short judgment in which there is no discussion of any principles of law or reference to any reported case. Ram Lal v. Emperor (10) was a case under the old law and cannot be invoked in aid as an authority, having regard to the alteration in the section introduced by the Legislature in 1923. Sarferaz Khan v. Emperor (11) is a case which really supports the contention of the Crown. In that case Knox, J., held that reports of investigations made by the police into non-cognizable offences under orders of a Magistrate passed under S. 155 (2) fell under S. 173, and that Magistrates could take cognizance of the cases upon receiving such a police report.

I may note that the Full Bench case reported in King-Emperor v. Sada (12), has also been discussed before us. That case lays down that, where a police officer of his own motion makes a report in a non-cognizable case, it is not a police report as there is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which empowers a police officer to make such a report.

Having regard to the change introduced in S. 190, Criminal P. C,, this case loses all its importance as an authority.

Thus we see that the weight of authority after the amendment of the law, is entirely in favour of the Crown. This being so, the order of the learned Sessions Judge cannot be maintained. I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge and, as the case had been disposed of on a purely technical ground and the evidence had not been gone into, I would remand the case for decision on the merits.

Held: that it amounted to giving evidence by reference and was not justified. [P 69 C 2]

M. Sleem—for Appellants.

Judgment.—Bhag Singh and Dhara Singh, sons of Wadhawa Singh, and one Balwant Singh, have been found guilty of having caused grievous hurt to one Karam Singh and under S. 325, I. P. C., Bhag Singh and Balwant Singh have been sentenced to seven years rigorous imprisonment and Dhara Singh to one year's rigorous imprisonment. They have appealed to this Court and on behalf of Karam Singh an application for enhancement of sentence has been filed.

On behalf of the appellants it has been urged by Mr. Sleem that in the case of Dhara Singh, a boy of 15 years of age, the charge did not specify that he was guilty under S. 325, I. P. C., by the operation of S. 34 of the same Code. Further he has contended that the evidence on the record, so far as it implicated him, at any rate, was exceedingly weak.

Taking the case of Dhara Singh first, a reference to the record shows that the police sent up only Bhag Singh and Balwant Singh in the first instance and it appears that Dhara Singh was made an accused under orders of the Court after the case commenced. It is true that Karam Singh, the injured person, implicates Dhara Singh attributing to him, however, a very minor part. He says that while he was riding home from Chunian he met Dhara Singh walking along the road and on his enquiry was told that he was going to Chunian and that this Dhara Singh caught the reins of his mare and immediately afterwards the other two appellants came from behind a ber tree and attacked him. The witnesses for the prosecution other than Karam Singh named all three appellants but, after a careful consideration of that evidence, we cannot ignore the circumstance that as a result of that investigation Dhara Singh was not sent up for trial. This raises in our mind so serious a doubt as to his complicity that we feel compelled to give him the benefit of this doubt. So far as he is concerned, therefore, we set aside his conviction and direct his release.

In the case of the two other appellants the position was somewhat different from the outset. They had been named as having taken a very active part in the assault. Karam Singh has sworn that both his arms and both his legs were broken and that he spent three months in the hospital at Chunian and two months in the hospital at Lahore. Mr. Sleem has pointed out that the trying Magistrate has been grossly slack in recording the evidence of the Doctor, Captain K. S. Bhatia. A reference to the record discloses that instead of recording the statement describing the injuries that Karam Singh had received, all that the trying Magistrate thought fit to record was a brief statement to the effect that Captain Bhatia had examined Karam Singh and that the injuries found on his person and their nature were given in detail in Ex. PB. In order to ascertain those injuries it would be necessary to refer to Ex. PB. In other words, this is giving evidence by reference which, in our opinion, is not justified. The attention of the trying Magistrate is drawn to Lal Singh v. Emperor (1). The statement as recorded, however, does bear out

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 19=5 Lah. 396.

Karam Singh's allegation that he was for three months in the Chunian hospital as a result of the injuries received by him and that his condition was dangerous owing to the multiplicity of those injuries. We, therefore, feel satisfied that the injuries caused to Karam Singh amounted to grievous hurt.

We are also convinced that these injuries were caused by the two appellants, Bhag Singh and Balwant Singh. It is true that the defence set up consists of the statements of two sweepers to the effect that they were responsible for the grievous hurt, but we find ourselves in agreement with the view taken of this evidence by the Court below and regard it as worthless.

It has next been urged that the punishment awarded is the maximum prescribed for the offence. In our opinion it would be difficult to find a more appropriate case for the awarding of the maximum sentence.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal of Bhag Singh and Balwant Singh.

Badri Das—for Appellant.

Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous first appeal against an order refusing an application for execution by the alleged assignee of a part of a decree. Nobody has appeared in this Court on behalf of the respondents who opposed the application successfully in the Court below, and the appeal had been heard exparte. The facts are as below:

A lady of the name of Lajwanti, joining with herself Jaswant Rai and others as co-plaintiffs, brought a suit for possession of certain lands left by her father. Jashwant Rai and the other plaintiffs were strangers to her but they had undertaken to finance the litigation and in consideration for that she had assigned two-fifths of the property in suit to them. The suit was dismissed by the Chief Court, but the plaintiffs appealed successfully to the Privy Council and obtained a decree on 29th January 1924.* That decree was, however, amended by the Judicial Committee on 19th March 1925 † and according to that amendment the suit was decreed in favour of Mt. Lajwanti alone to the exclusion of Jaswant Rai and other plaintiffs. Their Lordships pronounced judgment in favour of Mt. Lajwanti, but with the addition that the judgment was to be without prejudice to the appellants other than Mt. Lajwanti to recover in respect of any conveyance or assignment made or of any contract to convey or assign such share of the property recovered under the judgment as may appertain to them in respect of such conveyance, assignment or contract.

Jaswant Rai then brought a suit for a declaration that he and certain other persons who were impleaded as defendants 8 to 16 were entitled to two-fifths of the property according to the award of 1922 or in the alternative for a declaration and injunction that the other defendants including Mt. Lajwanti should not realize the produce of the two-fifths of the property which belonged to the plaintiff and defendants 8 to 16. Defendants 8 to 16 were co-plaintiffs in the former suit but the real defendants in the former suit were not made defendants in this case. Jaswant Rai and the lady eventually came to terms which were reduced to writing and the compromise thus entered into was filed in Court and a decree followed embodying the terms of the compromise. Jaswant Rai and the lady then jointly made an application for execution of the decree of His Majesty in Council, but soon after that the lady and Jaswant

Rai fell out again and she refused to proceed with her application for execution stating that she had been the victim of a fraud, and that there was no valid assignment of the decree to Jaswant Rai.

The executing Court came to the following conclusions:

(1) That the alleged fraud was not proved.

(2) That as the compromise went beyond the scope of the suit, so much of the consent decree as was not within the ambit of the suit must be ignored.

(3) That though according to the compromise, two-fifths of the decree were assigned, and Jaswant Rai was empowered to take possession of two-fifths of the property by taking out execution jointly with Mt. Lajwanti, this was beyond ths scope of the suit and could not be given effect to. (Here it was observed by the Court below that the compromise was not registered but it did not say that it was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration).

(4) That as the assignee of a part of the decree Jaswant Rai had no power to apply for execution.

Conclusions Nos. (2) and (3) do not appear to be sound. There was no denying the fact that the lady made the assignment and as it was reduced to writing and embodied in a decree. It fulfilled the necessary conditions and fell within the purview of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C. Further it is clear that it did not require registration because it had been incorporated in a decree and also because the assignment of a decree, though the decree should be for possession of immovable property, is not equivalent to a transfer of property. In Gous Mahomed v. Khawas Ali Khan (1), a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that S. 17 (b), Registration Act, 1877, does not apply to a kabala or deed of assignment of a decree and an unregistered kabala of a decree dealing with immovable property of more than Rs. 100 in value is not admissible is evidence under S. 49 of that Act. The same view was taken by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Mumtaz Ahmad v. Sri Ram (2): see also Lashkari v. Johar (3).

Number(4) was based on Mohkam Chand v. Ganga Ram (4). In that case Sir Donald Johnstone, Chief Judge of the Punjab Chief Court, held that the transferee of a part of a decree has no power at all to apply for execution and that O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., applies when the whole of a decree has been transferred. This view was opposed to that of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts as expressed in Venkataramaniah v. Venkatachainulu (5) and Kishore Chand Bhakat v. Gisborne & Co. (6), which were brought to the notice of the learned Chief Judge, Sir Donald Johnstone, but were not followed. These Madras, Calcutta and Panjab cases were cited before a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Sahai v. Madan Lal Kanhaiya Lal (7) and Walsh, J., made the following observations at p. 348 (49 of A. I. R.—Ed.) in respect thereof:

I, therefore, take the view that it was wrong to say that this rule (R. 16) does not apply to an assignment by mortgage or to any transfer which has the effect of conferring upon the transferee or assignee a merely fractional interest in a decree and I am confirmed in this view by the fact, as I have already stated, that in Calcutta and Madras this question has been settled for nearly 30 years. I refer to Kishore Chand Bhakat v. Gisborne & Co. (6) and Venkataramaniah v. Venkatachainulu (5). These cases, I think, rightly draw attention to the fact that there was no prohibition in the Code to which reference can be made making such an application as this one which has no legal foundation, and in both cases the Judges were careful to point out that it was for the execution Court below to consider, with all the parties before it, the respective rights of each. These are the two cases to which the Chief Justice of the Punjab referred in Mohkam Chand v. Ganga Ram (4) without suggesting, although he was deciding against the applicant that there was any doubt as to the soundness of the decisions.

On this very point a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held as follows in Muthiah Chettiar v. Govinddoss Krishnadoss (8).

Section 146, Civil P. C., recognizes the validity of a transfer of a part of a decree and execution thereof by the transferee. O. 21, R. 16 is no bar to the application of the section. Such transferee is like a joint decree-holder and can, under O. 21, R. 15, protect his rights either by executing the decree himself or by joining or intervening in the execution by his transferor.

Thus there is an overwhelming weight of authority against the view taken in Mohkam Chand v. Ganga Ram (4), and after a careful consideration of all the rulings I come to the conclusion that the transferee of a part of decree is competent to apply for execution thereof. I, Cri. Revn. No. 917 of 1926, Decided on 3rd March 1927 from the order of the Sess. J. Hissar, D/- 12th May 1926.

Criminal P. C., S. 197 — Complaint against Municipal Commissioner alleging undue influence by him on a sub-overseer stopping him to purchase bricks from certain person and compelling him to assent for purchasing bricks from accused—Sanction is not necessary.

Where a complaint was filed against a person, a member of the Municipal Committee, alleging that he had, by reason of his position as Municipal Commissioner and member of the Public Works Sub-Committee, exercised undue influence upon a sub-overseer, a servant of the Committee, and had stopped that sub-overseer from purchasing bricks from a certain person and compelled him to give his assent to the purchase of the accused's bricks:

Held: that as the complaint did not allege that the accused obtained this advantage to himself by acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty as a Municipal Commissioner or a member of the Sub-Committee, the case did not fall within the provisions of S. 197 and that therefore sanction was not required for his prosecution. Referring Order.

Campbell, J.—The point which arises in this revision petition is one which, I think, should be decided by a Division Bench. The question concerns the interpretation of S. 197, Criminal P. C., which in its present form is different from the previous section under which the Punjab rulings Bakshi Ram v. Ganpat Rai (1), Nur Bakhsh v. Emperor (2) and Amir Singh v. Empress (3) were delivered. S. 197 prohibits a Court from taking cognizance of any offence which a person is alleged, in a complaint, to have committed while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. In the present instance a certain person Kanshi Ram filed a complaint against Muhammad Ismail, a member of the Municipal Committee, Sirsa, alleging that he had by reason of his position as Municipal Commissioner and member of the Public Works Sub-Committee exercised undue influence upon a sub-overseer, a servant of the Committee, and had compelled him to give him, the accused, a contract for bricks to be supplied to the Municipal Committee. The Magistrate to whom this complaint was presented did not record the statement of the complainant but issued process to the accused under S. 168, I. P. C., and S. 48, Punjab Municipal Act. Subsequently the Magistrate framed a charge against the accused under these sections. Objection to the want of sanction under S. 197 was taken as soon as the accused came into Court. Later on, after the charge had been framed, the objection was repeated in a petition to the Sessions Judge who in repelling it treated the matter as if the solution lay in the contents of the charge. It seems to me, however, that the point is, what was alleged in the complaint, since S. 197 prohibits a Court not from framing a charge but from taking cognizance of an offence alleged.

Under the former section the offence excluded from cognizance was one of which a public servant was accused as a "public servant" and under that section it would seem that no complaint against a Municipal Commissioner under S. 168, I. P. C., could have been proceeded with unless the sanction of the Local Government had been obtained. It is argued that the same is the spirit of the new section, but the actual words of that section now are:

> any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties.

It is desirable to have an authoritative interpretation of these words and I therefore refer the case to a Division Bench.

Judgment.—The only question in this revision is whether the complaint alleges that the petitioner has committed an offence while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty as a member of the Municipal Committee and of a Building Sub-Committee. This is a pure question of fact. According to the complaint itself the petitioner is alleged, by exercising undue influence on a sub-overseer, to have stopped that sub-overseer from purchasing bricks from a certain Din Mohammad, and to have compelled him to give his assent to the purchase of the petitioner's bricks. The complaint does not allege that the petitioner obtained this advantage to himself by acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty as a Municipal Commissioner or a member of the Sub-Committee. In fact the suggestion in the complaint is that taking advantage of the fact that he was a member of the Municipal Committee and of the Sub-Committee, he went outside his official duty altogether to obtain this contract himself. We are of opinion that on the particular facts of this case it does not fall within the provisions of S. 197, Criminal P. C., and that, therefore, sanction is not required for a prosecution. Had it been alleged that the petitioner in obtaining this contract held himself out to be acting as a member of the Sub-Committee or of the Municipal Committee, then the question would arise whether or not sanction to prosecute would be necessary. Upon the facts of this case in our judgment no sanction is required and the petition must accordingly be rejected, and the orders for stay discharged.

Sundar Das—for Appellants.

Jai Gopal Sethi—for Respondent.

Fforde, J.—This was a mortgagee's suit to realize the capital and interest secured by certain mortgages by sale of the mortgaged property. Judgment was given for the plaintiff on 15th October 1925, and a preliminary decree made on the same date. On 24th November 1925 the final decree was made and on 5th December 1925, the present appeal was brought against the judgment and decree of 15th October 1925, but no appeal was brought against the final decree of 24th November 1925.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi for the plaintiff respondent has raised the preliminary objection that the appeal is not competent, as there is no appeal against the final decree and the period of limitation has long passed for the presentation of such an appeal. Mr. Sethi has referred to Ganga Ram. v. Sundar Lal (1), in which Broadway J., following Mackenzie v. Narsing Sahai (2), Kuria Mal v. Bishambar Das, (3), and Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4), held that, where a final decree had been passed, an appeal against the preliminary decree only was incompetent.

Mr. Sethi cited another decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kulada Prosad v. Ramananda (5), which as is the case here, was an appeal by the defendant in a mortgage suit. In that case a preliminary decree was made on 15th January 1920, and the appeal lodged in the High Court on 21st April 1920. In the interval, namely, on 16th March, 1920, the final decree had been made. The appeal to the High Court, however, was directed only against the preliminary decree and not against the final decree. On an objection being taken that the appeal in those circumstances was incompetent, the Court held the objection was "manifestly well founded on principle" for the reason that if the preliminary decree were to be reversed against the appellant the final decree would still remain unaffected, as no attempt had been made to challenge its propriety. The Court distinguished the case of Abdul Jalil v. Amar Chand Paul (6), [erroneously referred to in the report as Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4),] where the final decree was made after the appeal had been preferred against the preliminary decree. In those circumstances it was held that the final decree must be deemed to have been made on the assumption that if the preliminary decree should be modified or set aside in the appeal, the final decree also would be similarly modified or set aside.

In Mackenzie v. Narsing Sahai (2), a decision by a Division Bench, it was held that, where in a partition suit a final decree had been made and an appeal preferred against the preliminary decree only, it was not open to the appellant to challenge the correctness of the preliminary decree without preferring an appeal against the final decree.

Mr. Sundar Das for the appellants has relied upon Ramuvien v. Veerappudayan (7), in which it was held that it is competent to a party to prefer an appeal against the preliminary decree in a redemption suit though before the appeal was presented the final decree had been passed. The Court followed the decision in Lakshmi v. Maru Devi (8), where it was held that the right of a party to appeal against a preliminary decree was not affected by the subsequent passing of the final decree.

Kanhaiya Lal v. Tirbani Sahai (9), is to the same effect. It was held that when an appeal had once been filed and was pending against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition, the passing of a final decree did not render the appeal nugatory, the Court holding that the final decree depended upon the preliminary decree, and if, as the result of an appeal, the latter was set aside, the former must fall with it.

To the same effect is the decision of LeRossignol, J. in Ramditta v. Maru and others: A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 534, namely that it is not necessary to appeal against a final decree when the preliminary decree on which it is based has been set aside on appeal. In that case the final decree was made during the pendency of the appeal from the preliminary decree.

In Chandulal Maganlal v. Motilal Harilal : A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 43, a Division Bench held that :

> when an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed in the lower Court, without any appeal being filed therefrom the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal against the decree absolute, or in any event to inform the Court, when the appeal agaist the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a decree absolute has been made.

Macleod, C. J. dealt with the question as follows :

> The actual legal position, when an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed in the lower Court without any appeal being filed therefrom, is somewhat obscure. It seems to me that the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal on the file against the decree absolute, or in any event to inform the Court, when the appeal against the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a decree absolute has been made. It may not be that the appeal Court is debarred from hearing the appeal from the preliminary decree merely on account of the Court below having passed a final decree. But to avoid the difficulties which may arise when no application has been made for stay of proceedings, it would certainly be desirable that, in any case where a preliminary decree is passed and a party appeals against that decree, when the Court below has passed a final decree he should file an appeal against that decree.

A Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Mt. Wahidunnissa v. Dip Narain Pershad (10), held that, where an appeal had been filed against the preliminary decree and a final decree was made thereafter, despite the objection of the appellant that the final decree should not have been made until the appeal had been disposed of, the appeal against the preliminary decree was competent. Chamier, C. J. distinguished the decisions in Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (4), and Sadhu Charan Datta v. Hara Nath Datta (11), on the ground that in these latter cases the final decree had been passed before an appeal against the preliminary decree was filed.

I have been referred to no authority in which the Court has permitted an appeal against the preliminary decree filed after the final decree has been passed, following what appears to me to be the trend of judicial opinion, I am of opinion that the present appeal, having been presented after both the preliminary and final decrees were made, against the preliminary decree only, is not competent, and I would accordingly, accepting the respondent's objection dismiss this appeal with costs.

Zafar Ali, J.—I agree.

Megh Raj—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Baz Khan—Complainant—Respondent.

Misc. Criminal Case No. 13 of 1927, Decided on 7th March 1927, for quashing the proceedings and alternately to transfer the case from the Court of Mag., 2nd Cl., Chakwal.

Criminal P. C., S. 528—Pleader of accused communicating to him that Magistrate had told him that he would convict the accused—Warrant issed in summons case—Case was transferred.

Where one of the accused was informed by his pleader that the Magistrate had told him that he would convict the persons accused unless they compromised a certain civil suit with the complainant,

Held: that this communication by the pleader whether the message was in fact given by the Magistrate or not coupled with the fact that a warrant was issued in a summons case in the first instance was sufficient to deprive the accused of all confidence in the impartiality of the Magistrate and that the case should be transferred. [P 76 C 1]

G. C. Narang—for Petitioner.

Order.—Megh Raj and Beli Ram, petitioners, obtained a decree for possession of certain land against Baz Khan, respondent, on 3rd May 1926, from the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum. They took out execution of this decree, and, on 10th July 1926, the process server and the patwari reported that possession of the land decreed had been made over to the decree-holders. It was stated in the report that Ghulam Hussain, servant of the decree-holders, was present at the time of delivery of possession.

On 28th July 1928 Baz Khan, the judgment-debtor, instituted a complaint under S. 447, I. P. C., against Megh Raj and Beli Ram, decree-holders, and Malak, son of Ghulam Hussain, their servant, alleging that the accused persons had taken possession of certain land which had not been awarded to them by the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge. This complaint was dismissed by Malik Ahmad Khan, Naib Tahsildar, on 4th August 1926, under S. 203, Criminal P. C., the learned Magistrate remarking that the dispute between the parties appeared to be of a civil nature.

On 11th August 1926, Baz Khan instituted another complaint under S. 447 against Megh Raj, Beli Ram, decree-holders, and Malak. This complaint was originally instituted in the Court of the Assistant Commissioner, Chakwal, and was transferred by him to the Tahsildar Magistrate at Chakwal, for disposal. In this complaint the same facts were alleged as in the former complaint and it was specifically stated that the previous complaint had been rejected by the Naib Tahsildar without proper enquiry. The Tahsildar, after recording the statement of the complainant and two of his witnesses issued a bailable warrant against the accused persons. The case proceeded before the Tahsildar for a number of hearings, when on 10th December 1926 the accused filed an application under S. 528, Criminal P. C., before the District Magistrate, Jhelum, for transfer of the case. This application was rejected the same day.

On 6th January 1927, Megh Raj accused presented an application to this Court through Dr. Narang praying (a) that as the prosecution was malicious and frivolous the proceedings be quashed; (b) or, in any event, the case may be transferred from the Court of the Tahsildar Magistrate to that of any other Court of competent jurisdiction. This application was admitted by Harrison, J., on 14th January 1927, and has come up for final disposal before me to-day.

After hearing Dr. Narang at length I am of opinion that it will not be proper for me, sitting as a Court of revision to quash the proceedings at this stage. From the record it is clear that the case is nearly complete. Under the circumstances I think it is in the interests of justice that a Magistrate should form his own opinion on the facts that have been disclosed on the record. I, therefore, reject the first prayer in the application.

But, I am of opinion, that sufficient grounds have been made out for the transfer of the case from the Court of the Tahsildar. The complaint itself made reference to the previous orders of the Naib Tahsildar Malik Ahmad Khan who had a week before dismissed the complaint remarking that the matter was one for decision by a civil Court. The offence charged was one under S. 447, I. P. C., in which ordinarily a summons is to issue in the first instance. In spite of this the Tahsildar Magistrate issued a bailable warrant against all the accused two of whom are, as disclosed from the affidavit, respectable persons paying Rs. 1,000 as income-tax and are kursi nashins. I see no justification for the issue of a warrant in a case like this and especially in view of the fact that the Naib Tahsildar had dismissed the complaint on the same or similar facts a week before. In addition to this there is an affidavit by Megh Raj, petitioner, to the effect that he was informed by B. Nanak Chand, pleader, that the Tahsildar Magistrate had told him that he would convict the persons accused unless they compromised the civil appeal against the decree for possession of land passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge in their favour against Baz Khan, complainant. This allegation of Megh Raj is supported by an affidavit filed and duly sworn to by B. Nanak Chand, pleader. No counter-affidavit has been put in by Baz Khan.

It is unfortunate that the explanation of the Tahsildar Magistrate with regard to this matter was not called by the learned Judge who admitted the petition. However, I do not think it necessary to make an enquiry into this point, nor to definitely hold whether the Tahsildar Magistrate actually told B. Nanak Chand, pleader, what the latter alleges he told him. The affidavits disclose the fact that B. Nanak Chand did communicate to the petitioner that the Magistrate had given this warning to him. In view of this communication by B. Nanak Chand (whether the message was in fact given by the Tahsildar or not) I think there is a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the accused persons that they will not have justice in the Court of this Magistrate. This circumstance, coupled with the fact that a warrant was issued in a summons case in the first instance, is sufficient to deprive the petitioners of all confidence in the impartiality of the Magistrate. Without therefore casting any aspersions on the Magistrate and following the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Dhera Singh v. Ram Singh (1) I think that this case should be tried by another Magistrate. Dr. Narang has stated before me that he does not want to have a de novo trial of the case.

For the aforesaid reasons I refuse to grant the prayer for quashing the proceedings in the criminal case against the petitioners, but I withdraw the case from the Court of the Tahsildar Magistrate at Chakwal and direct the District Magistrate to make it over to another Magistrate competent to try the same at the headquarters of the district. Further hearing of the case will commence from the stage at which it was before the Tahsildar.

Sikandar—Accused—Appellant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Cri. A. No. 295 of 1927, Decided on 22nd November 1927, from the order of the First Class Magistrate, Multan, D/- 31st January 1927.

✻ Criminal P. C., S. 503 (3)—Summons for examination of witness in a Native State—Political Officer cannot return it unserved on the ground of want of convenience.

A Magistrate issued a commission for examination of witnesses living in a Native State under S. 503 to the Agent to the Governor-General. He returned the commission unserved, regretting his inability to comply with the request on the ground that there was no Resident Political Officer in State, who could execute the commission.

Held : that the Criminal Procedure Code nowhere speaks of a Resident Political Officer in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India, but of a Political Officer representing the British Indian Government in such territories irrespective of the actual place of residence of the officer concerned and it is the duty of the latter either to proceed where the witness is or to summon such witness before him and to take down his evidence, or to delegate his functions to any officer subordinate to him. But neither the Criminal Procedure Code nor any other law leaves it to the option of such officer to decline to execute the commission on the ground of inconvenience or some other similar reason. The provisions of sub-S. (3), S. 503, Criminal P. C. are mandatory in this respect. [P 77 C 2]

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Order.—Sikandar, appellant, having been convicted and sentenced to six years rigorous imprisonment under S. 379/75, I. P. C., appealed to this Court through the jail. His appeal was heard by Skemp, J., who by his order of 20th May 1927, remanded the case to the Magistrate directing him to record the statements of the witnesses named by the appellant. The Magistrate was directed to send for the appellant and ask whether he wishes a commission to issue to the Political Agent or other officer at Bahawalpur to examine the appellant's witnesses or have them examined under sub-S. (4), S. 503, in Bahawalpur State.

It appears that originally the witnesses, who are residents of the Bahawalpur State, were summoned by the Magistrate, but in spite of the service of the summonses on them they did not appear and consequently the Magistrate proceeded to judgment, holding that he could not coerce the witnesses to appear against their will and could not issue warrants against them in Bahawalpur State.

After the order of remand had been received by the Magistrate he ascertained the names and addresses of the witnesses from the accused and issued a commission for their examination under S. 503, Criminal P. C. to the Agent to the Governor-General, Punjab States, who is the officer representing the British Indian Government in the Bahawalpur State. The Agent to the Governor-General, however, has returned the commission unserved with an intimation conveyed to the District Magistrate of Multan in his letter No. 4-J5616/5-9/22 dated 18th August 1927, regretting his inability to comply with the request with regard to the examination of the defence witnesses on the ground that there is no Resident Political Officer in Bahawalpur State, who can execute the commission. In this letter reference is made to a previous letter of 18th September 1922, to the District Magistrate of Multan in which for the same reasons a similar commission was returned unexecuted by the Agent to the Governor-General, Punjab States.

After a careful consideration of the grounds mentioned by the Agent to the Governor-General, Punjab States, for his inability to execute the commission, I have arrived at the conclusion that such grounds cannot be supported by any provision of law.

Section 503 (1), Criminal P. C., confers the power inter alia on a District Magistrate, on being satisfied that such a course is necessary for the ends of justice to issue a commission to a District Magistrate of the 1st class, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the witness resides, to take evidence of such witness.

Section 503 (2) authorizes the issue of a commission to the officer representing the British Indian Government in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India when the witness resides in such territory.

Section 503 (3) provides that such officer shall proceed to the place where the witness is or shall summon the witness before him and shall take down his evidence in the same manner as in the trial of warrant cases under the Criminal Procedure Code.

Sub-Section (4) of the section further authorizes the officer representing the British Indian Government to delegate his powers and duties under the commission to any officer subordinate to him whose powers are not less than those of a Magistrate of the 1st class, in British India.

It will thus be observed that the Criminal Procedure Code nowhere speaks of a Resident Political Officer in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India, but of a Political Officer representing the British Indian Government in such territories irrespective of the actual place of residence of the officer concerned and also that once a commission has been issued by the District Magistrate or the other Courts mentioned in S. 503 to an officer representing the British Indian Government in such territory, it is the duty of the latter either to proceed where the witness is or to summon such witness before him and to take down his evidence, or to delegate his functions under the commission to any officer subordinate to him and competent to execute the commission and in that case such officer must proceed to the place where the witness is or summon the witness before him and take down his evidence. But neither the Criminal Procedure Code nor any other law that I am aware of, leaves it to the option of such officer to decline to execute the commission on the ground of inconvenience or some other similar reason. The provisions of sub-S. (3), S. 503, Criminal P. C., are mandatory in this respect.

It is no doubt true, as remarked by the Secretary to the Agent to the Governor-General in his letter of 18th August 1927, that the powers to execute the commission cannot be delegated to a Magistrate subordinate to a Darbar, but that does not absolve the Agent from the duty of executing the commission or of procuring its execution in accordance with law.

In the previous letter to which reference has already been made the attention of the District Magistrate was invited to certain rules of this Court under which a letter or a precept of the nature of a summons may be sent to witnesses residing in the territories of the Princes or Chiefs in India through the officers representing the British Indian Government. Presumably it is on account of this last suggestion that attention was invited to this previous letter. But, in this case, as I have already stated above the Magistrate did send summonses to the witnesses, all of whom were served but did not appear and, therefore, the issue of a letter or precept of the nature of a summons through the Agent to the Governor-General, Punjab States, would have been of no use. In any case it is for the Magistrate to decide whether he would summon the witnesses in his Court to record their statements or whether he would issue a commission and if the Magistrate has decided upon the latter course it is not within the discretion of the Agent to the Governor-General to decline to execute the commission on the ground that there exist other possible means for examining the witnesses. It is of course assumed that Magistrates do not and will not issue such commissions unnecessarily. In the present case the Magistrate in persuance of the order of this Court decided to issue a commission to the Agent to the Governor-General, Punjab States, and I hold that that officer was not entitled to refuse to execute the commission on the grounds stated by him.

I am under these circumstances constrained to send the case back to the District Magistrate with direction to return the commission to the Agent to the Governor-General, Punjab States, inviting his attention to the law on the subject as explained in this order and requesting him to execute the commission. When the witnesses have been examined, the Magistrate will comply with the order of remand dated 20th May 1927.

Kishen Dayal—for Petitioner.

Mackay—for Respondent.

Addison, J.—Prag Narain, occupier of the Prag Distilled Water Ice Factory, Delhi, was convicted by a Magistrate with 1st class powers under S. 41 (j), Indian Factories Act, for failing to furnish notice of occupation as required by S. 33 of the Act. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100. His appeal in the Sessions Court was dismissed, and he has now moved this Court to set aside his conviction and sentence.

The facts are not in dispute. The Additional Inspector of Factories found on 16th April 1925 that eighteen persons were being employed in the manufacturing department, while six persons, including the manager, were being employed in the sales department. If 20 persons are employed in a factory of this kind it becomes a factory within the meaning of the Act, and it is the duty of the occupier under S. 33 to give notice to the Inspector. This was not done in the present case, as it was contended that only 18 persons were employed in the factory and that the six persons, who were in the sales department, were not employed in the factory. The only point to be decided is whether 20 persons were employed in the factory.

"Factory" is defined in S. 2 (3) (a) of the Act as any premises wherein, and within the precincts of which, on any one day in the year not less than twenty persons are simultaneously employed and steam, water or other mechanical power or chemical power is used in aid of any process for, or incidental to, making, altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing or otherwise adapting for use, for transport or for sale any article or part of an article.

The words used show that by a factory is meant premises where anything is done towards the making or finishing of an article up to the stage when it is ready to be sold or is in a suitable condition to be put on the market.

Further, the word "employed" is defined in S. 2 (2) of the Act as follows :

A person who works in a factory, whether for wages or not,

(a) in a manufacturing process or handicraft, or

(b) in cleaning any part of the factory used for any manufacturing process or handicraft, or

(c) in cleaning or oiling any part of the machinery, or

(d) in any other kind of work whatsoever, incidental to, or connected with, the manufacturing process or handicraft, or connected with the article made or otherwise the subject of the manufacturing process or handicraft therein, shall be deemed to be employed therein.

Clearly persons employed merely for selling the manufactured articles do not come within the above definition, for they have nothing to do with work incidental to, or connected with, the manufacturing process, unless it can be said that they are engaged in some kind of work "connected with the article made." It was argued on behalf of the Crown that the selling of the article was work connected with the article made. This contention in my judgment cannot be accepted. A factory means premises where articles are manufactured and a person who does anything directly or indirectly towards the making thereof up to the stage that they are ready to be delivered and put on the market is employed in the factory. A person, who sells the manufactured article, though he happens to occupy a room at the factory, cannot be said to be doing any kind of work incidental to or connected with the manufacturing process or "connected with the article made." That would put too wide a construction upon the last words which obviously mean "connected with the article in the process of being made." That is, any kind of work upon the article up to the stage where the article is packed and ready for delivery in the market is what is intended. In my judgment that is the only possible meaning the words can bear when the definition of the term "factory" is considered.

In England by "factory" is intended a place where an article is produced while its supply to customers is an operation distinct from its manufacture, though both operations may be undertaken by the producer. This was held in Spacey v. Dowlais Gas & Coke Co. Ltd. (1). In the English Act (64 Vic. Ch. 22, 1901), "factory" and "employment and working for hire" are defined in Ss. 149 and 152 respectively and there is little difference between the definitions in the English and Indian Acts. In the English Act, however, S. 149 (4) runs as follows :

Where a place situate within the close, curtilage, or precincts forming a factory is solely used for some purpose other than the manufacturing process carried on in the factory, that place shall not be deemed to form part of the factory, for the purposes of this Act.

It follows that in England the room in which salesmen sit would not form part of the factory. There is nothing corresponding to this sub-section in the Indian Act, but in my opinion the same result follows from the definition of the term "factory." In the present case it was more convenient for the occupier to have his salesmen in a room in the same building as the factory, but it cannot be said that by having them there they are employed in the factory. They might be in an office, a mile away. Could it be said in that case that they were employed in the factory? It was admitted by the learned counsel who appeared for the Crown that it could not. It follows that the mere fact that for convenience these salesmen occupy a room in the factory building does not make them persons employed in the factory. They still remain persons engaged in the sale of the manufactured article. On the date in question, therefore, only 18 persons were employed in the factory or perhaps 19, as the manager, who is in charge both of the factory and the sales department, might possibly be held to be employed in the factory. Even in that case the number of persons employed in the factory was only 19, so that the provisions of the Act did not apply. There was, therefore, no offence committed by the occupier.

I would accept the petition and setting aside the conviction and sentence, would acquit the petitioner. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Cri. Revn. Petn. No. 1160 of 1927, Decided on 21st October 1927, from the order of the Sess. J., Rawalpindi, D/- 8th November 1926.

* (a) Forest Act (7 of 1878), S. 41—Confiscation made in order to test the wrong interpretation of the words "timber" and "forest produce" in S. 41 put by the High Court though vexatious was held necessary.

A person though convicted for breach of rule (4) made under S. 41, (c) Forest Act, by trial and lower appellate Courts, was acquitted in revision on the wrong interpretation of the words "timber" and "forest produce" in S. 41. He was again prosecuted and acquitted for repetition of the same offence, but no appeal against acquittal was preferred. Again the same person's timber was confiscated for the third time in order to test the prior decision of the High Court. [P 81 C 1]

Held: that the confiscation though vexatious was necessary.

* (b) Forest Act, S. 41—Words "timber" and "forest produce" in S. 41 are used in widest sense.

The words "timber" and "forest produce" in S. 41 are used in the widest sense as given in the definitions to be found in S. 2 and not in the narrow and restricted sense especially introduced to define and limit the powers described in Ch. 7. [P 81 C 1]

Parkash Chand for B. A. Cooper—for Petitioner.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—One Lalbadshah is the owner of a private forest and is in the habit of importing his wood into Rawalpindi city and has not provided himself with a pass of the nature contemplated in S. 41 (c), Indian Forest Act, and the rules made thereunder. He was prosecuted for breach of R. (4), was convicted by a Magistrate and his conviction was upheld on appeal by the District Magistrate of Rawalpindi. On an application for revision being presented I took the view that the words "timber" and "forest produce" should be read as meaning the same thing both in S. 41 and S. 39 and that the restrictive definition contained in S. 39 governed also S. 41. At the hearing of the application for revision the Crown was not represented as is too often the case where a point of any importance or difficulty is involved. After this decision Lal Badshah proceeded to import more timber into Rawalpindi city without a pass, and in order, I am informed, to obtain a ruling of a Division Bench he was again prosecuted and acquitted. Unfortunately the period of limitation for the presentation of an appeal was allowed to elapse and naturally enough Lal Badshah continued to behave as before. His timber was confiscated on a third occasion and he thereupon lodged a complaint under S. 61, Indian Forest Act. This was dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., and his application for a further enquiry was dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi. He now applies for revision of that order.

Whatever view may be taken of the meaning of the words "timber" and "forest produce" in S. 41, the first point to be decided is whether there has been vexatious and unnecessery action on the part of the forest officer, who confiscated the wood. Mr. Ram Lal points out that in order to test the previous decision given by me ex parte it was considered advisable to get a further pronouncement and it was thought that this could only be done, short of actual legislation, by engineering another test case and, if possible, an appeal from an acquittal. By an oversight the chance was lost, and it was, therefore, considered necessary to take further action. On the other side it is urged that whatever necessity there may have been for taking action the second time when the man had been acquitted the second time and no appeal from the acquittal had been presented, he should not have been harassed yet again. In my opinion there is no force in the further contention put forward by Mr. Ram Lal that because the officer taking action was a subordinate and the action was decided upon by his superior officer, the head of his department, he is absolved from all liability. He is absolved from all moral blame of course, but the section still applies if he has acted vexatiously and unnecessarily. Vexatiously he had acted in accordance with the meaning given by Webster to the word. Necessity is rather more difficult to determine. The initial mistake having been made of not taking advantage of the acquittal, I do not think it is going too far to say that in the interest of all involved legislation would not be justified until there had been two decisions or a decision of a Division Bench or at least a decision after a full hearing. It appears to me, therefore, looking at it from this point of view, that the action was necessary. The wood, which was confiscated, Mr. Ram Lal tells me, will be returned at once to Lal Badshah and, therefore, I do not think any further action should be taken in the matter of his complaint..

I now come to the merits and on reconsidering the matter I think there can be no doubt that my previous decision was wrong. The view there taken was that the power of the Local Government to levy duty having been restricted in Ch. 7, to duty on timber produced in British India in which they have rights, and all timber brought from any place beyond the frontier, the same restriction must be held to govern their powers to control transit. The further restriction, which is to be found in Ch. 7, making the levy of duty subject to the control of the Governor-General in Council is not to be found in Ch. 8. The reason is obvious, namely, that duty is levied both in home grown and foreign timber and the matter is not wholly provincial. Ch. 8, on the other hand, gives power to the Local Government, without any control whatever, to regulate transit ; and, if the illustrations giving the matters, regarding which such rules can be made, be read carefully, I think it is clear from the internal evidence of these explanations themselves that such control must apply to all forest produce whatever its source of origin and to whomsoever it may belong.

It would obviously be futile to make rules applying to rivers or roads, which could be ignored by private individuals using such roads and rivers. After the words " forest produce " in Ch. 8, S. 41, there is a full stop and the illustrations and explanations then follow. In Ch. 7, S. 39, after the words " forest produce " there is no full stop and the words are qualified by the subsequent sub-clauses. This points clearly in my opinion to the conclusion that the words " timber " and " forest produce " in S. 41 are used in the widest sense as given in the definitions to be found in S. 2 and not in the narrow and restricted sense specially introduced to define and limit the powers described in Ch. 7. It is not a question of the impossibility of working the rules on any other interpretation of the words " timber " and " forest produce " rather of the meaning of the actual words used in the two sections when read together. Duty in the nature of things is only levied on a very limited section of the timber, whereas the rules, as indeed the section clearly says, have to be made regarding the control and transit of all timber whether privately owned and wheresoever it may have been grown. I dismiss this petition.

F. A. No. 3007 of 1922, Decided on 8th April 1927, from the decree of the Sr. Sub-Judge, Simla, D/- 23rd October 1922.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Pro-note by manager in his sole name—Debt borrowed for family business—All members are bound.

Ralli for Mehr Chand Mahajan, Jagan Nath Bhandari and Hem Raj—for Appellants.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Anant Ram —for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by one Bholu Mal of Simla against Kirpa Ram and his nephews Mahlu, Phallu and Balak Ram, sons of Narain. The suit was based on a promissory note dated 7th September 1915, securing a sum of Rs. 3,832 payable on demand with interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent per mensem. The suit was contested by the defendants separately, Kirpa Kam raising one set of pleas and his nephews contesting the suit on the ground that they were neither members of a joint Hindu family of which Kirpa Ram was the manager, nor concerned in any joint family business. They also alleged that if the moneys had been advanced they had not been advanced for the benefit of any family business. The trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree against all the defendants for the entire amount claimed. Kirpa Ram was satisfied with the decree apparently, but his three nephews have preferred this appeal, alleging that they are not liable.

The points for determination are :

(1). Whether the three appellants were members with Kirpa Ram of a joint Hindu family;

(2). Whether there was a joint family business carried on by the joint family, and

(3). Whether the money advanced by the plaintiff to this joint concern was for the benefit of the concern.

It has been urged that there is no presumption that a business carried on by one who is a member of a joint Hindu family is a joint family business. In this case there can be no doubt that Kirpa Ram and his brother Narain, father of the three appellants, at one time were joint in family and joint in business. The appellants themselves set up disruption of this joint family. We have been taken through the evidence relating to the disruption, and we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion arrived at by the learned Senior Sub-Judge that the appellants have failed to establish their contention. It is, therefore, clear that it has been rightly held that the appellants with Kirpa Ram continued to be members of a joint family. It is also in evidence that the three appellants, who are all majors, after the death of their father Narain continued to deal with the plaintiff firm. The plaintiff has gone into the witness-box and has definitely stated that all the three defendants (now appellants) operated on the joint account, an account opened and carried on in the name of the firm Kirpa Ram Narain. In these circumstances it seems to me that there can be no doubt that the three appellants were aware of the dealings of their joint family business with the plaintiff. It is in evidence that they paid sums to the plaintiff and also took moneys from him, although Mahlu says that he used to take the money from the plaintiff for his uncle Kirpa. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the evidence on the record clearly establishes the fact that the appellants, along with Kirpa Ram, were dealing with the plaintiff, and that they were aware of these dealings, and, to my mind, there is no doubt that the moneys advanced were actually advanced for the family business. It has been held in various authorities cited at p. 249 of Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 5th Edition, that where the manager of a joint family borrows money on a promissory note for a joint family business, the other members of the joint family are liable on the note, though the note was executed by the manager in his sole name. In my judgment this comment, supported as it is by authority, is applicable to the facts of the present case. Kirpa Ram, as manager of this joint family business executed a promissory note the consideration for which was the past dealings with the plaintiff, and I, therefore, am of opinion that all the members of the family are liable under this promissory note. In this view of the case the appeal must fail and I would, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

D. C. Ralli and Lala Jagan Nath—for Appellant.

M. L. Puri and S. L. Puri—for Respondents.

Harrison, J.—The following question has been referred to this Division Bench by Jai Lal, J.

Whether it is open to an insolvency Court to extend the period specified in the order of adjudication within which the debtor is to apply for his discharge, either on the application of the creditors or suo motu, or whether the power of extension given by S. 27(2), Provincial Insolvency Act, can be exercised only on an application by the debtor.

Since this order of reference was written a judgment of the Division Bench of the Rangoon High Court has been published in K. K. S. A. R. A. Chettiar v. Mg. Mayat Tha (1), and this lays down very clearly that there is nothing incompatible with the extension of the period, within which a debtor must apply for his discharge, at the instance of and on cause shown by the petitioning creditor. With this decision we agree and are also of opinion that there is no reason why a Court should not extend the time suo motu.

The facts of the particular case, in which this question has arisen, are given in the earlier part of the referring order and those facts show that the creditors applied for extension of time in very peculiar circumstances. Mr. Ralli has addressed us on behalf of the insolvent and has urged that it is only logical that the right to apply for an extension of time should be confined to the person who has the sole right to apply for discharge, namely, the insolvent himself. It is, in our opinion, no more illogical to allow the creditors to apply for an extension of time than it is to allow them, as the Act expressly does, to apply for the original adjudication with all consequences which flow from that adjudication. There is, however, no question of the logical amplification or restriction of any rule. We have to consider the plain meaning of the words used in the two sections of the Act. S. 43 lays down that the Court shall annul the order of adjudication if the debtor does not appear to apply for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court. This is mandatory and the Court has no option in the matter. Counsel, however, would have us read the words "the period specified by the Court" as meaning "specified in the first instance" and not as subsequently extended, if action has been taken under S. 27 (2). This sub-section runs as follows :

> The Court may, if sufficient cause is shown, extend the period within which the debtor shall apply for his discharge, and in that case shall publish notice of the order in such manner as it thinks fit.

Mr. Ralli then qualified the position taken up by him to this extent : that he reads the words "the period specified by the Court" as meaning the period so specified in the first instance or extended on application made by the insolvent but not as including "extended on application made by the creditors or by the Court on its own motion." Were there any ambiguity it would be for us to decide between the two rival interpretations, but so far from there being any ambiguity it appears to us that the words are absolutely clear. The Court has the power to extend on sufficient cause being shown, and that sufficient cause may be patent on the face of the record or may be established by any interested party. It is for the Court to decide whether the cause is sufficient and, if it extends the period, the later date to which it is extended becomes the last date of the period specified by the Court as described in S 43 of the Act.

We answer the reference by saying that we are in agreement with the view taken by the Division Bench of the High Court of Rangoon in K. K. S. A. R. A. Chettiar v. Mg. Mayat Tha (1), and we hold that it is open to an insolvency Court to extend the period on the application of the insolvent himself, or on the application of the creditors, or suo motu. It follows that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

FFORDE AND CAMPBELL, JJ.

Ulfat Rai—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Tej Narain and another—Plaintiff and Defendant—Respondents.

F. A. No 718 of 1922, Decided on 25th February 1927, from the decree of the 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 28th February 1922.

(a) Hindu Law—Joint family—Antecedent debts of father—To prove immorality of debts direct connexion between the debt and immorality must be established.

An independent debt, neither illegal nor immoral, contracted by a Hindu father on the security of the joint family estate, antecedent to the transaction impeached, is an antecedent debt. To prove the immorality of the debt direct connexion between the debt and immorality must be shown: A.I.R. 1924 P. C. 50, Foll. [P 85 C 2]

(b) Hindu Law—Joint family—Sale of joint family property by father for necessity challenged by son—Vendee not aware of father's immoral character and acting in good faith—Vendee is not bound to prove how surplus proceeds, not required for necessity, were applied.*

Where it has been established that the alienation by father was made for a necessary purpose, e. g., in order to pay off an antecedent debt which was binding upon the sons and recoverable from the joint family property and it is not shown that the vendees knew the father to be an immoral man or that his immorality was so gross and so notorious that they must be presumed to have known of it, the vendees are only bound to show that they acted in good faith and that the sales were made for a necessary purpose and for a fair price. Having done this, they are under no obligation to enquire into the application of any surplus over the sum required to carry out the necessary purpose: A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 37, Foll. [P 87 C 2]

Moti Sagar and Mehr Chand Mahajan —for Appellant.

Kishan Dayal, Sheo Narain and Shiv Narain —for Respondents.

Campbell, J.—This litigation involves four buildings which may conveniently be termed A, B, C and D once the property of Maharaj Narain. On 11th February 1905, A, B, and C were mortgaged to one Mul Chand for Rs. 3,000 and on 25th February 1907, A, B, C and D were mortgaged to Ishri Prasad for Rs. 6,000 of which Rs. 3,000 was the redemption price of Mul Chand's mortgage.

On 11th February 1911 Maharaj Narain sold B to Lal Muhammad for Rs. 3,500 out of which Rs. 2,610 were left wi h the purchaser for payment to Ishri Parshad the mortgagee and the balance Rs. 890 was paid in cash. Lal Muhammad subsequently resold B to Ulfat Rai in 1917.

On the same date 11th February 1911, Maharaj Narain sold to Lal Muhammad C for Rs. 1,500 (left with purchaser for Ishri Parshad Rs. 790 and cash Rs. 710) and D for Rs. 2,000 the whole of which price was left with the purchaser for payment to Ishri Parshad.

On 21st March 1911 Maharaj Narain sold A to Joti Parshad for Rs. 3,000 cash.

In 1918 Tej Narain, son of Maharaj Narain, brought three suits, based on the three sales, for possession in each case of the property sold, on the ground that the property was ancestral Hindu family property and that its alienation was a nullity as regards him. The trial Court has decreed all three suits with the condition that before obtaining possession the plaintiff must pay Rs. 2,000 to Lal Muhammad and Rs. 500 to Joti Parshad. These sums apparently represent the estimated value of improvements carried out by the vendees.

The result has been three appeals: one by Lal Muhammad, one by Ulfat Rai and Lal Muhammad and one by Joti Parshad. Since the suits were consolidated by the trial Court and a single argument on all three has been addressed to us, I shall deal with all three appeals in one judgment.

There is now no dispute on the following points:

1. All the property was ancestral in the eye of Hindu law.

2 Unless the mortgage debt to Ishri Parshad was incurred by Maharaj Narain for immoral purposes as understood by Hindu law, the ancestral family estate in the hands of the son is liable for it.

3. The onus of proving that the debt was immoral is on the plaintiff and is not discharged by merely proving that Maharaj Narain was a man of immoral character. Direct connexion between the debt and the immorality must be shown.

4. No proof has been given by the appellants-defendants that the cash portions of the sale prices were required for or applied to family necessities, beyond the statement of Ishri Parshad that after the sale of Joti Parshad, the deed of which he attested, he received Rs. 2,000 out of the price towards his mortgage charge.

5. The antecedent debt due to Ishri Parshad on the mortgage of 1907 amounted to Rs. 7,400 principal and interest at the time of the sales to Lal Muhammad.

The issues drawn up by the trial Court were as follows:

1. Whether the property in the three suits was ancestral or joint family property in the hands of Maharaj Narain ?

2. Whether the properties in question being ancestral in the hands of Maharaj Narain, their alienations to the respective vendees in the three suits was for consideration and necessity ;

3. Whether the vendees have effected any improvements in the properties, and if so of what value ?

4. Whether the vendees are entitled to any compensation for improvements if the sales are held invalid ? If so what ?

5. Whether the consideration of the alienations was used for or applied to immoral purposes and consequently the sales are invalid ?

6. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any mesne profits realized by the vendees alienees ? If so what ?

The findings of the trial Court are not very lucidly expressed. but they appear to have been as follows:

Issue 1.—The properties were ancestral. This is not now contested.

Issue 2. There was no necessity for the sales. Maharaj Narain had ample income for all legitimate purposes and the mortgage debt was not an antecedent debt in the light of what was ruled by the Privy Council in Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh (1), because it was not incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immovable assets not belonging personally to the vendor alienor, but being joint family property. Consideration was paid in full.

Issue 3.—Rs. 2,000 and Rs. 500 were the amounts spent on improvements to the properties.

Issue 4.—The vendees are entitled to these amounts, because had it not been for the decision in Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh (1), the debt due to Ishri Parshad would have been an antecedent debt and the vendees would have only been bound to see that the debt was due. At the time of the mortgage to Mul Chand in 1905 Maharaj Narain's immorality was not notorious and Mul Chand could have had no suspicion that Maharaj Narain was a man of this character. Lal Muhammad, when he bought the property, had reason to believe that up to the limit of the previous mortgage debt the transfer would be valid. In equity, therefore, he is entitled to receive the value of his improvements. This is the best that I can make out of the cryptic language used by the learned Subordinate Judge in recording his decision on issue 4. It may not be a correct interpretation of what he has written and there is much to be said in favour of regarding this part of his judgment as absolutely meaningless.

Issue 5.—When Maharaj Narain contracted the debts in question he had given himself up to a life of luxury and licentiousness and was wasting money in entertaining prostitutes and in riotous living:

> There is no clear evidence on the record that any portion of these debts was intended to be spent or was as a matter of fact expended on litigation or in meeting the legitimate expenses of any domestic ceremonies. The alienees were neighbours and were aware of the mode of deceased's life. The plaintiff is, therefore, under no obligation to discharge the debts.

I confess I am not clear whether the learned Subordinate Judge when speaking of debts meant the antecedent mortgage debts or the prices paid by the subsequent vendees at the sales which are now in dispute. The obscurity of the finding on issue 4 deepens the mystery.

Issue 6. There is a confused and involved decision about mesne profits which in view of my conclusions on the other points in issue, it is unnecessary to attempt to disentangle.

Sahu Ram's case (1) was subsequently considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Narain v. Mangal Parsad (2), and it was there made clear that any debt is an antecedent debt if it is antecedent in fact as well as in time, i. e., truly independent and not a part of the transaction impeached. This decision affirmed the view taken by the Full Bench in Arumugam Chetti v. Muthu Koundan (3), that an independent debt, neither illegal nor immoral, contracted by a Hindu father on the security of the joint family estate, antecedent to a mortgage sued on, is an antecedent debt so as to support a charge on the son's share to the extent of the sums secured on the prior mortgagee. There are passages in the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment which indicate the possibility that had the later pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee been before him he might have held that the plaintiff was liable for either part or perhaps for the whole of the antecedent mortgage debts to Ishri Parshad, but I cannot be sure.

The two main questions for our decisions are:

1. Whether at the time when the mortgage debt to Ishri Parshad was incurred Maharaj Narain was leading an immoral life ?
2. If so whether the plaintiff has succeeded in proving direct connexion between the debt and the immorality.

If the plaintiff succeeds on these two points it is obvious that the decision by the trial Court that he is entitled to decrees for possession of the properties in dispute is correct. If the plaintiff fails on these two points a third question arises whether the plaintiff is still entitled to avoid the sale by reason of there being no necessity established for the balance of the prices over and above the amount due on the former mortgage debt ?

Several witnesses have described the debauchery of Maharaj Narain in violently extravagant terms. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have been influenced by a decision of the Chief Court in a similar suit between the present plaintiff and another alienee from Maharaj Narain, which is reported as Jaswanti v. Tej Narain (4), and more fully as 41 I. C. 192. In that case the learned Judges of the Chief Court found apparently that Maharaj Narain was a man of most conspicuously dissolute mode of life, but the finding is not evidence in this case and cannot be allowed to influence its decision. On the evidence of the present record I consider it to be established that Maharaj Narain neglected his wife for women of ill fame, that he kept a succession of mistresses and that he drank heavily. The most reliable witness on the point is Mt. Maharaj Rani his own wife, and, allowing for exaggeration this is the purport of what she deposed. This lady must naturally wish to support her son in the present case and I do not look upon her account of the late Maharaj Narain's daily life as altogether unprejudiced. At the same time she is the person who was in the best position of knowing his habits and conduct. But numerous other witnesses who declare that day and night all the year round Maharaj Narain was engaged in one ceaseless round of drunken and disreputable orgies I do not believe.

There has been a tendency in this case to confuse immorality with ordinary extravagance. Mr. Bose who was for some time acting as Maharaj Narain's legal adviser has stated that Maharaj Narain was extravagant in an innocent manner by living beyond his means in the matter of food, servants, furniture, etc. It is also clear that he gave frequent and expensive musical parties, and the money expended upon them, although the performers may have been persons of loose morals, could not with certainty on the evidence before us be brought within the category of debts contracted "under the influence of lust or wrath or of debts repugnant to good morals." It is proved that Maharaj Narain was maintaining a house in which he kept his wife and son. The evidence as regards his ordinary income is very vague. The learned Subordinate Judge, after considering a mass of conflicting evidence, has estimated it at about Rs. 7,900 a year or a little over Rs. 650 a month. He had house property which brought him Rs. 60 or Rs. 70 per mensem and had two villages in the Gurgaon District one Gopalpura which he owned and the other Bopas which he held in mortgage. The Patwari of Gopalpura witness for the plaintiff stated that the net amount which Maharaj Narain took annually from Gopalpura was not more that Rs. 1,300 or Rs. 1,400, and if this be accepted the annual income was not as much as Rs. 7,900. However that may be, it is clear that Maharaj Narain was not a rich man. It has been established that he was engaged from time to time in expensive litigation. One of the cases was against one Kailash Narain, a suit for Rs. 1,11,750. The learned Subordinate Judge mentioned this case in his judgment and thought that about Rs. 1,500 may have been spent on it by Maharaj Narain. At the request of the parties we have referred to the paper book of that suit, which came to Chief Court on appeal, and this makes it clear that the litigation must have cost Maharaj Narain, who was unsuccessful throughout, a sum not less than Rs. 6,500, and probably more. The suit was instituted in 1904, was dismissed by the trial Court in December 1904, and Maharaj Narain's appeal was dismissed with costs by the Chief Court in 1911. The Court-fee alone was Rs. 1,500 in each Court, the amount which the learned Subordinate Judge thinks might have been spent on the whole litigation. There was another case with one Mt. Banoji the ultimate result of which is reported as Narain v. Banoji (5), and it must have cost more than the learned Subordidate Judge has estimated.

Bopas village was redeemed from Maharaj Narain and he received Rs. 7,000 on 24th April 1904, Rs. 1,000 some time before 16th November 1905 and Rs. 21,000 in 1908. It has been suggested that Maharaj Narain's ordinary expenditure and his expenses on litigation up to the time of the mortgage to Ishri Parshad in 1907 could have been defrayed from his annual income of Rs. 7,900, and the redemption money of Rs. 8,000, and that the money raised by the mortgage must inevitably be presumed to have been spent on dissipation. This is as far as the plaintiff has been able to go to connect the mortgage debt with Maharaj Narain's immorality, and, in my opinion, he has not been successful in discharging the onus upon him. The facts are that Maharaj Narain was not a rich man, that his ordinary income cannot be estimated with any attempt at certainty, that he involved himself in expensive litigation, that he lived beyond his means, and that he was given to drink and prostitutes. It is possible that the mortgage money may have been spent on immoral pursuits; it is equally possible that the redemption money and an undue proportion of the ordinary annual income was expended on dissipation and it became necessary to mortgage the house property in order to obtain money for the support of Maharaj Narain's wife and child and for carrying on litigation. It is not the law that a Hindu son can escape liability to pay any debt which is contracted by an immoral father. The mortgage debt due to Ishri Parshad was an antecedent debt binding upon the plaintiff and he has not succeeded in proving that it was incurred for immoral purposes.

I hold that the mortgage of Rs. 7,400 was an antecedent debt not proved to have been tainted with immorality, for the discharge of which the joint family property including the plaintiff's share was liable. It remains to consider whether the plaintiff can have the sales set aside by reason of the properties in suit having been alienated for prices which left a surplus over the amount of that debt.

What the situation was, I think, is perfectly clear. There was a mortgage charge upon the four properties and they were sold primarily in order to clear off this charge on which interest was accumulating. Three of the properties were first disposed of to Lal Muhammad. Rs. 5,400 was taken to be the proportion of the mortgage charge due on them. Lal Muhammad was aware of this charge, took the precaution of retaining in his own hands the sum of Rs. 5,400 and paid off the mortgagee. The vendor succeeded in obtaining a higher price than the mortgage charge and the balance Rs. 1,600 was paid over to him. There is no evidence of what he did with the money. I see no reason why Lal Muhammad should not be believed when he deposed that he did not know Maharaj Narain before he entered into negotiations for the sales, and that he made enquiries and was told that Maharaj Narain was engaged in litigation and required money for prosecuting his cases. Lal Muhammad is a Christian and it is not proved that he had any previous acquaintance with Maharaj Narain or any reason for having it. He came to Delhi in 1908.

When the fourth house was sold two months later to Joti Parshad Rs. 2,000 remained due on the mortgage. Joti Parshad paid the whole of Rs. 3,000 to Maharaj Narain, but he has proved that Rs. 2,000 were immediately paid to Ishri Prashad, the mortgagee.

Thus it has been established that the sales were made for a necessary purpose, i. e., in order to pay off an antecedent debt which was binding upon the plaintiff and recoverable from the joint family property, and there is no evidence of how the vendor has applied Rs. 2,600 out of the total proceeds of Rs. 10,000. I consider that there is no reliable evidence either that the vendees knew Maharaj Narain to be an immoral man or that his immorality was so gross and so notorious that they must be presumed to have known of it.

In these circumstances the vendees were only bound to show that they acted in good faith and that the sales were made for a necessary purpose and for a fair price. Having done this, they were under no obligation to enquire into the application of any surplus over the sum required to carry out the necessary purpose.

This is how the law has been interpreted by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in a very recent case, Shri Krishen Das v. Nathu Ram (6). The suit was by sons to recover from the vendee ancestral property purchased from their father for Rs. 3,500. The facts found were that the vendor had incurred debt in setting aside the auction sale of the same property, and in celebrating his sister's marriage, that in order to meet part of his indebtedness he had borrowed from a money-lender Rs. 2,600 which had been increased by interest to (6) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 37=49 All. 149=54 I. A. 79 (P. C.).

Rs. 3,000. that this amount was discharged out of the consideration paid by the vendee, that before purchasing the property the vendee had ascertained these facts, and that there was no evidence of how the vendor had applied the balance of Rs. 500. The High Court of Allahabad on second appeal had reversed the District Judge's order dismissing the suit and had given the plaintiffs decree seting aside the sale on condition of the plaintiffs paying the vendee Rs. 3,000 within six months. Their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to a number of their previous decisions and delivered their final conclusions as follows :

Applying the principles laid down in the above series of cases by this Board, and consistently followed in other Courts in India except in Allahabad, their Lordships have reached the conclusion that the judgment of the High Cou t cannot be sustained. On the facts found by the District Judge it must be taken that the sale challenged was made after due enquiry as to the legal necessity by the vendee ; that such necessity has been proved by him to the extent of Rs. 3,000 out of a total price of Rs. 3,500 ; that the sale was for an adequate consideration and that the mere fact that after a long interval of time the appellants have not been able to establish how the surplus of Rs. 500 was applied is not a sufficient ground in law for setting aside the sale. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment and decree of the High Court should be set aside, and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts, including the costs of the present appeal.

The proper manner in which such cases are to be treated by the Courts was stated in an earlier passage in the judgment which runs as follows:

In their decision the learned Judges of the High Court rely on the authority of the case of Girdharee Lal v. Kanta Lall (7) especially on the head-note which contains the passage:

" Where a father has sold ancestral property for the discharge of his debts, if the application of the bulk of the proceeds is accounted for, the fact that a small part is not accounted for will not invalidate the sale."

Whether this is in itself a correct statement of the law so far as it goes, it does not by any means follow, as the learned High Court Judges seem to have thought, that it is a complete statement of the law or that sale will be invalidated wherever the part of the consideration not accounted for cannot be described as small. If this were sound, the question would in each case be a matter of arithmetical calculation, and opinions would necessarily vary as to what constituted the " bulk of the proceeds " or " a small part " of the same in each particular case. The learned Judges seem to have lost sight of the true question which falls to be answered in such cases, viz., whether the sale itself was one which was justified by legal necessity.

The following previous decisions of the Allahabad High Court in which conditional decrees had been passed setting aside similar sales or directing the surplus not covered by legal necessity to be returned, were overruled. Gobind Singh v. Baldeo Singh (8), Ram Devi Kunwar v. Abu Jafar (9), Dwarka Ram v. Jhulai Pande (10) and Daulat v. Sankaiha Prasad (11).

For these reasons I would accept all the three appeals and in each case would enter judgment for the defendants dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Fforde.—I agree.

Judgment.—On 22nd January 1926 the petitioner filed a written complaint in the Court of the District Magistrate. Lyallpur, accusing Agha Safdar Ali Khan, Inspector of Police, Lyallpur, of having wrongfully confined, beaten and tortured him for the purpose of making him give false evidence in a certain criminal case. The learned District Magistrate proceeded to hear 17 witnesses produced by the complainant in support of his allegations. After the last of these 17 witnesses had been called and given evidence, counsel for the complainant stated that he wished to produce no further "preliminary" witnesses The learned Magistrate thereupon referred the matter to the Superintendent of Police, Lyallpur to have it investigated. In so doing the learned District Magistrate purported to act in accordance with the provisions of S. 202 (1), Criminal P. C. The Superintendent of Police in turn referred the proceedings to a Deputy Superintendent of Police to conduct the necessary inquiry. The Deputy Superintendent of Police having recorded the statements of a number of witnesses, other than those who had been examined by the District Magistrate, submitted a written report to the District Magistrate on 22nd March 1926. The District Magistrate then examined the accused person Agha Safdar Ali Khan, and having done so he dismissed the complaint.

There can be no doubt that the procedure adopted by the learned District Magistrate is not in accordance with the provisions of S. 202, Criminal P. C.A Magistrate dealing with a complaint under that section should either dispose of it himself or if he thinks fit, for reasons which he must record in writing, direct an enquiry or investigation to be made by a Magistrate subordinate to him, or by a police officer or by such other person as he thinks fit, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsity of the complaint. In the present case the Magistrate instead of either disposing of the case himself or referring it for investigation partly investigated the matter himself and had it partly investigated by a police officer. He, moreover, did not state in writing his reasons for referring the matter to the police officer. The learned Magistrate was also acting beyond the scope of 202, Criminal P. C., in examining the accused at that stage. Another objection taken by Mr. Moti Sagar, which in my opinion is a substantial objection is that the proceedings were sent for investigation to the police, a procedure which is not desirable where a member of the police themselves is accused.

Mr. Moti Sagar, in support of his contention that the irrgularities in procedure to which I have briefly referred are such as must be held to vitiate the whole of the proceedings in question, has cited a number of authorities amongst which may be mentioned Chandi Charan Mitra v. Manindra Chandra : A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 198; Baidya Nath Singh v. Muspratt (1); Emperor v. Durga Parsad (2) Queen Empress v. Kanappa Pillai (3); King Emperor v. Alagirisami Pathan (4); and Balalal Mookerjee v. Pasupati Chatterjee (5).

The question remains whether or not in view of these precedents in favour of so doing I should set aside these findings and refer the matter to the District Magistrate to deal with it in proper conformity with S. 202, Criminal P. C. I have however, examined the evidence which was before the learned District Magistrate in the first instance. I have also read the complainant's written complaint and examined the evidence which he gave in the District Magistrate's Court, and I cannot find on an examination of all this testimony, produced by the complainant himself, that the learned District Magistrate was not perfectly right in dismissing the case. In my view he could have done so on the material before him without referring it to the police at all. He obviously adopted the latter course solely for the purpose of having a thorough investigation made. The learned Sessions Judge have, in my opinion, given, perfectly satisfactory reasons in his careful and well-considered judgment for refusing to interfere with the order of the District Magistrate. I find myself upon the merits in agreement both with the District Magistrate and with the learned Sessions Judge, and I accordingly refuse to exercise the discretion vested in me to send this case back for a re-hearing. In adopting this course I am fortified by the decision of a Division Bench of the Cal-

BROADWAY AND AGHA HAIDAR, JJ.

Thakar Das—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Narainu—Plaintiff—Respondent.

S. A. No. 2681 of 1923, Decided on 10th October 1927, from the decree of the Dist. J., Hoshiarpur, D/- 30th July 1923.

Guardians and Wards Act, S. 28—The guardian has no power to fritter away the minor's property in his charge.

The defendant who held the appointment of a guardian during the minority of the plaintiff by the will of the latter's adopted mother built two houses on the plaintiff's land with money taken out of the minor's funds and the rest was borrowed on the security of this very property. The plaintiff on attaining majority brought the suit against the defendant praying for a decree for settlement of accounts and possession of the land after demolition of the house. The trial Court while partly decreeing the plaintiff's suit ordered that the defendant should remain in possession of the houses and the site on which they stand for a period of 45 years and that he should pay a certain ground rent to the plaintiff.

Held: that the order of the trial Court which practically amounts to an enforced sale of the plaintiff's land to the defendant on the latter's paying to the former a small premium, is not equitable and therefore can not stand.

Dev Raj Sawhney and J. N. Aggarwal—for Appellant.

Fakir Chand—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—It is unfortunate that, in spite of the pourparlers that were going on during the course of hearing of this appeal about a compromise, the parties did not see their way to arrive at an amicable settlement. That is, however, a matter for the parties and not for the Court. The case was fully argued and both parties displayed an unbending spirit throughout.

The facts are briefly these: The plaintiff, who is the adopted son of one Dal Singh, was a child of very tender years when his mother Mt. Indar Devi died, his adoptive father having died previously. This lady executed a will on the 9th June 1905, appointing the defendant Thakar Das guardian of the person and property of the plaintiff. The property consisted of some agricultural lands and a plot of land measuring 1 kanal 14 marlas situated in Dharamsala. In the year 1907 the defendant, while acting as the guardian of the plaintiff, built a house on the plaintiff's land at a cost of about Rs. 2,000. In 1910-11 he built another house which is valued at Rs. 4,000. The money spent over these two houses was partly taken out of the minor's funds and the rest was borrowed on the security of this very property. On attaining majority the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant praying for a decree for settlement of accounts and possession of the land after demolition of the house and for possession of such other property of the plaintiff as may be found in the possession of the defendant. The trial Court partly decreed the plaintiff's claim. It gave him a decree for a certain sum of money in respect of the claim for rendition of accounts, etc., and it further ordered that the defendant should remain in possession of the houses and the site on which they stand for a period of 45 years on condition that he should pay as ground rent tc the plaintiff, a sum equivalent to 17 per cent of the rent realized from the houses. The plaintiff was dissatisfied with this decree and preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge, Hoshiarpur. In the lower appellate Court, the defendant alleged that he had filed cross-objections against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. The learned District Judge in appeal decreed the plaintiff's suit for possession of the land and ordered that the defendant should dismantle the house which he had built and remove the materials within the period of one year from the date of the decree. He also allowed to the plaintiff some further items in his claim for account and ratified an arithmetical error which had crept into the decree of the Subordinate Judge. The defendant has come up in second appeal to this Court.

One matter may be disposed of at the very outset. The learned counsel, Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, who addressed the Court on behalf of the appellant, urged that the learned District Judge should have considered the objections which had been filed by the defendant in the Court below. These objections are not forthcoming, and the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court found that there was in fact nothing to show that the cross-objections were ever filed and that under the circumstances he would not be justified in entertaining any such objection.

In view of this finding the Court is not prepared to hear the defendant about the objections which the learned counsel alleges were filed by his client in the lower appellate Court.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney challenged the finding of the lower appellate Court as regards the authority of the defendant Thakar Das to build the house in dispute. His argument was that under the terms of the will, and having regard to the provisions of S. 28, Guardians and Wards Act, his client, the defendant Thakar Das, was justified in building these houses. The will was read out to us and there can be no doubt that it gave full powers of managing the minor's property to the proposed guardian. Under the terms of the will, he could sell the property in order to invest the proceeds more profitably. But there was no justification for the guardian under the powers conferred upon him by the will to fritter away the funds belonging to the minor in building the houses in dispute and further to borrow money on their security thus rendering the minor's property responsible for the payment of the mortgage money. There is a letter Ex. P. 10, dated 13th November 1910, which the defendant wrote to the Arya Prati Nidhi Sabha wherein he admits that he committed an indiscretion in building the house on the minor's land. He further goes on to say in that letter that he built the house with the idea of paying off its price. If he was acting in good faith and in the interests of the minor it is inconceivable that he should build another and more expensive house in the year 1910-11 after he had had occasion to realize his mistake. Under the circumstances the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court was right when he observed:

It seems probable that the defendant built the houses with the idea of taking them over himself and nothing else.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney further contended that the Court below was not justified in allowing a further sum of Rs. 360 to the plaintiff by way of ground rent, since the defendant had been paying a sum of about Rs. 15 a month on the money borrowed by him on the security of the houses. There is nothing to show on the printed record that the defendant paid this sum of money. The account is given at p. 13 of the printed paper-book, and the learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to trace these monthly payments into any one of the items which constitute the said account. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court further reduced the sum of Rs. 251-12-9 by Rs. 40 which, according to the defendant, had been spent by him on account of litigation. The reasons adduced by the learned Judge are sufficient, and I agree that the defendant had no justification in incurring this expenditure. In his rejoinder Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal for the first time attacked the finding of the learned District Judge wherein he ordered the removal of the house which the defendant had built on the plaintiff's land. It was at once pointed out to Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal by the Court that in his rejoinder he could only answer the points raised in the arguments of the respondent and that he should not open a fresh attack upon the judgment of the Court below for the first time. He, however, persisted in his argument and sought to justify the order of the trial Court which practically amounted to an enforced sale of the plaintiff's land to the defendant on the latter's paying to the former a small premium. He further referred to the equities of the case in order to justify the order of the trial Court. In fact the equities are all against him. He cannot complain of any hardship when he has been undoubtedly guilty of gross dereliction of duty in safeguarding the interest of his ward. He built the house with the sinister object of ultimately taking them over for himself and now that the matter has come up before a Court of justice he is only to thank himself if the result of the case is unfavourable to him.

In my opinion the judgment of the lower appellate Court is correct, and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs. The cross-objections were not pressed and they are accordingly dismissed with costs.

Broadway, J.—I agree in dismissing both appeal and cross objections with costs.

Cri. A. No. 146 of 1927, Decided on 6th April 1927, from the acquittal order of the Mag., 1st Cl., Sialkot, D/- 29th November 1926.

Post Office Act (6 of 1898), S. 52—Post-master opening a V. P. article addressed to himself and extracting a railway receipt from it without paying for it for six days and making false entries in the P. O. books—He is guilty under S. 52 as his act amounts to criminal misappropriation under Penal Code, S. 403.

A branch postmaster who was also a shop-keeper ordered a consignment of flour in order to meet the requirements of his shop and a value-payable envelope containing the railway receipt for the floor arrived at the branch post office. The postmaster opened it extracted the railway receipt, went down the station where the goods had by that time arrived, and took delivery. After six days he paid the price of the goods into the post office. In the meantime he made in the books of the post office entries and repeated daily "on account of the absence of the addressee".

Held: that, although the offence was a technical one in the sense that no loss was incurred by the post office and the money involved was voluntarily returned, it amounted to criminal misappropriation within the meaning of S. 403, Penal Code, and the postmaster was guilty under S. 52, Post Office Act: 39 P. L. R. 102, Dist.

Carden Noad—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath—for Respondent.

Fforde, J.—This is an appeal by the Crown from an acquittal. The facts are very simple and may be stated shortly. The respondent was at the time of the matter complained of a branch postmaster of the village Throh in the Sialkot District. For his services as such he received a salary of about Rs. 5 a month. He was also a shop-keeper trading under the name of Gouri Shankar-Des Raj, Gauri Shanker being his father. Some time in August 1925, the respondent had ordered a consignment of flour from the Pioneer Flour Mills at Shandara in order to meet the requirements of his shop for the cattle fair which was due to take place at the end of that month. On the 13th August 1925, a value-payable envelope arrived at the branch post office in question. This envelope contained a railway receipt for the consignment of flour. On the 16th August the respondent opened the envelope, extracted the railway receipt, went down to the station, where the goods had by this time arrived, and took delivery. On the 22nd August he paid the price of the goods into the post office. In the meantime, that is, between the 15th and 21st August, the respondent made certain entries in the books of the post office in the branch office daily account form in which under the column headed "Explanation of non-delivery of registered articles and parcels and value-payable articles in deposit" he entered the words "on account of the absence of the addressee." This explanation was repeated daily from the 15th to 21st. On the 22nd, as I have already stated, the money for the goods was paid into the post office.

It is clear upon these facts, which have been conclusively proved, that the respondent has been guilty of an offence under S. 52, Post Office Act (Act 6 of 1898). The respondent himself admitted that he had taken possession of the value payable letter, that he extracted the railway receipt, that he had got the goods on the strength of this document and that he failed to pay the amount due until the 21st August. Mr. Jagan Nath has urged that these circumstances do not show that there was any intent on the part of the respondent to misappropriate the value-payable letter and that no offence has been committed under S. 52, Post Office Act. This argument obviously cannot succeed. The fact that the respondent made a series of false entries for the purpose of selling stores which had been consigned to his firm under the value-payable post office arrangement, shows that he was perfectly aware that he was doing a wrong act. Moreover, every shop-keeper knows that the whole object of consigning goods on the value-payable system is to prevent the goods being delivered until the money has been paid, and a person who has for some time been occupying the duty of a postmaster must be perfectly aware of the importance of strictly observing the rules in connexion with this class of transactions.

The trial Magistrate in acquitting the respondent has at the conclusion of his judgment said:

His offence would, therefore, only be a technical one and it might amount to misappropriation but it was not criminal misappropriation.

The offence no doubt is a technical one in the sense that no loss was incurred by the post office and the money involved was voluntarily returned, but the offence undoubtedly does amount to criminal misappropriation within the meaning of S. 403, I. P. C. The trial Magistrate has relied upon the case Imam Din v. Emperor (1). That case, however, has obviously no bearing upon the facts before us and I do not consider it necessary to discuss it.

The question remains what punishment should be imposed for this offence. The respondent is a young man and is apparently a respectable one. The offence took place as long ago as August 1925. It was known to Nazir Ahmad (P. W. 2), of the Daska post office, at the time. It was also investigated by Ram Lal (D. W. 2), Inspector of Post Offices, Pasrur Sub-Division, in the month of December 1925, and this official satisfied himself with censuring the respondent. Under these circumstances, although the offence under S. 52, Post Office Act, cannot be regarded as anything but serious, I think that the interests of justice would be met in the present case by a nominal imprisonment coupled with fine.

I would accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the acquittal and convict the respondent under S. 52, Post Office Act 6 of 1898, and would sentence him to be imprisoned till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 100, or in default, to undergo three months rigorous imprisonment.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

Sagar Chand and Ganpat Rai—for Appellants.

Judgment.—On the afternoon of the 5th July 1924, a quarrel took place between two sweepers, Duman and Khushala, of the village Daroli Bhai in the Ferozepur District and this quarrel developed into a serious transaction in which two men, namely, Phaggu and his father Maghi lost their lives, and a few others sustained more or less severe injuries. The prisoner Kheman has been convicted of the murder of Phaggu, and his brother Preman has been found guilty of the murder of Maghi; and both of them have been sentenced under S. 302, I. P. C., to suffer the penalty of death.

There is ample evidence on the record that Duman owed Rs. 60 to two Jats, Bachint Singh and Sunder Singh who are cousins and carry on money-lending business jointly. On the afternoon in question Bachint Singh came to Duman while he was sitting in his house near the village dharmsala, and asked him to repay the loan of Rs. 60. The debtor said that he had paid Rs. 30 to Khushala who had stood surety for the loan, but Bachint Singh replied that he had not received any money from Khushala. The two then went to Khushala to enquire from him about the money. The latter denied having received Rs 30 from Duman, whereupon Duman and Khushala began to abuse each other. While they were quarrelling, Phaggu came up from a neighbouring well and suggested to them that they should settle the matter amicably. His intervention was, however, resented by Khushala who told him to mind his business and not to interfere with him.

The story for the prosecution is that the noise of the altercation attracted the attention of Khushala's sons, Kheman and Preman, and his nephews, Bishna and Kishna, who came up armed with dangs from the house of Preman. Kheman struck Phaggu a blow with his dang on the back of the neck and Kishna followed suit with a dang blow which hit Phaggu just below the site of the first injury. The victim then ran for his life, but he was pursued by the four accused, and after he had gone about 40 karams, he was given a severe blow on the head by Kheman which felled him to the ground. All the four persons then began to belabour him as he lay on the ground. His brother, Binna, who had witnessed the whole affair from the beginning, ran to his assistance but he was struck by Bishna. When he fell down he was beaten by Bishna and his three comrades. At this stage, Binna's father Maghi came up to interfere, but Preman struck him on the top of the head with his dang and knocked him down, and Bishna hit him while he was lying on the ground.

The injuries received by Phaggu resulted in his death almost at once, but Maghi survived for a few hours and he died on the morning of the 6th July, while he was on his way to the hospital. The medical witness, who examined the body of Phaggu, found that he had sustained, besides simple injuries, a contused wound on the head which had fractured the right parietal bone. Maghi had received one simple injury on the right chest and a contused wound on the head which had caused a fracture of the skull.

Now, there are a large number of witnessess who have deposed to the effect that the fatal injury on the head of Phaggu was caused by Kheman, and that his brother Preman was responsible for the contused wound on the head of Maghi which led to his death. It appears that the fatal attack was not a premeditated one and that both the victims were injured in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel, and that the offenders did neither take undue advantage nor acted in a cruel or unusual manner. The facts of the case, however, make it clear that there was no fight between the offenders on the one side and their victims on the other; and we cannot, therefore, hold that the requirements of Excep. 4 to S. 300, I. P. C., have been established. There can be no doubt that a person delivering a violent blow with a lethal weapon like a dang on a vulnerable part of the body, such as the head, must be deemed to have intended to cause such bodily injury as he knew was likely to cause the death of the person to whom the injury was caused.

We accordingly hold that both Kheman and Preman have been rightly convicted under S. 302, but we do not think that the extreme penalty of the law should be exacted in their case. We accordingly accept the appeal so far as to reduce the sentence of death in each case to that of transportation for life.

S. A. No. 2699 of 1923, Decided on 31st October 1927, from the decree of the Dist. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 20th October 1923.

Evidence Act, S. 114, Ill. (e)—Point raised in the grounds of appeal—No mention made in the judgment—Court is presumed to have acted properly.

Where a point is definitely raised in the grounds of appeal and the Court makes no mention thereof in its judgment, it must still be presumed to have performed the judicial act of writing a judgment regularly and properly.

Moti Sagar—for Appellant.

Badri Das—for Respondent.

Harrison, J.—In this case the plaintiff sued the widow of his dead brother, claiming the land, which would have fallen to that brother's share had he survived his father. The suit has been decreed both in the trial and in the appellate Courts and the only point raised on second appeal is that the question of the right of the widow to inherit the share in the family property, which would have fallen to her husband, had he lived, has not been decided by the District Judge, although the point was put in issue and decided by the trial Court and specifically raised in the grounds of appeal. The grounds of appeal in this Court have been drafted and presented by the same counsel who argued the appeal before the District Judge. In these grounds he does state that the point was not decided, though raised in the grounds of appeal, but he does not say that he pressed or argued the point before the District Judge, nor is there up to date an affidavit from him on the point although four years have elapsed since the judgment was pronounced.

The question to be decided, therefore, is whether it is to be presumed that a District Judge who makes no mention whatsoever of a point definitely raised in the grounds of appeal is to be presumed, in the words of S. 114 (e), Evidence Act, to have performed, the judicial act of writing a judgment regularly and properly, or on the contrary to be presumed to have failed in his duty and to have ignored the point definitely presented and argued before him by counsel. I am of opinion that the presumption as laid down in the Evidence Act must be made and that inasmuch as it is one of the Judge's duties to deal with all the points raised before him for determination, if his judgment deals with one only, it must be presumed that that is the only point put before him by counsel and that he has performed his judicial duties regularly. It is contended that the failure to say in so many words that no other point was argued is tantamount to a sort of admission by the Judge that other points were argued and that he failed to decide them. It is also contended that even if the point was not argued, it was still the duty of the Judge to decide it if entered in the memorandum of appeal. I can see no force in these contentions and in the absence of any assertion in the grounds of appeal or affidavit by counsel that the point was argued, I am of opinion that the presumption must be made. The presumption is that judicial acts have been regularly performed and not merely, as counsel would have us read it, that judicial officers who say so are telling that truth. I would find that the appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs.

Tekchand, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother. This appeal should be dismissed.

Brahman Water Mills Co., Damodarpura of Jassian — Complainant—Petitioner.

Mangladha Mal and others—Accused—Respondents.

Cri. Revn. No. 1286 of 1927, Decided on 26th October 1927, reported by the Sess. J., Attock, on 21st August 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 133—Proceedings under S. 133—Magistrate must proceed in conformity with provisions of Ch. 10.

When a Magistrate commences proceedings under S. 133, he is not at liberty to proceed otherwise then in conformity with the rule laid down in Ch. 10: 8 W. R. 37 Cr. Foll. [P 96 C 1]

Order of Reference.—Damodar Lal, the Manager of the Brahman Water Mills Company, alleged that one Mangladha Mal and four other men had obstructed an old public path and thus caused great inconvenience to the public and the complainant as well as damage to the complainant's water mills. A prayer was made that action be taken against the accused under S. 133 and 147, Criminal P.C.

The Magistrate took the evidence of four witnesses produced by the complainant and then issused the following order :

Accused may be called to show cause why action under S. 133, Criminal P.C., be not taken against them.

The accused appeared and put in a written statement. The Magistrate then framed the following four issues :

1 Whether the lands in which Mills are situated remained in possession of the complainant.

2 Whether action under Ss. 133-147, Criminal P. C., is desirable and whether any danger of breach of peace exists.

3 What effect has the previous litigation on the case on hand ?

4 To what relief is the complainant entitled ?

He then fixed a date for evidence. After hearing the evidence of both parties and holding that S. 133, Criminal P. C., is not applicable, Sardar Uttam Singh, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the 1st Class in the District of Attock, dismissed on 27th July 1927 the complaint made under under Ss. 133/147, Criminal P. C., and directed the complainant to have recourse to civil Courts regarding his alleged grievance if so advised.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds :

The Magistrate appears to have overlooked the provisions of Ss. 133 and 139-A and omitted to issue conditional order under S. 133 (1), Criminal P. C., and also to proceed in the manner laid down in S. 139-A, Criminal P. C. On the one hand, after issuing notice, he commenced to try the case as a civil suit but omitted to frame the only necessary issue, namely, one as to its being a public thoroughfare. When the Magistrate found that the respondents denied the existence of a public right in respect of the way and that there was reliable evidence in support of such denial it was incumbent on him in compliance with the provisions of S. 139-A to stay the proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right had been decided by a competent civil Court without directing any particular party to have recourse to the civil Courts. On the other hand the lower Court appears to have eventually treated the matter as if it were a complaint of an ordinary offence and to have totally ignored the special provisions made by the Legislature in Ch. 8, Criminal P. C. for dealing with applications for the removal of nuisances.

The Magistrate's initial mistake lay in not issuing a conditional order under S. 133 (1), Criminal P. C., after recording the statements of the applicant's witnesses. He lost sight of the fact that proceedings under S. 133 are ex parte.

When a Magistrate commences proceedings under S. 133, he is not at liberty to proceed otherwise than in conformity with the rules laid down in Ch. 10, [Queen v. Pitti Singh (1)].

The applicant has no doubt been prejudiced by the order passed referring him to a civil Court.

I accordingly accept the application for revision and submit the proceedings to the High Court with the recommendation that the Magistrate's order be set aside.

Order

Shadi Lal, C. J.—For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct him to decide the case under S. 133, Criminal P. C. in accordance with the procedure prescribed by law.

* Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 7—Rule is mandatory.

Mortgagors on redemption of the mortgaged property should be directed to pay the mortgagees interest up to the date fixed for redemption by the Court. R. 7, O. 34 is mandatory on this point. [P 96 C 2]

Tirath Ram—for Appellants.

Broadway, J.—The only point for determination in this appeal is whether the mortgagors on redemption of the mortgaged property should be directed to pay the mortgagees interest up to the date fixed for redemption by the Court. The Court has only allowed interest up to the institution of the suit, as it considered that the interest already allowed, was sufficient. In doing so the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, Mr. Ghulam Yazdani, appears to have lost sight of R 7, O. 34, Civil P. C., which is mandatory on this point.

The respondents filed cross-objections urging that costs should not have been allowed to the appellants on the ground that the appellants had raised various pleas which ought not to have been raised by them. On the other hand it appears that the plaintiffs-respondents claimed to redeem the property for a far less sum than was due, and in these circumstances I do not think that the order of the Court as to costs should be interfered with. The cross-objections are, therefore, dismissed.

The appeal is accepted and the appellants are allowed the sum of Rs. 864, the interest claimed. No order as to costs in this Court. This sum of Rs. 864 must be paid by the 1st February 1928.

Judgment.— A complaint under Ss. 392, 347/348 and 477, I. P. C., was instituted by certain persons against the petitioners. The Magistrate decided to make an enquiry before issuing process and took action under S. 202, Criminal P. C. At the same time notice was issued to the petitioners to be present although it does not appear they were allowed to do more than act as spectators of the proceedings. After examining the witnesses produced by the complainants the Magistrate recorded a detailed and reasoned order holding that no prima facie case had been made out against the petitioners and so dismissed the complaint. The complainants then moved the Sessions Court on the revision side and the Additional Sessions Judge ordered a further enquiry, as after a review of the evidence he came to a conclusion different from that arrived at by the learned Magistrate.

Against this order the petitioners have come up to this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C., and on their behalf I have heard counsel at length while the complainant's addvocates have adressed me in support of the order for further enquiry.

Most of the authorities cited afford no assistance and need not be discussed. It has been strongly urged that the Magistrate acted against law in issuing notice to the petitioners and allowing them to be present at the enquiry. This procedure is certainly unusual. In re Tukaram Udaram (1) the Bombay High Court held it was not illegal to call on the person complained against to show cause. The Calcutta High Court has, however, taken a different view in Chandi Charan Mitra v. Manindra Chandra, A. I. R 1923 Cal. 198, a view that found favour with Fforde, J., in Jagindar Singh v. Agha Safdar Ali Khan (2). And it appears to me a little incongruous to call on a person accused of an offence to show cause against process being issued against him when proceedings under S. 202, Criminal P.C., are in contemplation. At the same time this alone would not induce me to interfere in revision unless there was reason to believe that it had occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

In the present case I am unable to see that the mere presence of the petitioners could have affected the evidence led by the complainants. The Magistrate recorded a detailed order showing that he had considered and weighed all the evidence recorded by him and giving reasons for his being unable to accept it as correct or true. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has also examined the evidence and, as he thought the evidence worthy of credence, ordered a further enquiry. It has been urged that the Additional Sessions Judge acted legally, and reliance was placed on Piare Lal v. Sagar Mal (3), which no doubt is to the point. At the same time it was laid down in Emperor v. Kesri (4), by a Full Bench of the Chief Court that generally speaking further enquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge was manifestly perverse or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete.

This has been followed consistently by this Court: see for instance Dani v. Emperor (5), Nabi Bakhsh v. Crown (6) and

(1) [1901] 6 Bom. L. R. 91.
(2) A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 88
(3) A. I. R. 1927 All. 38=49 All. 230.
(4) [1911] 10 P. R. 1911 Cr.=24 P. W. R. 1911 Cr.=11 I. C. 132=205 P. L. R. 1911.

(6) [1920] 1 Lah. 216=56 I. C. 777=109 P. L. R. 1920.

Karam Chand v. Mathra Das (7), and I am unable to see any reason for refusing to accept, that as laying down the rule to be followed by this Court. The order of the Magistrate is not, and has not been called, perverse or foolish, and it was not suggested that the record of the evidence was incomplete. The mere fact that the Additional Sessions Judge was prepared to place a different value on the testimony of the witnesses would not warrant the order passed by him. I therefore accept this petition, and setting aside the order of the Additional Sessions Judge restore that of the Magistrate, dismissing the complaint.

Second Appeal No. 3108 of 1924, Decided on 10th November 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 17th October 1924.

Registration Act, S. 76(b)—Registrar refusing to register a document without giving reasons to do so—Order passed is one under S. 76(b).

Where a Registrar, without making an enquiry into the allegations of the executant that the date of execution had been altered, refused to register a document, but gave no reasons in support of that order :

Held : that his order amounted to a refusal to register on the ground of denial of execution and a suit lay under S. 77. [P 98 C 2]

Gobind Ram Khanna—for Appellant.

Bhagat Govind Das—for Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—This appeal arises out of an action brought under S. 77, Indian Registration Act, for a decree directing that a mortgage-deed should be registered. The facts relevant to the question of law are briefly these :

The plaintiff Doda Shah presented to the Sub-Registrar for registration a mortgage-deed alleged to have been executed by the defendant Dewan Chand. The Sub-Registrar thereupon issued a summons to the defendant to appear before him, but the defendant made no appearance in answer to the summons. The Sub-Registrar then passed a cryptic order refusing to register the document, apparently on the ground that the execution thereof had been denied by the defendant.

The plaintiff, thereupon, moved the registrar by a petition for the compulsory registration of the deed, and this application was resisted by the defendant on the plea that the date of the execution of the deed had been changed, without his consent, from 20th March 1922 to the 17th March 1922. The Registrar, without making any enquiry, passed an order refusing to register the document, but gave no reasons in support of that order.

Now, the learned District Judge holds that the order of the Registrar was passed under S. 76(b), Registration Act and we concur in that conclusion. It is clear that the alleged alteration in the date was made by the defendant himself, as he affixed his own signature to the altered date. The Registrar was entirely wrong in not making any enquiry into the matter, and his order amounted to a refusal to register the document on the ground of the denial of execution.

For the aforesaid reasons we hold that the suit was rightly brought under S. 77, Registration Act. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 1028 of 1922, Decided on 31st March 1927, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Shahpur, D/- 20th March 1922.

Limitation Act, Art. 142—Suit for possession—Proof of possession within 12 years and dispossession by defendant is sufficient—Actual date of dispossession need not be proved.

In a suit for possession under Art. 142 what has to be shown is possession and dispossession within twelve years, and to do so it is sufficient to prove possession within twelve years, which can usually be done by the revenue records, if unrebutted, and further, the absence of possession or rather the possession of the defendant on date of suit. The actual date of dispossession need not be proved. [P 100 C 2]

Nanak Chand and Obedulla—for Appellants.

M. A. Ghani, Sleem and J. L. Kapur—for Respondents.

Harrison, J.—The plaintiff, descendants of one Haku, from one branch of a family, while the defendants, descendants of Gullu, form the other, the common ancestor being one Smail. Mt. Begman, defendant 6, is the widow of Jahana of the plaintiff's branch and she has been impleaded as a pro forma defendent only as a separate area of the family property has been given to her for her lifetime. The revenue records show that Smail owned one-half of a holding No. 64 and was joint in this holding with one Nabu and subsequently in the year 1892 his descendants effected a partition and received the larger portion of this holding. Haku, the ancestor of the plaintiff-branch is shown as having subsequently purchased a small plot of land. At the settlement of 1891-92 this plot was included in the joint holding of the family though no mutation order was passed and it is not known how the entry came to be made. The two branches of the family held definite areas throughout the period 1891 to 1918 as shown in the various jamabandis, the branch of Haku always holding considerably larger share. In the column of ownership the entries continued as made in the year 1891-92 and showed both the property of Smail and the area purchased by Haku as jointly owned by the whole family.

In 1917 the family presented a petition to the patwari stating that they had partitioned the whole of the land held by them including a large area of shamilat, which had been allotted in the year 1904, and that they wished to make a formal and regular partition by observing the existing possession of both branches and this independent of the question of title. On this the patwari sent a report to the Tahsildar, in which he showed the actual possession of the two branches as approximately equal. The Tahsildar recorded that the members of the family. who were present, asserted that the existing possession had continued for eleven years, that they wished that the existing possession be respected and continued ; he therefore ordered partition to be effected in accordance with their wishes and in accordance with the actual existing possession. This could only mean actual cultivating possession more especially as the partition was to be irrespective of title. In spite of this perfectly clear order, partition was effected by making an entry in the record showing the two branches as in possession of one-half each. The plaintiffs have come to Court relying on the past history of the family, have stated that their cause of action arose on the date of the mutation entry, that the defendants have seized an area of 211 kanals since the date of that mutation order, and that they are entitled to this area and wish the status quo restored.

The suit has been dismissed and the plaintiffs appeal, and after taking us through all the revenue records and explaining the position, counsel has ultimately rested his case on the failure of the revenue authorities to carry out their own orders with the result that the defendants are now in the possession of 211 kanals more than they held in the jamabandi of 1916-17. There can be no doubt that the orders as passed have not been carried into effect. Not only the jamabandi of 1916-17 but also the two previous jamabandis, establish that the area now claimed by the plaintiffs was throughout held by them in excess of their strict half-share as shown in the column of ownership. In the year of 1916-17 or thereabouts the area, which they had been holding jointly was apparently brought into hotchpot and the result of the division gave the same disproportion between the shares as is to be found throughout the entries and as is explained by the additional holding acquired by Haku.

Counsel for the respondent has urged that the plaintiffs should be confined to their pleadings and unless and until they can show the actual date and circumstances of the dispossession as alleged in their plaint, the present entry being in favour of the defendants, it must be assumed that all the previous entries are wrong ; that it must be held that the plaintiffs have failed to show that throughout the whole of this period they have actually held knowingly or unknowingly the precise area purchased by their ancestor, and that they are therefore not entitled to the area, which they claim. If the pleadings are to be enforced strictly, it will be found at p. 30 of the paper-book that the defendants confessed judgment by stating that para. 8 of the plaint was correct. This is an obvious mistake and must be treated as such, but it hardly lies in the mouth of defendants to insist on strict pleading when they themselves have been so careless. It appears to us that the plaintiffs having put their grievance before the Court and having roughly described their cause of action, though that cause of action did not arise from the making of the entry but from the conduct of defendants which followed thereon, we are of opinion that relief should be given to them if they succeed in showing that they are entitled to it.

Without going into the question of the identity of the land throughout the twenty-seven years or more the salient fact is established that the parties did agree to observe existing possession and that the revenue records bear strong internal evidence establishing that the excess held by the plaintiffs' branch is approximately the same throughout this period, and the amount now claimed has been correctly calculated. The fact that they were in possession of the excess area being established the fact that they are now not in possession thereof gives them a cause of action. They made their agreement, orders were passed that it should be carried into effect, and, so far from the order being carried out, precisely the contrary was done, and on some unknown date defendants entered upon the excess portion, which they now hold. We find that in accordance with the agreement the plaintiff-branch is entitled to receive this excess portion which it claims, namely, 211 kanals 15 marlas out of khata khewat No. 10, Khatauni 45-64 as shown in the jamabandi papers for the year 1916-17.

The article which governs the case is 142, which gives rise to much misunderstanding although the wording is perfectly clear. In a suit governed by this article the plaintiff has to establish possession and dispossession within 12 years. He proves his possession say 10 years ago and it is immaterial whether it was he himself or his tenant who actually occupied or cultivated the land. He proves that he is not in possession at the time of suit and that defendant is. It follows therefore as the night the day that defendant has dispossessed him at some time known or unknown and it equally follows that the dispossession took place less than ten years ago. All the necessary ingredients are established and the suit is good and sound. Now, what is the usual procedure? The plaintiff thinking it wise or necessary to give the exact date of his cause of action and not knowing what it is, selects a date more or less at random and says he was dispossessed some three years ago, or more or less as the case may be. The defendant denies this. The point is put in issue and the plaintiff fails to prove the date on which the dispossession took place. Although he owns the land, although he was in possession within twelve years and has been admittedly robbed by the defendant, the Court dismisses the suit and gives the plaintiff's property to the defendant. In doing so the Court appears to think, and counsel in arguing the matter often appear to approve of the position, that the Court is exercising some curious disciplinary powers, punishing the plaintiff for being untruthful or ignorant, and rewarding the defendant for exposing the deplorable conduct of the plaintiff—the prize taking the form of the plaintiff's land.

To take another instance : a man goes away leaving his land in possession of a tenant and returns some years later to find a stranger in possession. He institutes a suit and is called upon to prove possession and dispossession within twelve years. Possession presents no difficulty ; he proves that his tenant held the land under him less than twelve years ago. In order to prove dispossession he enquires from his tenant what has happened, that tenant being in collusive alliance with the stranger. An untrue story is told him in consequence, and in the fullness of time the inaccuracies are exposed in open Court. Filled with righteous indignation the Court dismisses the suit because the unfortunate plaintiff is so unpopular or so ignorant that he has wrongly described the date of dispossession. This is happening every day. In bana shikni cases, where as a matter of fact neither side knows the exact date of dispossession and it is not a question of ignorance or untruthfulness or an inaccurate watch or a time-expired calender, the same, disciplinary action is taken. The plaintiff is forced to name a date. He does so at random and on its being shown that he cannot prove his guess he is punished by losing his land because the date of his cause of action is wrongly described. What has to be shown is possession and dispossession within twelve years and to do so it is sufficient to prove possession within twelve years, which can usually be done by the revenue records, if unrebutted, and, further, the absence of possession or rather the possession of the defendant on date of suit. It follows that dispossession has been proved. We accept the appeal and give the plaintiffs a decree with costs in both Courts.

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellant.

Fakir Chand and Chandar Gupta—for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—This and the connected second appeal arise out of two cases instituted by the sons of one Hukam Chand for a declaration that certain alienations made by their father Hukam Chand would not affect their reversionary rights on his demise. The defendant in one case was Abdul Ghani who had purchased 64 kanals 5 marlas of land from Hukam Chand on 9th June 1905 for a sum of Rs. 2,500. In the second case the defendant was one Sardar Ali who had purchased certain property from Hukam Chand for a sum of Rs. 4,700 on 13th January 1917. The learned District Judge recorded one judgment in both cases although the trials were separate and found necessity established for Rs. 1,000 in the case against Abdul Ghani, and in the case against Sardar Ali decreed the plaintiffs' suit in full. Abdul Ghani and Sardar Ali have preferred two separate appeals to this Court and we have heard Mr. Niaz Muhammad on behalf of Abdul Ghani, and Mr. Badri Das on behalf of Sardar Ali, while Mr. Fakir Chand and Chandar Gupat appeared for the plaintiff-respondents.

The case of Abdul Ghani need not detain us long. The findings are clear that Hukam Chand and his sons were members of a Joint Hindu family and that the property alienated was ancestral. These are pure findings of fact. Similarly, it was found that no necessity whatever had been proved for Rs. 1,500 out of the Rs. 2,500 alleged to have been paid by the appellant Abdul Ghani. Mr. Niaz Muhammad was constrained to admit that there was no evidence whatever on the record as to necessity qua this sum of Rs. 1,500, and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

The matter is not quite so clear in the second appeal, namely, the one by Sardar Ali. The learned District Judge finds that the sum of Rs. 4,700 was made up of four items :

	Rs.
(a) Paid to Saif-ud-Din, previous mortgagee	2,500
(b) Deposited with the vendee for payment to Saif-ud-Din in case any excess was found to be due to the mortgagee in (a) ...	200
(c) Cash paid before the sub-Registrar ...	1,900
(d) Registration expenses ...	100
Total ...	4,700

qua the Rs. 1,900, there is no evidence of necessity whetever and the view taken by the learned District Judge must, therefore, prevail.

As to the item payable to Saif-ud-Din the position is this. In 1915, Saif-ud-Din advanced this sum of Rs. 2,500 on a mortgage to Hukam Chand, and in 1917 Sardar Ali was to pay off this item together with any further sum that might be found due for which purpose he retained Rs. 200 of the sale price. As a matter of fact Saif-ud-Din was paid a sum of Rs. 2,631-12-6. The learned

District Judge, apparently following Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), came to the conclusion that although the debt to Saif-ud-Din was "antecedent" it was the duty of the vendee Sardar Ali to establish that the debt for which the mortgage had been executed in 1915 was for necessity. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee considered Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), in Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad (2), and in order to make the position clear formulated at p 104 of the report, the propositions which they desired to lay down as a result of their examination of the authorities. It was there held that :

(1) The managing coparcener of a joint undivided estate cannot alienate or burden the estate qua manager except for purposes of necessity :

(2) If he is the father and the reversioners are the sons he may, by incurring debt, so long as it is not for an immoral purpose lay the estate open to be taken in execution proceedings upon a decree for payment of that debt.

(3) If he purports to burden the estate by mortgage, then unless that mortgage is to discharge an antecedent debt, it would not bind the estate and.

(4) Antecedent debt means antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached.

Now, the transaction impeached in this litigation is the sale to Sardar Ali, and therefore, the debt paid off by Sardar Ali to Saif-ud-Din was clearly an independent one and, therefore, "antecedent" within the meaning of that expression as used by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. It was contended, however, that the fact that this debt was an antecedent one merely shifted the onus on to the plaintiffs-respondents to prove that the debts were immoral and that, therefore, on the findings in this case the learned District Judge's decision should be upheld.

Now, it is true that the learned District Judge has found that Hukam Chand was extravagant, vicious and generally of an immoral character, but this finding relates to his character as established in 1917. Admittedly there is nothing on the record to connect the debt incurred by Hukam Chand under this mortgage with any of his vicious propensities or activities It was urged however that it was sufficient to discharge the onus to prove that he was generally of immoral character without any business in which he could have invested the money raised by him under the mortgages. In support of that contention reliance was placed on Jaswanti v. Tej Narain (3), in which it was remarked that there is a presumption that a loan has been raised for an "immoral purpose" if it is proved that at the time of raising the loan the borrower was living a licentious life, beyond his means, indulging in drink, riot and debauchery and that at the same time he was without any business or occupation upon which the money might legitimately have been spent. Ram Rattan v. Basant Rai (4), is an authority which appears, to some extent,—at any rate, to conflict with this view, for it was held in that as well as in certain other cases that the burden is not discharged by showing that the father lived an extravagant or immoral life and that there must be a direct connexion between the debt and immorality set up by the son. I do not think it necessary to examine these two authorities in order to ascertain whether they are reconcilable, for, it seems to me that in this case it has not been proved that when the debt in question was incurred, that is to say, the mortgage was executed, Hukam Chand was leading such a licentious life as is contemplated by Mt. Jaswanti v. Tej Narain (3).

I would, therefore, accept the appeal of Sardar Ali and modify the decree by granting the plaintiffs-respondents a declaration to the effect that this alienation would not affect their reversionary rights to the extent of Rs. 1,968-3-6; I would leave the parties in this appeal to bear their own costs in this Court.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 197 of 1927, Decided on 7th November 1927, from decree of Senior Sub-J., Gujrat, D/- 19th Feb. 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 115—Revision—Error of law is no ground for revision.

The mere fact that the lower Court errs in applying the proper test to decide a question of fact would not make the point a question of law or a ground of revision ; at best this could only be held to be an error of law. [P 103 C 1]

(b) Railways Act, Sch. 2, Cl. (a)—Niara (sweeping of goldsmith's shop) does not come within the meaning of Sch. 2, Cl. (a).

Niara, i. e., sweepings and gatherings of a goldsmith's shop from which gold is separated by Niarias who make a profession of this kind of things does not come within the meaning of Sch. 2, Cl. (a). [P 103 C 2]

Azim Ullah—for Petitioners.

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs consigned three bags of niara at Ludhiana for Gujrat. Two bags were duly delivered ; the third is alleged to be lost through the negligence of the defendant, the North Western Railway. The plaintiffs claimed the price of the bag. The only plea of the railway that need concern us in this revision is the question whether niara comes within the excepted articles given in Sch. 2, Cl. (a), Railways Act. If it does then the plaintiffs' suit must fail as held by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge in appeal. If it does not the plaintiffs' claim succeeds as held by the learned trial Court originally. Niara has been stated by both Courts to be sweepings and gatherings from a goldsmith's shop from which gold is separated by Niarias who make a profession of this kind of thing. There can be no doubt that niara ordinarily contains some gold mixed with a good deal of rubbish such as dust, etc. The question is whether it can be said to be gold manufactured or unmanufactured. The rulings cited by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge have admittedly no bearing on the point. Kidarnath Raj Narain v. E. I. Ry. Co. (1), Saminadha Mudali v. S. I. Ry. Co. (2) and Lakhmidas Hirachand v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (3) have been cited before me to show that whether niara is or is not gold, etc., depends upon the proportionate value of the gold and silver in it. The argument is that as all the rest of the rubbish is of no value and the only value of the niara is due to the presence of the gold and silver in it the mere fact that gold and silver is mixed with a lot of rubbish does not mean that the article ceases to be gold and silver. The form of S. 75, Railways Act is also referred to in this connexion. E. I. Ry. Co. v. Changai Khan (4) at p. 895 is cited by way of preliminary objection that the finding is a finding of fact and therefore is not open to revision.

I have given much thought to the matter which does not seems to me to be free from difficulty. One way of looking at it is that the mere concealment or placing of pieces of gold and silver in a mass of rubbish does not take the complete parcel out of the provisions of S. 75. The other way of looking at it is that when a mass of material is collected which may contain some gold and silver which could only be extracted by an elaborate precess, whether physical or chemical, it can hardly be said that the complete parcel is gold and silver. As regards the preliminary objection as to whether this is a question of fact or not, no doubt if the proper test is applied then the mere fact that the Court errs in applying the proper test would not make the point a question of law or a ground of revision but the difficulty comes in deciding whether the Court has or has not applied the proper test. It is not very clear what test the learned Senior Subordinate Judge applied, but, as far as can be made out, he seems to have accepted the first view that I have put forward. Each case, however, has to be judged on its own circumstances and on the whole I am of opinion that niara does not come within the meaning of Sch. 2, Cl. (a). At the same time at best this could only be held to be an error of law on the part of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and I do not see that I can interfere in revision on this ground. I, therefore, dismiss the revision, but I make no order as to costs which parties will bear themselves throughout.

Second Appeal No. 2828 of 1924, Decided on 28th April 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Kulu, D/- 25th July 1924.

Hindu Law — Joint family — There is no presumption that a debt when contracted is contracted for the benefit of the family.

There is no presumption that a debt contracted by a manager of a joint Hindu family is contracted for the benefit of the family. The creditor must prove that it was incurred for the benefit of the whole family : A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 200 ; A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 44 and A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 141; Foll.

Mukand Lal Puri and Shambhu Lal Puri—for Appellants.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Nawal Kishore—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—On the 15th January 1922 Rhikhi Ram executed an agreement to the effect that he would supply Ram Saran, now deceased, with 500 maunds of Indian corn at Rs. 2-6-0 per maund and he further agreed that he would pay Rs. 500, if he committed breach of the contract. In order to carry out the contract he was given Rs. 1,000 as an advance by Ram Saran. After the death of Ram Saran, the joint Hindu family firm, of which he was a member, sued Rhikhi Ram, his father, and two brothers for Rs. 1,500 namely the sum of Rs. 1,000 given as an advance and the sum of Rs. 500 on account of the breach on the ground that all the defendants were joint and were thus liable under the contract which had not been carried out.

The trial Court held that 61½ maunds, valued at Rs. 146-1-0 had been supplied. It found the other issues in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the suit to the extent of Rs. 1,292-7-0 with future interest and with proportionate cost. This sum is made up as follows, namely, Rs. 1,000 minus Rs. 146-1-0 i. e., Rs. 853-15-0 out of the original advance plus Rs. 438-8-0 the proportionate part of the penalty on account of the Indian corn not supplied.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge but their appeal was dismissed by him. They then presented a second appeal in this Court.

The first point argued on behalf of the appellants was that on the findings of the Courts below the father and two brothers of Rhikhi Ram were clearly not liable. There is evidence on the record that the defendants own land jointly, but there is no evidence that they or any one of them carries on any commercial business or has a shop. The lower appellate Court, however, has held that Rhikhi Ram was looking after all the affairs of the family which was a joint Hindu family and that therefore the debt which he incurred must have been intended to be for their benefit. This finding means that the defendants constituted a joint Hindu family and that Rhikhi Ram was the manager of that family. Accepting that to be the case, it remained for the plaintiffs to establish that the contract was entered into for the benefit of the joint family seeing that there is no evidence that there exists a joint family business in which case the state of affairs might be different. In Mela Mal v. Gouri (1), Khazana Mal v. Jagan Nath (2), Baru v. Balla (3), it was held that there is no presumption that a debt contracted by a manager of joint Hindu family is contracted for the benefit of the family. The plaintiffs, therefore, further had to prove that the contract entered into by Rhikhi Ram was for the benefit of the whole family, and this they have not done.

The learned counsel for the respondents argued that the suit should be remanded for further evidence on this point as the matter was not clearly put in issue. This is not the case. Issue No. 2 runs as follows :

> Are defendants 1, 3 and 4 joint with defendant 2 and jointly responsible with him for the money claimed in this suit.

This shows that the plaintiffs were put on their guard not only to prove that it was a joint Hindu family but that the joint Hindu family was responsible for payment of the debt. Further, it is clear from the judgments of both the Courts that this point was argued. It necessarily follows that the parties knew of it.

The appeal must, therefore, be accepted so far as defendants 1, 3 and 4 are concerned and the suit against them dismissed but without costs.

Another point taken by the learned counsel for the appellants was that the Courts below should not have allowed the full proportion of the penalty of Rs. 500. This part of the judgment, however, must stand. There is upon the record no evidence to show what loss was incurred by the plaintiffs and if defendant 2 desired to show that the sum of Rs. 500 agreed upon was excessive he ought to have produced evidence to prove that no loss or less loss had been incurred by the plaintiffs. In the absence of this evidence I do not think that I can interfere with the finding of the lower appellate Court on this point.

The result is that the appeal so far as Rhikhi Ram, defendant 2, is concerned is dismissed, but it is accepted as regards defendants 1, 3 and 4 and the suit dismissed so far as they are concerned. Parties will bear their own costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court but Rhikhi Ram, defendant 2, will pay the plaintiff's costs in the trial Court upon the sum of Rs. 1,299-7-0.

Balwant Rai for Abdul Ghani—for Appellants.

Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Harrison, J.—The first point raised in this second appeal is that the plaintiff, who is the assignee of one-half of the equity of redemption of certain land mortgaged to the defendants was not entitled to redeem the whole. Counsel cannot seriously support this contention. The second point is that inasmuch as the plaintiff in consequence of other litigation lost his right to redeem at all after the conclusion of the case in the trial Court, this should now be dismissed, the change in his position being somehow treated as having retrospective effect. He was entitled to bring the suit when he did so. He was entitled to redeem when the decree was passed by the trial Court and this subsequent disability cannot deprive him of the result of his victory. He has, moreover, as the record shows, executed his decree and obtained possession and it appears quite clear that this settles the matter so far as the present litigation is concerned.

The third and the only remaining point is the question of costs. In accordance with the terms of the mortgage the plaintiff undertook to redeem in one or two months. He admittedly made a demand, but the demand was not made in either of these months, nor did he offer to redeem when the proper time should arrive. The suit was contested on many grounds by the defendant, and the trial Court and also the appellate Court have penalized them not only by depriving them of their own costs, which such mortgagees ordinarily receive, but have also compelled them to pay the costs to the plaintiff whose carelessness has been condoned and in a sense rewarded. While agreeing that the defendants' conduct debars them from realizing their own costs, we can see no reason for allowing the plaintiff to recover his costs, inasmuch as he has admittedly not performed his duties in their entirety.

We, therefore, accept the appeal in so far only as to order that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout the litigation. For the rest the appeal is dismissed.

Evidence Act, S. 11—Suit by a person against firm on foot of a transaction by one member—Plaintiff must prove that the member was acting as authorized agent.

Where a plaintiff sues a firm on foot of a transaction made by one member of the firm, it is for the plaintiff to show that either by the course of dealings between him and the defendants or by some overt acts of the defendant firm, that member was acting as their authorized agent in those transactions in such a manner as to bind the firm. Jammu & Kashmir High Court Advocate

Fforde, J.—The plaintiff, who is proprietor of a firm of commission agents dealing in grain and carrying on business at Moga, brought this suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 7,750 on foot of certain contracts which he alleges he made with the defendant firm in the months of December 1919 and January 1920. He alleges that he was employed by the defendant firm as commission agent for the purchase of grain ; that he purchased the grain from various brokers ; that he incurred liability with these brokers on the defendants' behalf and, finally had to make payments on foot of the transactions in question. The total result was a loss to the plaintiff of a sum which in all, including commission and other charges, amounts to the sum sued for.

The four defendants who are brothers have put in separate statements of defence, but their principal defence is that this suit is a purely fictitious one. They plead that they had no transactions of any kind with the plaintiff but that the defendant Shambu Dayal, their younger brother, had entered into certain transactions with the firm known as Pat Ram Das Panna Lal. that this firm on foot of those transactions owed Shambu Dayal a considerable sum of money, that they were afraid of disputing this liability, as Shambu Dayal had documents containing admissions and accordingly they had entered into a conspiracy with the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff firm was induced to bring an entirely false suit against the defendants in order to benefit this dishonest firm. In the alternative the defendants have pleaded that the transactions, if proved, were wagering transactions, and that in any event three of the four brothers could not be held liable but only the individual namely, Shambu Dayal, who had made the bargains. The three brothers other than Shambu Dayal allege that Shambu Dayal was a somewhat unsatisfactory member of the family and had parted company with his relatives.

The plaintiff Ghasi Ram has gone into the witness-box and he has sworn that he entered into transactions in question as agent of Shambu Dayal, that he incurred liability with those whose names he has given and that on the due date, namely, the 16th June 1920, the defendants' liability was in excess of the sum claimed. He explains that the liability on foot of the contract in question had been adjusted through the intermediary of Dr. Mathra Das and that he was found to be entitled to the sum sued for. In support of his testimony he has produced a number of witnesses including all the persons with whom he entered into the bargains in question. These persons have produced their accounts which show that these transactions were in fact entered into between them and the plaintiff. The plaintiff has also produced his account which contains corresponding entries. In addition, the plaintiff has produced a letter purporting to be written by Shambu Dayal in which Shambu Dayal gives them instructions for the purchase of five kothas of wheat. The learned trial Judge regards this letter as a forgery, but I am not satisfied with the reasons which he has given for coming to this conclusion.

His principal ground for refusing to believe in the genuineness of this letter is that it does not appear in this plaintiffs' letter books, and that there is an alteration in it in a different ink. It seems to me that, had the plaintiff desired to forge a letter of this kind for the purpose of his suit, he would not have put in interpolations in a different ink and thereby risk inviting such a criticizm. It would have been perfectly simple to have rewritten the document and to have framed it in such a more convincing form. The plaintiff has also produced a postcard which is admittedly in the handwriting of Shambu Dayal. This postcard refers to the fact that the writer had been expecting communication from the plaintiff and also requests the plaintiff to keep his firm notified about the future rates of grain. The plaintiff, in my judgment, had established a very strong prima facie case in support of his claim, and it was incumbent upon the defendants to go into the witness-box and establish their defence on oath. None of the members of the defendant firm has gone into the witness-box. Although they have definitely pleaded that the whole suit was nothing but a criminal conspiracy to defraud and up to the present have not withdrawn this allegation, they have not produced a tittle of evidence in support of this charge, nor have they attempted to establish it upon oath. In these circumstances I would not be inclined to ubmit the plaintiffs' evidence to that detailed and meticulous scrutiny which otherwise it would have received, I am satisfied that the plaintiff has satisfactorily shown that he entered into the transactions in question with Shambu Dayal, has on his behalf incurred liability with other persons and has discharged that liability and that Shambu Dayal accordingly is himself liable to the plaintiff on foot of these transactions. It has been very strongly urged by Mr. Shamair Chand that there is no evidence to show that the defendant firm as a firm can be held liable for the contracts entered into by Shambu Dayal. The defendants themselves pleaded that they did not carry on a grain business but that their firm was exclusively a money-lending concern. Here again there is nothing but their statement in the pleadings, and owing to the unfortunate policy adopted of keeping these defendants out of the witness-box the question whether they were exclusively a money-lending firm or whether they carried on business in grain or not, is a matter which we cannot decide in the absence of any evidence whatsoevor on that aspect of the case. It was, however, for the plaintiff to show that either by the course of dealings between him and the defendants or by some overt acts of the defendant firm Shambu Dayal was acting as their authorized agent in these transactions in such a manner as to bind the firm. This in my opinion the plaintiff has not succeeded in establishing.

The plaintiff (Ghasi Ram) in his evidence in the witness-box stated that the bargains in question were made with his firm by Shambu Dayal, but he nowhere says that Shambu Dayal was acting on behalf of the firm 'Moti Ram Ram Baksh.' He does not state that he ever had previous transactions with this firm from which an inference might be drawn that they were authorizing Shambu Dayal to act on their behalf. It is admitted that he did not notify the firm that Shambu Dayal was purporting to pledge their credits in these matters, and it is in my judgment not possible to hold from the evidence that the three brothers other than Shambu Dayal were aware that the latter was entering into these contracts on behalf of the firm and accordingly I would hold that the plaintiff's action must fail as against Phul Chand, Shankar Lal and Chandar.

I would accordingly accept the appeal, and while granting a decree to the plaintiff against Shambu Dayal for the sum of Rs. 7,750 dismiss the appeal as against the other three appellants. I would give the plaintiff his costs against Shambu Dayal; but in view of the defendants' conduct in this suit in pleading serious allegations of fraud which they have not attempted to substantiate, and in view of the fact that they have not gone into the witness-box, I would not allow the successful defendants costs of the appeal. I would give the plaintiff interest on the amount decreed from the date of this judgment up to realization at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

Criminal Appeal No. 876 of 1925, Decided on 20th November 1925, from order of Mag., 1st Class, Rawalpindi, D/-17th August 1925.

Penal Code, S. 75—Mode of proving previous conviction indicated.

Where an accused is charged under the provisions of S. 75, it is absolutely essential that the previous conviction in question should be clearly and legally proved. The proper way to prove such a conviction is either (1) by an extract certified under the hand of the officer in whose custody are the records of the Court which convicted; or (2) by a certificate under the hand of the officer in charge of the jail in which the punishment or any part thereof was undergone, or else by production of the actual warrant of commitment under which the punishment was suffered. In every case there must be evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted.

Sagar Chand for L. Saundars — for Appellant.

J. M. Mackay—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Feroze Khan and Yakin Ali have been convicted, the former under S. 435, I. P. C., and the latter under that section read with S. 75, I. P. C. Feroze Khan has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' cells and a fine of Rs. 500 or in default to 1½ years' further rigorous imprisonment; and Yakin Ali has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement and a fine of Rs. 500 or in default 1½ years' additional rigorous imprisoment and to police surveillance for two years, under S. 565, Criminal P. C., after his release from jail. The evidence clearly establishes the fact that Feroze Khan deliberately set fire to a wheat crop of Nawab, Nawab having actually seized him in the very act. Yakin Ali came to Feroze Khan's assistance, rescued him from the grasp of Nawab and the two made good their escape but not before they had been recognized by several witnesses as they were running away from the scene of the crime.

The appellant Feroze Khan is represented by Mr. Sagar Chand, and Yakin Ali appeals through jail. Mr. Sagar Chand has taken me through the entire evidence on the record, and, having considered this evidence and the arguments which he has put forward, I can see no reason to differ from the conclusions arrived at by the trial Judge.

Mr. Sagar Chand has urged that even if his client be rightly found guilty the sentence is too severe. I cannot agree to this contention. For a crime of this description the sentence inflicted by no means errs on the side of severity.

As to Yakin Ali the trial Judge has applied the provisions of S. 75, I. P. C., the appellant having been properly charged under that section as well as under S. 435. It does not appear, however, that any evidence has been led to prove the previous conviction in respect of which an enhanced sentence has been imposed. Where an accused is charged under the provisions of S. 75, I. P. C., it is absolutely essential that the previous conviction in question should be clearly and legally proved. The proper way to prove such a conviction is either (1) by an extract certified under the hand of the officer in whose custody are the records of the Court which convicted, or (2) by a certificate under the hand of the officer in charge of the jail in which the punishment or any part thereof was undergone, or else by production of the actual warrant of commitment under which the punishment was suffered. In every case there must be evidence as to the identity of the accused person with the person so convicted. No such evidence has ever been attempted to be produced in the present case. In fact, no attempt has been made to prove any previous conviction. Under these circumstances it is quite apparent that the conviction under S. 75, I. P. C. cannot stand. The learned trial Judge does not state to what extent the sentence has been enhanced by applying S. 75, and accordingly I can only presume that he would not have given a higher sentence had S. 75 not been applied than that which has been imposed on Feroze Khan, and I accordingly set aside the conviction under S. 75 and reduce the sentence to one identical with that imposed upon the other appellant, namely, two years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement together with a fine of Rs. 500 and in default of payment of the fine a further period of 1½ years' rigorous imprisonment.

Save as aforesaid the appeals are dismissed.

Judgment. — The appellant Sajjan Singh applied to be appointed guardian of the property of the minors, Bachna and Dalip, sons, and Chand Kaur, daughter, of Sundar Jat on the allegation that the mother, in whose custody the children were, was squandering the property. In support of the allegations made in the petition the petitioner also made an oral statement in Court. The Court, without investigating into the truth or otherwise of the application, by a somewhat summary order, rejected the petition. The order runs as follows :

The minors are with their mother, and are of tender age. There is no reason to suppose that they are not well looked after. The applicant apparently wants to gain something out of the girl. Application rejected.

It is apparent on the face of the order that it is based on mere surmises and conjectures as was the case in Jiwan v. Zebo (1) in which it was held that :

> The procedure under S. 13, Guardians and Wards Act, is not intended to be summary, and a Court should not reject an application for the appointment of a guardian of a minor without any enquiry at all.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., to be disposed of according to law. Costs to abide the result.

v.

District Board of Ludhiana—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 1052 of 1927, Decided on 25th November 1927, reported by Sess. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 14-6-1927.

Punjab District Boards Act, 1882 (amended by Act 11 of 1922), S. 58 B—Auction of right to levy toll and standing reeds—Amount due from the purchaser is recoverable by a civil suit as the sums are not due under the Act.

Where a District Board auctions the right to levy toll and standing reeds, the sums due from the purchaser cannot properly be said to be due under the Act. They are due on contracts and should properly form the subject-matter of an ordinary civil suit. [P 109 C 2]

Nand Lal—for Petitioner.

Facts.—The District Board of Ludhiana auctioned the right to levy toll from ekkawalas using the ekka-stand of the Board to one Narain Singh for the sum of Rs. 463. Similarly, certain standing reeds were auctioned in the name of the same Narain Singh for Rs. 120. Some other reeds were sold to the same person for Rs. 23. Narain Singh consequently owed a sum of Rs. 606 to the District Board, which he did not pay. The Board consequently moved Khan Amir Nawaz Khan, Magistrate, First Class, under S. 58-B, Punjab District Boards Act. Narain Singh contended that he had only given bids but was not the final purchaser, that he had not been paid any toll by the ekkawalas as the road was very bad and that nothing was due from him to the District Board. The Magistrate found, on merits, in favour of the District Board that the said amount was due from Narain Singh and ordered its realization by issue of a warrant for attachment.

Referring order.—Narain Singh has moved this Court against the said order under S. 438, Criminal P. C. The learned counsel for the petitioner has rightly refrained from arguing the merits of the case before me. He has emphasized that in a matter of the nature of the present case, S. 58-B is not applicable and that the order of the Magistrate is ultra vires. He points out that S. 58-B, District Boards Act, is greatly analogous to S. 81, Punjab Municipal Act. He has cited Mana Ram v. Emperor (1), and Maya Das v. Municipal Committee (2), in both of which cases it has been held by the High Court that S. 81, Punjab Municipal Act has no application to a case where the demand of the Municipal Committee is based on a contract like a lease. Although there is no direct authority with respect to S. 58-B, Punjab District Boards Act, the principle of the aforesaid two rulings appears to be exactly applicable to it.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the District Board was not competent to move the Magistrate in this behalf. The sums alleged to be due from Narain Singh cannot properly be said to be due under the Act. They are due on contracts and should properly form the subject-matter of an ordinary civil suit. It is noteworthy that the District Board has not cared to contest this petition before me, though a notice has been duly served on the Board. For the aforesaid reasons, I herewith submit the records of the case to the High Court with a recommendation that the order of the Magistrate be set aside.

Judgment. — For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge, I quash the order issued by the Magistrate for the realization of the money alleged to be due by the accused to the District Board.

Criminal Appeal No. 703 of 1927, Decided on 30th September 1927, from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Kasur, D/- 26th June 1927.

(a) Indian Arms Act (11 of 1878), S. 20—Possession of arms—Person concealing weapon while on railway platform—S. 20 of the Act is applicable.

In every case it is a question of fact whether the person found in possession of a concealed weapon is carrying the weapon in such a way as to indicate an intention to hide the article from the classes of persons referred to in S. 20. But the fact that a person is concealing a weapon while he is on a railway platform must indicate an intention to conceal that weapon from inter alia railway officials who are about that platform: A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 262, Foll.

(b) Indian Arms Act (11 of 1878), S. 20—Suspicion that accused was about to take part in some criminal offence is no consideration in passing sentence.

The fact that there was a suspicion in the mind of the police that the accused was about to take part in a criminal undertaking is not a circumstance which a Court can take into consideration in arriving at an appropriate punishment for the actual offence which has been proved under S. 20. [P 111 C 1]

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sahwney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted under the provisions of S. 20, Indian Arms Act of having in his possession a chhavi in such a manner as to indicate an intention that its possession may not be known to any public servant as defined in the Indian Penal Code or to any person employed upon a railway or to the servant of a public carrier. I have not the slightest doubt that so far as the possession of the chhavi is concerned the Crown has abundantly established its case. The appellant was caught on the platform of the railway station with a chhavi blade concealed in his loin cloth. The only question is whether the circumstances of the case constitute an offence under S. 19 or S. 20, Indian Arms Act.

Section 19 (f) makes it an offence to possess such a weapon and S. 20 makes it an offence to possess such a weapon in such a manner as to indicate an intention to conceal the possession of the weapon from inter alia railway officials. There is no doubt that carrying a chhavi concealed in a loin cloth indicates an intention to prevent the fact that the chhavi is in the possession of accused being known to anyone. The question is: Does the mere fact that a person has been found carrying a chhavi (in a way which is not unusual in this province) when amongst railway officials leads to the necessary inference that the concealment is for the purpose of preventing those officials knowing that he is carrying such a weapon. Dr. Nand Lal argues that to take this view would lead to certain anomalies, for instance, if a man were carrying a chhavi in the open country concealed in a loin cloth, that would not be an offence under S. 20, but if he continued his journey and arrived ultimately amongst railway servants the offence would immediately come under S. 20. This raises questions which do not arise here. In every case it is a question of fact whether the person found in possession of a concealed weapon is carrying the weapon in such a way as to indicate an intention to hide the article from the classes of persons referred to in S. 20. I am only concerned with the facts disclosed by the evidence in the case before me, and it seems to me that the fact that a person is concealing a weapon while he is on a railway platform must indicate an intention to conceal that weapon from inter alia railway officials who are about that platform. I am in complete agreement with the view adopted by Addison, J., in Chet Singh v. Emperor (1) that S. 20 is not confined, as has been held by Scott-Smith, J., and Kensington, J., to cases where the import or export of arms is attempted. It seems reasonably clear from the Ss. 19 and 20, Indian Arms Act, that the matter is not confined as held by those two learned Judges. In my judgment upon the circumstances of this case as proved, the appellant has been rightly convicted under S. 20 of possessing a chhavi in such a manner as to indicate an intention that his possession may not be known to any person employed on a railway.

The next question which remains to be considered is whether the penalty five years' rigorous imprisonment is not too severe a punishment for the present offence. As Dr. Nand Lal has pointed out the appellant is a young man of 24. There is no proof that he is a man of bad character, there is no evidence that he was engaged on any criminal undertaking at the time that he was arrested, and the learned trial Judge in imposing a penalty of five years' rigorous imprisonment was probably influenced by the fact that there was a suspicion in the mind of the police that the appellant was about to take part in a dacoity. Suspicion of this nature, however, is not a circumstance which a Court can take into consideration in arriving at an appropriate punishment for the actual offence which has been proved. The punishment for this offence, as far as the reported cases cited to me show, have varied from three months' imprisonment to three years for a first offence. I think that in the absence of any aggravating circumstance having been proved the sentence imposed in the present case is far too severe, and I think that an appropriate sentence would be one of two years' rigorous imprisonment. I would accordingly accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the sentence to two years' rigorous imprisonment otherwise the appeal must stand dismissed.

Moti Sagar, Mehr Chand Mahajan and Hargopal—for Appellants.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Badri Das—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—This appeal arises out of an action brought by a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law to impeach a sale of the coparcenary property made by his father. The District Judge, concurring with the Court of first instance, has held that the alienation was not for legal necessity or for payment of the antecedent debts of the father ; and while finding that the whole of the consideration passed he has granted a decree setting aside the alienation.

The vendees have preferred a second appeal to this Court, and the question debated before us is whether the plaintiff should, before recovering the property, refund the purchase money unless he shows that the money was raised by the father for immoral or illegal purposes. The contention urged by the appellants is supported by the judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sundar Das (1), but that ruling has not been followed by other High Courts. The rule laid down by this Court is to the effect that the decree in favour of the son should not be conditional on his refunding to the vendees the amount paid by them to the father : vide Badam v. Madho Ram (2). To the same effect is another judgment of a Division Bench of this Court, vide Kali Charan v. Jaggu (3). There are no doubt observations to the contrary in the judgment of Amir v. Malik Kahan Chand (4), but it appears that the judgment in Badam v. Madho Ram (2), was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided that case. The Madras High Court also has dissented from the doctrine laid down by the Calcutta High Court in Koer Hasmat Rai v. Sundar Das (1), and has affirmed the rule that a son is entitled to get a decree setting aside the alienation of the joint family property

Second Appeal No. 342 of 1927, Decided on 21st September 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Rohtak, D/- 11th December 1926.

(a) Custom — Possession of fallen house by non-proprietor — Proprietors of the village taking its possession—Possession is illegal.

A non-proprietor possessing a fallen house in a village must be held to have continued in possession of the house and the mere fact that the proprietors of the village placed some articles in a portion of the house which had not fallen down would not amount to possession of the house. The presumption always is in favour of the continuance of possession.

(b) Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 17—Owner of house suing for perpetual injunction—Amendment praying for possession of house should be allowed.

A prayer for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from preventing the plaintiff from constructing the house in dispute, should be allowed to be amended into a prayer for possession of the house without driving the plaintiffs to a separate suit: 135 *P. Shamair Chand—for Appellant.

Rama Nand—for Respondents.

Judgment. — The plaintiff, a Brahman, had a house for a long time in village Khani. This house fell down to a considerable extent about September 1925 in the rains. The plaintiff wished to rebuild it but was prevented by the defendants who are proprietors in the village, the plaintiff being a non-proprietor. The plaintiff accordingly sued for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from preventing him from constructing the house in dispute. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but was dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that the plaintiff should have sued for possession and had been wrongly advised to sue for an injunction. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

It has been established that the plaintiff has not been living in the shop himself for some years though he never abandoned it. Nor was abandonment ever pleaded. He had been carrying on his business in a neighbouring village. The finding, however, of the lower appellate Court on this point is that the defendants took advantage of the plaintiff's absence from the village at the time when the house fell down and quietly took possession of it as it adjoined their own. It was urged before me that they could not have taken possession of the greater portion of the house as it had fallen down. Some moveable property, however, appears to have been in a room which has still a roof on it. The plaintiff's witness stated that this belonged to Amin Lal a relative of the plaintiff, but they have been disbelieved by the lower appellate Court as Amin Lal was not questioned about this when he was in the witness box. This may have been a mere oversight. In any case, I am of opinion that the plaintiff must he held to have continued in possession of the house which had fallen down and the mere fact that the defendants placed some articles in a portion of the house which had not fallen down would not amount to possession of the house. The presumption always is in favour of the continuance of possession and in my opinion it cannot be said that a tumbled down house like the one in dispute is capable of possession being taken of it. For all these reasons I would hold that the lower appellate Court was wrong in law in holding that the possession was with the defendants. I would, therefore, accept the appeal with costs throughout and setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court, restore that of the trial Court.

In any case, on the finding that the defendants quietly took possession when most of the house fell down, the lower appellate Court should have allowed an amendment of the prayer as was done in Harji Mal v. Pokhar Das (1). It was most unnecessary to compel the plaintiff to institute another suit.

Where the suit instituted was one under S. 92, Civil P. Held: that Art. 17, Cl. (vi), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, applied to the case as it was brought under the provisions of S. 92, Civil P. The Court-fees Act being a fiscal Act must be construed liberally in favour of the subject.

G. C. Narang and Gobind Ram—for Appellants.

Badri Das and Amin Chand—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—The plaintiffs have come up in appeal from an order rejecting their plaint on the ground that it was not sufficiently stamped and that the plaintiffs have not been able, within the time fixed by the Court, to supply the deficiency.

The sole point, which we have to decide is whether or not the plaint is sufficiently stamped, having regard to the nature of the suit and the relief claimed. The suit undoubtedly is one under S. 92, civil P. C., and the relief claimed is: (1) that the present Mahant may be removed and a new Mahant may be appointed in his place, and (2) that, along with the Mahant so appointed, a committee may be formed to fulfil the objects of the trust, the property of the trust may be made over to the new Mahant and the newly appointed committee and the list of the said property may be prepared. And then there is further prayer about the settling of a proper scheme. The defendant denied the existence of the trust and claimed title in himself. He further pleaded that, having regard to the nature of the suit, ad valorem Court-fee ought to have been paid.

There cannot be any doubt that Art. 17, Cl. (vi), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, applies to cases which are brought under the provisions of S. 92, Civil P. C. If any authority were needed, the case reported as Ramrup Das v. Sujaram Das (1), clearly lays down that a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., falls within the purview of Art. 17, Cl. (vi), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. Now, the question is whether there is anything in the relief claimed which would take the case out of the purview of Art. 17, Cl. (vi). We have been referred to a number of cases by the learned counsel for the appellants and our attention has been invited particularly to Thakuri v. Bramha Narain (2), Girdhari Lal v. Ram Lal (3), and Gopi Das v. Lal Das (4). All these cases support the contention of the appellants and in effect lay down that where a suit is brought under the provisions of S. 92, Civil P. C., a Court-fee of Rs. 10 is, under Art. 17, Cl. (vi), Court-fees Act, payable. In Thakuri v. Bramha Narain (2), the learned Judges laid down the principle underlying this proposition very clearly. They say:

> If * * * every suit under that section (S. 539 old Code, S. 92 new Code) in which the appointment of trustees was prayed for, or the removal of a trustee was sought, had to be treated as a suit for possession of the property, the salutary provisions of that section would be seriously interfered with and in many cases defeated. A suit under that section is brought for the protection and preservation of endowed property, and it is safeguarded by the rule which requires that it must be brought by the Advocate-General himself or with the consent of the Advocate-General, or such other officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf. Instances may often arise in which the trust property is of considerable value. If Court-fees had to be paid with reference to that value whenever it was found necessary to bring a suit to remove a trustee who had committed a breach of his trust such Court-fees might be prohibitive and might prevent the institution of the suit.

It was argued on behalf of the defendant-respondent that the allegations in para. 5 of the plaint really made the suit one for possession of the property in dispute following upon the dispossession of the defendant. This, however, is not the correct way of looking at the pleadings because in the relief, as pointed out above, there is no prayer for the possession of the property for the benefit and advantage of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have brought this suit in their capacity as members of the public and do not claim any beneficial interest for themselves. Under these circumstances it cannot be urged, by any stretch of reasoning, that the suit was one for possession of the property which the plaintiffs claimed for their own benefit or advantage.

On behalf of the respondent reliance was placed upon S. 7, Cl. (iv) (c), Court-fees Act. We have already mentioned that the suit was not one which is technically called a suit for a declaration in which a consequential relief was claimed and therefore any cases which might have been decided with regard to the provisions of that section would not have any application to the present case. The learned counsel for the respondent further cited Raj Krishna Dey v. Bepen Behary Dey (5). That case is clearly distinguishable as it contained a prayer for a declaration followed by a prayer for an injunction. Bawa Mangal Das v. Narinjan Das (6) was also quoted, but there is a passage at p. 289 of the report which clearly goes a long way to support the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants. The only authority which could be cited in favour of the respondent was the case reported as Omrao Mirza v. M. Jones (7). It does not, however, appear from a perusal of the report that it was a case under S. 539, old Civil P. C. Any way, this case has been considered in a number of cases, and if it lays down anything contrary to the authorities cited by the appellants all that we can say, with due respect, is that we are not prepared to follow it.

The argument put forward on behalf of the plaintiff-appellants before us receives further support from a case reported as Sudalaimulhu Pillai v. P. Soma Sundaram Pillai (8), where the case reported as Omrao Mirza v. M. Jones (7), was considered and the learned Judge remarked:

> My attention has been drawn to Omrao Mirza v. Jones (7), but that case was not one under S. 92 so far as can be gathered from the report. If it is supposed to lay down a rule which is in conflict with the ruling in Ramrup Das v. Sujaram Das (1), I think we should prefer to follow the later decision of the Calcutta High Court.

In this connexion we may invoke in aid another principle of law which is well established. The Court-fees Act is a fiscal statute and, like all such statutes, it must be interpreted in a liberal and generous spirit in favour of the subject so as to make its operation less onerous, having due regard to the language used in the enactment. We are satisfied that the judgment of the learned Judge of the Court below was erroneous and cannot be maintained. We set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case for trial on the merits. Costs would be costs in the cause.

Criminal P. C., S. 556—Prosecution by District Board—Magistrate presiding at the meeting of District Board at which it was decided to start prosecutions is debarred from trying the case—Punjab District Boards Act (1882), S. 58.

Where a Magistrate, as a member of a District Board, presided at a meeting of the Board at which the proposal in the Commissioner's letter to start the prosecutions was adopted, and it was resolved that the police be called in to make an enquiry and to proceed against such of the District Board officials as the result of the enquiry might warrant:

Held : that the Magistrate is debarred from trying the cases. [P 115 C 1, 2]

Nand Lal—for Petitioners.

Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for the transfer of a case against Hem Raj, Secretary of the District Board, Muzaffargarh, and certain other persons charged under Ss. 409 and 420, I. P. C. from the District of Muzaffargarh and the Court of the S. 30 Magistrate Ch. Iqbal Singh.

The grounds for transfer as alleged in the application were that the Deputy Commissioner Sardar Bahadur Sardar Nihal Singh, as well as the S. 30 Magistrate Ch. Iqbal Singh, were personally interested in the case, as well as certain other cases that have since been commenced, and that the Deputy Commissioner, as well as the Subdivisional Officer had a certain amount of personal grudge against Hem Raj petitioner at any rate, and against some of the others. These allegations were supported by an affidavit. The application and the affidavit were sent to the District Magistrate and the Subdivisional Magistrate who have each furnished this Court with a reply.

One of the allegations made as far as the Subdivisional Magistrate is concerned is clearly false and after hearing Dr. Nand Lal on behalf of the petitioners, in my judgment, so far as the allegations are concerned there is no ground for transfer whatever and I consider that the application has been made solely with a view to protract the proceedings.

There is, however, another feature in the case. When it was decided to start these prosecutions a letter from the Commissioner to that effect addressed to the Deputy Commissioner was laid before the District Board at a duly convened meeting. Ch. Iqbal Singh was at this meeting apparently as the presiding officer. It was at this meeting that the proposal in the Commissioner's letter was adopted and it was resolved that the police be called in to make an enquiry and to proceed against such of the District Board officials as the result of the enquiry might warrant. In these circumstances S. 58, District Boards Act, and S. 556, Criminal P. C., do not apply, and it seems to me that Ch. Iqbal Singh is debarred from trying these cases on the ground that he took part as a member of the District Board in passing the resolution adopting the Commissioner's suggestion that these persons should be proceeded against. In any event, in the circumstances I consider that it will be inadvisable to allow the cases to proceed before that officer. It appears that the only other officer with S. 30 powers at Muzaffargarh is the Senior Sub-Judge an officer who is already burdened with a considerable amount of work. In these circumstances, I think the only course to adopt is to transfer these cases to the nearest district, i. e., Multan, and I accordingly transfer them to the District Magistrate of Multan with the request that he will make them over to some Magistrate in his district competent to deal with them. It has been suggested that, having regard to the nature and possible duration of these cases, the solution out of the difficulty would be the appointment of a special Magistrate to deal with them. That is a matter within the province of the Executive Government alone. Should the Government, however, decide to adopt that course this order of transfer to the Multan District would not be given effect to.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal preferred by one Khushia, who seeks to impeach a sale of his occupancy rights effected by his mother on 30th January 1915, when he was a minor. The suit was brought on 20th January 1921, and the question for determination is whether it is governed by Art. 44 or Art. 144, Indian Lim. Act.

Now, it is not disputed that the mother was the guardian of the property of her minor son, but it is contended that, as the Courts below have held the alienation to be without necessity, the transaction was void and that it was not necessary to impeach it within the period of three years prescribed by Art. 44. To this contention we are unable to accede. An alienation by a natural guardian of the minor's property is a voidable, and not a void transaction ; and the fact that it was not for necessity does not alter the nature of the transaction. In other words, it was an unauthorised transfer by an authorized guardian, and the limitation to set aside such a transfer is prescribed by Art. 44 : vide, inter alia, Labha v. Malak Ram (1). (The judgment then agreeing with the finding of fact of the District Judge held the suit to be barred and dismissed the appeal).

Second Appeal No. 859 of 1927, Decided on 10th Oct. 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 21st Feb. 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 151 and O. 41, R. 23 — Lower appellate Court remanding case but not mentioning the law under which the remand had been issued — Remand cannot be said to have been issued necessarily under S. 151.

In the absence of an express indication by the lower appellate Court as to the law under which the remand had been made, it becomes necessary for the High Court to determine under what law it was made. There is no doubt that a remand is permissible under S. 151, but it has often been laid down that a recourse should be had to S. 151 only in very exceptional cases. Therefore, in the absence of an express indication to that effect, it cannot be construed that every remand illegally made by the lower appellate Court is one under S. 151 in the absence of an express mention of O. 41, R. 23 or R. 25. If it were so construed, the result would be that it would be impossible for the High Court to interfere, in exercise of its appellate powers, with the illegal orders of remand passed by the lower appellate Court. [P 116 C 2]

Shamair Chand—for Appellant.

N. C. Pandit—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against an order of remand made by the District Judge of Rawalpindi on 21st February 1927. The final portion of the judgment of the learned District Judge is as follows :

> As has been remarked the question of title and dispos-ession has not been properly inquired into and I am of opinion that the case should be re-heard and decided afresh on its merits. I accordingly accept the appeal and remand the case for fresh trial and decision. Stamp on appeal to be refunded. Costs to follow event.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lies from the order mentioned above because, it is contended, that the remand is under S. 151, Civil P. C. Admittedly no appeal lies from such an order of remand but the counsel for the appellant contends that the remand is under O.41,R.23 and admittedly an appeal lies from an order of remand under that rule. It is to be noted that the learned District Judge has not mentioned the law under which the remand has been made. This should have been done but in the absence of an express indication as to the law under which the remand had been made it becomes necessary for me to determine under what law it was made. There is no doubt that a remand is permissible under S. 151, Civil P. C., but it has often been laid down that a recourse should be had to S. 151 only in very exceptional cases. The question is whether when the District Judge made this remark he intended to do so under S. 151. I am unable to hold that he did. If, as contended by the counsel for the respondent, I were to construe every remand illegally made by the lower appellate Court to be one under S. 151 in the absence of an express mention of O. 41, R. 23 or R. 25, the result would be that it would be impossible for this Court to interfere, in exercise of its appellate powers, with the illegal orders of remand passed by the lower appellate Court. There is an indication in the case before me as to the law under which the learned District Judge intended to make the remand. He has ordered the stamp on appeal to be refunded. This, under S. 13, Indian Court-fees Act could be done only in the case of a remand under O. 41, R. 23. I, hold, therefore, that the remand in this case was intended to be one under O. 41, R. 23 and therefore an appeal lies to this Court.

On the merits it is quite clear that an order of remand under O. 41, R. 23 was incompetent under the circumstances of this case. The trial Court had not disposed of the case on a preliminary point. On the other hand it had decreed the plaintiff's suit after recording and considering the evidence produced by both the parties in support of their respective cases. I accept this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the case to him under O. 41, R. 23 with directions to hear and decide the appeal on its merits. The lower Court may, if it considers such a course necessary, pass a proper order of remand after hearing the parties. The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal in this Court shall be refunded. Other costs will abide the result.

[P 118 C 2]

Moharam Ali Chishti and Muhammad Amin—for Appellants.

Badri Das and Mukand Lal Puri—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—The plaintiffs sued, as collaterals, two sisters, Mt. Ghulam Maryam and Mt. Ghulam Zainab, for possession of the suit land. They alleged that the defendants' grandmother, Mt. Jannat, succeeded to the land which had been left by her father after the death of her mother, Mt. Pairi, because she married a near collateral and the collaterals did not object. Mt. Jannat, before her death, gave the land to her grand-daughters by a deed of settlement, dated the 18th October 1918, and after her death the land was mutated in the names of the defendants on the 10th November 1918. It was claimed that this deed was complusorily registrable, that Mt. Jannat had no power to gift the land and that defendant 1, Mt. Ghulam Maryam, had married outside the family, and for this reason was not entitled to succeed to the land according to custom. The defendants denied that Mt. Jannat succeeded her mother, Mt. Pairi, upon her death and pleaded that Mt. Pairi gifted all the land which she had succeeded to upon her husband's death to her two daughters, Mt. Salamat and Mt. Jannat, in equal shares. This was before Mt. Pairi died. The collaterals have not sued Mt. Salamat as regards the share that fell to her. Mt. Jannat, it was claimed, succeeded as absolute owner, and on the 18th October 1918 executed a will (not a deed of settlement) in favour of the two defendants, her grand-daughters, as her son Kauda pre-deceased her. Then, on 19th October 1919, she gifted the land to her two grand-daughters, the defendants. This oral gift was entered in the register of mutations and was sanctioned on 10th November 1918 after Mt. Jannat's death. Lastly it was pleaded that defendant 1, Mt. Ghulam Maryam, had married inside the family and for this reason she was a lawful heir, while the other grand-daughter, being unmarried, was also a lawful heir.

The trial Judge framed various issues but found it unnecessary to deal with most of them. He held that Mt. Pairi gifted her property to her two daughters, Mt. Jannat and Mt. Salamat, and that they did not succeed upon her death. As it was a case of gift under the Customary Law the land could not revert to the collaterals, until all the direct descendants, male or female, of the donee has died out. The defendants were direct descendants of the donee. On this finding the suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs have appealed.

It is clear from the mutation, Ex. P. 1, sanctioned on 6th February 1891, that Mt. Pairi did gift the land, to which she succeeded upon the death of her husband, to her two daughters, Mt. Salamat and Mt. Jannat in her lifetime and she was present when the gift was mutated in the revenue papers. Mt. Jannat was married to a near collateral but Mt. Salamat was married outside the family. The learned counsel for the appellants who appeared before us admitted that a daughter would succeed to the estate of her father upon the death of her mother if she was married within the family and this is in accordance with Rose's Customary Law of the Multan District at p. 16. The general rule laid down except for certain castes is that daughters are excluded if there are male collaterals within three generations, but amongst Ran Jats it is stated that if the daughter has not married into another caste, i. e., if she marries within the same caste or family she takes all the property. This would mean that an unmarried daughter as well as a daughter who has married within the family or caste is entitled to succeed amongst Rans. Ex. P. 6 is a copy of the riwaj-i-am for tahsil Multan, where the village is situated. It states that the Ran tribe consists of certain persons who are named and that the custom among them is that, if a proprietor has no male issue, and his daughter is not married in another family, she succeeds to his entire property. Lower down certain persons amongst Rans stated that daughters get no share. In this case, however, it is conceded that the parties are amongst the majority of Rans who are in agreement that a daughter is entitled to succeed if she has not married in another caste, or, at least is entitled to succeed if she has married within the family.

This means that Mt. Pairi and Mt. Salamat did not accelerate the succession by gifting her husband's land to her two daughters ; for it is admitted that Mt. Salamat was not married within the family, though Mt. Jannat was. In this way Mt. Jannat would have succeeded her mother, Mt. Pairi, but Mt. Salamat would not. The gift by Mt. Pairi, therefore, which was indivisible, must be treated as a gift which took place in the year 1891 and was not objected to. It was not an acceleration of the succession. In fact Mt. Salamat's heirs are still in possession of half the land gifted by Mt. Pairi though she was not entitled to succeed in this family.

That being the case, it follows that the suit was properly dismissed ; for it has been held ever since the Full Bench decision Sita Ram v. Raja Ram (1), that property so gifted would only revert in the original owner's family where the daughters' direct descendants, male or female, have died out. This is the universal rule under Customary Law in the Punjab, see p. 53, Remark II of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, 10th edition.

Even if it were the case that Mt. Jannat succeeded to her mother (which she did not) because she had married within the family the land, which came to Mt. Jannat in the capacity of a daughter married within the family, would pass on to her direct heirs in the same way. In para. 23 of Rattigan's Digest a daughter who succeeds because she has married a collateral is classed along with a daughter who succeeds because she and her husband have looked after her father. There is thus no difference between the estate taken by daughters who have succeeded because they married a collateral and daughters who have succeeded because they and their husbands have helped the fathers of the daughters. The same rule, therefore, applies to them as given at p. 53 of Rattigan's Digest, namely, that the land does not revert again to the collaterals, unless the daughters' direct descendants, male and female, have died out. An authority directly in point is Ilahi Bakhsh v. Mt. Budhi (2).

Of course, if the land had been self-acquired by Mt. Jannat's father the property would never revert to the collateral as laid down in Jot Ram v. Hardawari (3). There is no finding, however, in this case as to the nature of the land as it was unnecessary for the decision of the suit.

For the above reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Fforde, J.—I agree.

Misc. First Appeal No. 2232 of 1923, Decided on 10th November 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 9th May 1923.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 17—Civil P. C., O. 22, R 4—Appeal by creditor against the order of adjudication—Debtor dying during pendency of appeal—Appeal abates.

An appeal preferred against the adjudication of an insolvent abates on his death, as such an order is purely personal to the insolvent. The right to sue does not survive within the meaning of O. 22, R. 4, on the death of an insolvent respondent: 69 P. R. 1888, Foll. [P 119 C 1]

V. N. Sethi—for Appellants.

Mehr Chand—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—One Ram Singh applied to be declared insolvent, and his application was accepted by the trial Court and he was adjudicated an insolvent. Some of his creditors preferred the present appeal against the order of adjudication, but during the pendency of the appeal Ram Singh died, and the creditors seek to implead his minor son as his legal representative for the purposes of the appeal.

Now, it has been held by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court, in Hardhian Singh v. Sham Sundar (1), that an appeal preferred against the adjudication of an insolvent abates on his death, as the right to sue does not survive within the meaning of S. 368, Civil P. C., (corresponding to O. 22, R. 4), on the death of an insolvent respondent in an appeal by creditors against an order adjudging him to be an insolvent. Such an order is purely personal to the insolvent. The learned counsel for the appellants has not invited our attention to any judgment which lays down the contrary rule. It is true that, as enacted in S. 17, Provincial Insolvency Act, if a debtor, by or against whom an insolvency petition has been presented, dies, the proceedings in the matter shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, be continued so far as may be necessary for the realization and distribution of his property. It must be remembered that the object of the section is that the death of the debtor should not affect the realization and distribution of his assests; but it has no bearing upon the question before us.

We must accordingly hold that the appeal has abated. The appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Criminal Revn. No. 1108 of 1927, Decided on 30th Sep. 1927, reported by Sess. Judge, Karnal, on 23rd June 1927.

* Criminal P. C., S. 203 — Case cannot be dismissed on the report of zaildar.

A Magistrate sent a case for preliminary inquiry under S. 202 to a zaildar and on his report dismissed the application under S. 203.

Held: that the Magistrate should not have dismissed the case upon the report of the zaildar. [P 119 C 2, P 120 C 1]

Shamair Chand—for Petitioners.

Hem Raj—for Respondent.

Facts. — Mam Kuar's application was under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate (Khan Sahib Choudhry Miran Bakhsh, Magistrate, 1st Class) sent it for preliminary inquiry under S. 202 to a zaildar and on his report dismissed the application under S. 203, Criminal P. C., on 6th May 1927. Mt. Mam Kaur has applied to this Court for revision of the above order.

Grounds.—The order of the Magistrate is clearly wrong. Section 202 applies only to complaints of offences. An application under S. 107 is not a complaint. The Magistrate had, therefore, no jurisdiction to refer the case to the zarilda under S. 202, Criminal P. C. He should have recorded the evidence himself and acted upon it if it was satisfactory. For the same reason S. 436 is not applicable, and I cannot order further inquiry. The case is reported to the High Court for directing the Magistrate to make inquiry into the case according to law.

Order.—It is unnecessary to determine the question whether the provisions of S. 202, Criminal P. C., apply to a case under S. 107, Criminal P. C., because I am of opinion that the Magistrate should not have dismissed the case upon the report of the zaildar. I accordingly accept the application for revision and direct the Magistrate to decide the case on the merits after hearing the evidence of both the parties.

Second Appeal No. 2271 of 1926, Decided on 5th March 1927, from decree of Dist., Judge, Jhelum, D/- 1st July 1926.

Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 20—Person party in lower Court can be added as respondent even after limitation.

Under O. 41, R. 20, a person who was a party to the proceedings in the Court below may be added as a respondent to the appeal although the time to appeal may have expired. [P 120 C 2]

Mohsin Shah—for Appellant.

Amar Nath Chona—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Muhammad Hussain died intestate and his estate was mutuated in favour of his sister. A collateral named Jiwan then sued for possession of what he alleged to be his share in Muhammad Hussain's estate and he joined as defendants 2 and 3 Pahlwan and Nek Alam, two other collaterals. Later on these two persons applied to be made plaintiffs and they were so joined by the trial Court and eventually the learned Subordinate Judge decided that these three plaintiffs were entitled to possession of Muhammad Hussain's estate against Mt. Sawani, his sister.

The decree was, however, drawn up in favour of Jiwan alone and by the decree it was ordered that Jiwan should get possession of the land and house in suit. In the decree Pahlwan and Nek Alam were shown as defendants and in the certified copy of the judgment supplied afterwards to Mt. Sawani and presented by her in the appellate Court, Jiwan was shown as the sole plaintiff and defendants were shown Mt. Sawani, Pahlwan and Nek Alam.

Mussammat Sawani preferred an appeal and in consequence of the form of the decree and of the heading to the copy of the trial Court's judgment she showed in her memorandum of appeal herself, Pahlwan and Nek Alam as appellants and Jiwan as respondent. The learned counsel who presented the appeal on behalf of Mt. Sawani had no authority to act on behalf of Pahlwan and Nek Alam.

When the appeal came before the learned District Judge it was pointed out to him that there can be no appeal against Pahlwan and Nek Alam and he held that there was no bona fide mistake on the part of Mt. Sawani since the judgment of the lower Court mentioned the fact that Pahlwan and Nek Alam had been made plaintiffs by order dated 22nd June 1925, the suit being decided on 8th December 1925. He further held, as the time for bringing Nek Alam and Pahlwan on the record had run out, the appeal against them is time barred, and that it must be dismissed as against Jiwan also.

The learned District Judge has overlooked the provisions of O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C., under which he could have corrected the mistake and transferred Pahlwan and Nek Alam from the list of appellants to that of respondents. It has been ruled by this Court in more than one case that under O. 41, R. 20, a person who was a party to the proceedings in the Court below may be added as a respondent to the appeal although the time to appeal may have expired. So long as the decree remained in its present form the appeal against Jiwan could not have been dismissed by the reason of nonjoinder of Pahlwan and Nek Alam.

I accept the appeal and order that Pahlwan and Nek Alam be joined as respondents to the appeal, and I return the appeal to the District Judge for disposal on the merits, pointing out to him that the decree at present is not in accordance with the trial Court's judgment. Costs in this Court will follow the result of the appeal.

A, an occupancy tenant under Government of land in an area to which the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, 1912, had been applied, issued a notice of ejectment through a revenue Officer against B who was in possession of a portion of A's recorded tenancy. B sued successfully in a revenue Court to set aside the notice of ejectment on the ground that he was not a tenant under A. A then sued B in a civil Court for possession as against a trespasser. B pleaded that he was a partner in A's tenancy by private arrangement between himself and A, and that by a subsequent private arrangement A had transferred to him all the occupancy tenant's rights in the particular land in suit. On a question being raised as to whether, in view of the provisions of the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, 1912, particularly Ss. 32 and 36, a civil Court had jurisdiction to hear the suit, Shuja-ud-Din and Devi Dayal—for Appellant.

Abdul Ghani—for Respondents.

Shadi, Lal, C. J.—The question of law formulated for the decision of the Full Bench is in the following terms :

A, an occupancy tenant under Government of land in an area to which the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, 1912, has been applied, issued a notice of ejectment through a revenue officer against B who was in possession of a portion of A's recorded tenancy. B sued successfully in a revenue Court to set aside the notice of ejectment on the ground that he was not a tenant under A.

A then sued B in a civil Court for possession as against a trespasser. B pleaded that he was a partner in A's tenancy by private arrangement between himself and A, and that by a subsequent private arrangement A had transferred to him all the occupancy tenant's rights in the particular land in suit. In view of the provisions of the Colonization of Government Lands (Punjab) Act, 1912, particularly Ss. 32 and 36, has a civil Court jurisdiction to hear the suit ?

It is an indisputable proposition of law, and indeed it is expressly enacted by S. 9, Civil P. C., that the Courts have jurisdiction to entertain all suits of a civil nature except those, the cognizance of which is expressly or impliedly barred. It is, therefore, for the party, who seeks to oust the jurisdiction of the ordinary civil Courts, to establish his contention.

How does the defendant, who denies the right of the civil Court to adjudicate upon the dispute, discharge the onus which rests upon him ? In support of his contention he invokes S. 36, Colonization of Government Lands Act, which deprives the civil Court of jurisdiction in any matter of which the Collector is empowered by that Act to dispose, and forbids it to take cognizance of the manner in which the Local Government or Collector or any other revenue officer exercises any power vested in it or in him by or under this Act.

It is not suggested that the Local Government can take cognizance of the claim made by the plaintiff, and the issue is thus narrowed down to the question whether there is any provision in the statute which empowers the Collector to dispose of the dispute between the parties. In this connexion the learned counsel for the defendant has, in a half-hearted manner, referred to Ss. 19 and 24 of the Act, but neither of these sections has any application to the case before us. Section 19 forbids a tenant of Government land to alienate for more than a specified period, his rights or interests in the land except with the consent in writing of the Commissioner, and declares an unauthorized transfer to be void. The section also provides that if a person has, in pursuance of a void transfer, obtained possession of the land after the commencement of the Act, he shall be ejected under the orders of the Collector.

It is unnecessary to examine the question whether the transfer in this case was or was not void, for it is admitted that the defendant obtained possession of the land before the commencement of the Act, and that fact alone takes the case out of the jurisdiction conferred upon the Collector by S. 19. Out attention has been invited to an unreported judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Ghulam Qadar v. Nur (1), where S. 19 was successfully pleaded in order to oust the jurisdiction of the civil Courts. The facts bearing upon the question of jurisdiction in that case are not free from obscurity, but it is clear that the objection to jurisdiction was raised, not by the defendant, but by the plaintiff, and no resistance was apparently offered by the opposite party to that objection. It was taken for granted that the case was governed by S. 19, and the learned Judges were not, therefore, called upon to discuss the question of jurisdiction or to express their considered opinion upon the scope of the section.

Nor do I think that S. 24 has any bearing upon the question before us. That section authorizes the Collector to impose upon a tenant, who has committed a breach of the conditions of his tenancy, a penalty or to order the resumption of the tenancy, but this authority can be exercised at the discretion of the Collector and only after giving a previous notice to the tenant. There is no suggestion by the defendant that either party has committed any breach involving a forfeiture of his tenancy, or that the Collector has exercised the discretion conferred upon him by the section.

The only argument, which has been seriously advanced before us, and which requires consideration, is that founded upon S. 32 of the Act. That section runs as follows :

> When the Collector is satisfied that any person has taken or is in possession of land in a colony to which he has no right or title, the Collector, may, in addition to any other powers he may possess, forthwith re-enter upon the land and resume possession of it and take possession of all crops, trees and buildings thereon on behalf of Government without payment of any compensation whatsoever.

(1) Civil Appeal No. 1994 of 1922 (Unreported.)

It will be observed that the Collector is empowered by the legislature to re-enter upon the land and resume possession of it on behalf of Government. The words "re-enter" and "on behalf of Government" make it clear that the section applies only to those cases in which Government is entitled to the possession of the land, but a trespasser has interfered with that possession. The matter being simple, it is not necessary for Government to bring against the trespasser an action of ejectment which is neither a cheap nor an expeditious remedy. The legislature has accordingly provided a summary remedy for recovering the land, and the Collector, acting as the agent of Government, is authorized to remove the trespasser from the land and obtain possession of it on behalf of Government. The section is obviously intended to protect the rights of Government and embrace the cases of trespassers or squartters against Government.

The Court must, no doubt, give effect to the language of the statute, which, either by express words or by plain and necessary implication, takes away the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts. But it is a well-established doctrine that a statute interfering with the established state of law must receive a strict construction, and that, when its language is doubtful, the Courts should lean against an ouster of the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals. Neither the language of the section, which to my mind is not open to any ambiguity or doubt nor any principle of law can warrant the contention that the Collector should intervene in a dispute between private persons and that the civil Courts should be debarred from adjudicating upon it. My answer to the question submitted to the Full Bench is, therefore, in the affirmative.

Where a farighkhati executed by a member of a joint Hindu family states in clear terms that the defined shares in the whole joint family property have been allotted to the coparceners and also gives them the liberty either to live together or to separate their own shares, the effect of the deed is to cause a separation in estate and interest between all the coparceners. Badri Das—for Appellant.

G. C. Narang and Jai Gopal Sethi—for Respondents.

Aga Haidar, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal which arises out of a suit for partition. It was originally instituted by a lady named Mt. Aso. While the appeal was pending in the lower appellate Court Mt. Aso died and her son Hira Singh was brought on the record as her legal representative. In order to understand the controversy in suit it is necessary to bear in mind the following narrative of facts :

One Gulab Singh was the husband of Mt. Aso. He died many years ago leaving him surviving his widow, Mt. Aso, and three sons by her, namely, Nikka Singh, Ganesha Singh, and Hira Singh. The sons constituted a joint Hindu family governed by the law of the Mitakshara. On 1st December 1884 it appears that Hira Singh separated from the family and a one-fourth share of the family property was allotted to him. He executed a document called farighkhati. In that document the fact of his separation is mentioned and it is further recited that the family property having been divided into four equal shares, Hira Singh had separated with his one-fourth share and had no concern left with the family property, that the remaining three-fourths share of the property was left with Ganesha Singh, Nikka Singh and their mother Mt. Aso, and that it would be competent to them to keep the corpus of the property either whole or in separated shares and that they were owners of their respective shares (aur nam burdgan apne apne hisse ke mukhtar-hain). It appears that the family property was not divided by metes and bounds and Ganesha Singh, Nikka Singh and their mother Mt. Aso continued to live together. Nikka Singh died in 1900. In 1917 Ganesha Singh made a will in favour of defendants 1 and 2, his daughters. Soon after making this will, Ganesha Singh died. In 1918 Mt. Aso instituted the present suit in the Court of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar. She claimed two-thirds share in the whole of the family property: one-third as her own share, which she got as a result of the partition of 1884, and another one-third as the heir of Nikka Singh, her deceased son.

It is important to note the defence which was set up by the defendants in the present suit. Their main defence was that the suit was barred by limitation, that their father Ganesha Singh was the sole owner of the whole property, moveable and immovable, in which neither Nikka Singh nor the plaintiff had any share, that there was no property which jointly belonged to the plaintiff, Nikka Singh and Ganesha Singh and that the farighkhati of 1884 did not confer any rights upon the plaintiff. The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's claim as regards the immovable property in suit but as regards the family business it held that the suit was time barred. The defendants preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge and the plaintiff filed cross-objections. The learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit in toto on two grounds which shall be discussed later on. Hira Singh, the legal representative of Mt. Aso, has filed the present second appeal.

It may be stated at the outset that Mr. Badri Das, the learned counsel for the appellant, intimated to the Court that he was not prepared to press his claim as regards the business carried on by the firm of Ganesha Singh and Gulab Singh.

The first ground for dismissing the plaintiff's suit is contained in the following sentence which is to be found in the judgment of the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court.

The first point urged by defendants' counsel is that the farighkhati of 1884 did not affect the joint nature of the rest of the family property. Ganesha Singh, in a previous case, stated, on 15th January 1916 that by the farighkhati of 1884 the entire property was divided into four portions, Hira Sigh's portion being separated off, while port ons of the other three, namely, Ganesha Singh, Nika Singh and Mt. Aso remained joint. This being so, I consider that defendant's counsel is right in arguing that Mt. Aso was not justified in suing for partition.

I may observe here that it is difficult to conceive a more confused and unsatisfactory finding. It appears to be a very unsatisfactory finding of fact which proceeds upon an even more unsatisfactory conception of a question of Hindu law. The farighkhati, as already stated, while recording the separation of Hira Singh from the joint family, clearly indicates the shares of Ganesha Singh, Nikka Singh and their mother, Mt. Aso. A perusal of this document brings the present case clearly within the principle of law as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council observe that where an ikrarnama executed by a member of a joint Hindu family stated in clear terms that the defined shares in the whole joint family property had been allotted to the coparceners and also gave them the liberty either to live together or to separate their own business, the effect of the deed was to cause a separation in estate and interest between all the coparceners. The clause giving the parties the option of being joint or separate was not inconsistent with a separation in estate. In this view of the law there cannot be any doubt that there was a separation among all the members of the family and their mother as a result of the farighkhati transaction. In Balabux v. Rakhmabai (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that there is no presumption when one coparcener separates from the others that the latter remain united. They further observed that an agreement amongst remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to re-unite must be proved like any other question of fact. In Syed Kasim v. Jorawar Singh (3), their Lordship of the Privy Council have summarized the law on the subject in the following words :

> It is settled law that in the case of a joint Hindu family subject to the law of Mitakshara a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately, even though no actual division takes place.

All the leading Privy Council cases are quoted by their Lordships in support of this proposition. In view of these authorities there cannot be any doubt that after the year 1884 and by virtue of the deed of farighkhati, already mentioned, there was a complete disruption of the joint family and after the separation of Hira Singh's share Ganesha Singh, Nikka Singh and their mother though living together, were in reality holding their shares in the eye of the law separately. The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court says that Ganesha Singh in a previous suit on 15th January 1916, stated that by the farighkhati of 1884 the entire property was divided into four portions, Hira Singh's portion being separated off while the portion of the other three, namely, Ganesha Singh, Nikka Singh and Mt. Aso remained joint. The learned Judge of the trial Court at the bottom of page 5 of the printed paper-book has observed that > in the present case there is no evidence of it (re-union). That it is not a case of survivorship is clearly proved from the facts that it is not pleaded in the present case.

Reunion has neither been alleged nor proved by the defendants. It becomes exceedingly difficult to understand what the learned Judge meant by saying that Mt. Aso remained joint. If he meant that the property was not divided by metes and bounds he is perfectly right because this is the plaintiff's case. If the learned Judge was thinking of a reunion, and even assuming that such a line of reasoning was open to him on the pleadings, he would be confronted with the elementary principle of Hindu law of the Mitakshara school that a member of a joint Hindu family once separated can reunite only with his father, brother or paternal uncle but not with any other relation. And it is hardly necessary to solemnly lay down that a mother is not a member of the coparcenary body constituting a joint Hindu family. She is only entitled to maintenance while the joint status of the family continues and it is only when one of her sons brings a suit for partition that she is entitled to claim a share in the family property. It comes to this that the finding of the learned

(1) [1903] 30 Cal. 738=30 I. A. 139=7 C. W. N. 578=8 Sar. 489 (P. C.).
(2) [1903] 30 Cal. 725=30 I. A. 130=7 C. W. N. 642=8 Sar. 470 (P. C.).
(3) A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 353=50 Cal. 84=49 I. A. 358 (P. C.).

Judge that "Mt. Aso remained joint." If he meant to hold that the family re-united and renewed its joint status, its first status is a finding based upon an erroneous view of law and does not amount to such a finding of fact as would be binding upon this Court in second appeal.

On behalf of the respondents the attention of the Court was directed to a case reported as Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar (4). This was a suit for partition and the defence of the defendant-appellant was that the members of the family had already separated long ago. In this case their Lordships observed at p. 259 :

> In the present case there were concurrent judgments of the District Judge and the High Court that the family descended from the propositus never separated and that the property sought to be partitioned is partible.

Their Lordships tested the findings of the Courts below by construing certain documents in order to draw legitimate inferences as to the intentions of the parties to the said documents and in the end accepted the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts in India. As a result of those findings the decree of the High Court was affirmed and the defendants' appeal was dismissed. In this view of the case the observations, at pp. 257-258 of the report are more or less in the nature of obiter dicta. It may be noted, however, that Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (5) and Balabux v. Ruhhmabai (2) are quoted in the judgment of their Lordships.

The learned Judge of the lower appellate Court has further observed that the plaintiff, in para. 3 of the plaint, states in so many words that after the farighkhati, she and Nikka Singh and Ganesha Singh remained joint. I have read the original plaint very carefully and in my humble judgment the plaintiff clearly alleges partition and allotment of shares to Nikka Singh, Ganesha Singh and herself after Hira Singh had gone out of the family with his share. It is true that she speaks of the property being joint (mushtarik), but what she really meant was that though the shares had been divided and specified the corpus of the property had remained whole. I therefore find myself unable to agree with the findings of the lower appellate Court on this part of the case.

(4) A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 49=48 Mad. 254=52 I.A. 88 (P.C.).

(5) [1866] 11 M.I.A. 75=8 W.R. 1=1 Suther 657=2 Sar. 218 (P.C.).

The second ground on which the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court has found against the plaintiff is that she was estopped from putting forward her present claim. He refers to certain statements made by Mt. Aso as a witness in a previous litigation between Ganesha Singh and his brother Hira Singh. Those statements were found to be false by the appellate Court in that case. The lady was no party to that suit and the learned counsel for the respondents totally failed even to formulate his case as to how the lady could be estopped by anything which she might have said as a witnes in the previous litigation when she was, apparently, supporting Ganesha Singh, the predecessor of the defendants in his claim against his brother Hira Singh. This finding of the lower appellate Court also cannot be accepted. The suit having been disposed of by the lower appellate Court on these two points and the other questions arising in the suit not having been disposed of by that Court the case will have to be remanded for trial on the merits.

I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. Costs here and hereafter would abide the event. The appellant will be entitled to a refund of the Court-fee that he paid on the memorandum of appeal.

Broadway, J.—I agree to the order proposed.

J. M. Mackay—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant, Mian Taj Mohammad, has been found guilty of having committed prejury in a judicial proceeding and has been sentenced under S. 193, I. P. C, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for seven years and to pay a fine of Rs 5,000.

The prosecution arose out of a transaction which took place more than nine years ago, and in order to appreciate the question of law and facts, upon which I have to pronounce my opinion, it is necessary to give a short sketch of the various events which have a bearing upon the case for the prosecution. On 28th July 1918, Sayed Nadir Hussain Shah, the Tahsildar of Bahalwal, in the Shahpur District, visited the village of Behk Lurka, in the south of the tahsil, to enlist recruits for the army. He was accompanied by the appellant Taj Mohammad, a zaildar of another village called Mela, and several other persons, and was received at the village boundary by the lambardar, the zaildar, and other inhabitants of the village. The Tahsildar went to the village daira and partook of some refreshment. Shortly afterwards, a large number of villagers, who were evidently dissatisfied with the methods adopted by the Tahsildar, in his compaign recruiting, came armed with bludgeons and hatchets and attacked him and his companions with the weapons. The Tahsildar sustained severe wounds to which he succumbed on the spot. Of his companions, Taj Mohammad received a large number of injuries including compound fractures of the bones of an arm and escaped death by concealing himself in a mosque. From this place of safety he did not emerge until after the arrival of the police.

It appears that as a result of the panic which ensued, practically the whole of the village was deserted, but the few persons who could be found were asked to appear before a Magistrate Khan Ahmad Hassan Khan, who recorded their statements. The appellant, Taj Mohammad, also was examined by the Magistrate, first on 28th July 1918, and again on 5th August 1918, and the latter statement has been relied upon by the prosecution in support of the charge of perjury.

A few months after the tragedy, 30 persons, who were arrested for complicity in the murder, were tried by a tribunal of three Commissioners constituted under the Defence of India Act, 4 of 1915, and Taj Mohammad was one of the witnesses examined by the tribunal on behalf of the prosecution. The deposition of Taj Mohammad was recorded on 7th and 9th December 1918, and this deposition has been produced as an exhibit in the present case.

The tribunal decided the case in January 1919, but there were still some persons who were alleged to have participated in the assault on the Tahsildar and could not be tried at that time, as they were fugitives from justice. These men were arrested several years afterwards, and the question of their guilt depended upon their identification by certain persons who claimed to be the eyewitnesses of the assault on the Tahsildar. In the course of the enquiry held by a Magistrate into the case against certain accused persons, Taj Mohammad was produced as a witness for the Crown on 16th May 1925 and it is the statement made by him on that day that is alleged to be false.

The portion of the statement, which forms the subject of the indictment, is to the effect that he could not identify three accused, namely, Jallu, Amir and Salehon, and that he could not say that he had known them before. Now, a perusal of S. 191, I. P. C., which defines the offence of "giving false evidence," shows that in order to sustain an indictment for perjury the prosecution must establish inter alia, two things : (1) that the statement was false ; (2) that it was known or believed to be false or not believed to be true. In other words, the statement must be intentionally false.

Let us now examine the evidence in order to see whether these requirements of the law have been fulfilled in the present case. It must be remembered that we are not dealing here with a case where a person makes two contradictory statements and is charged, in the alternative, with giving false evidence on one or the other of the two occasions. The appellant was charged with having given false evidence on 16th May 1925, and it was only this specific charge that he was required to meet.

It may be stated at the outset that there is no oral evidence to prove the falsity of the statement, and the case for the prosecution depends entirely on the depositions made by the prisoner before the commissioners in December 1918, and before the Magistrate in August 1918. It is, however, contended on his behalf that the deposition before the commissioners is inadmissible in evidence, as it was signed by only one commissioner, and not by all the commissioners. The learned counsel for the appellant is unable to cite any authority in support of his contention, and I am not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine that, where a Court is composed of more than one Judge, the deposition of a witness must necessarily be signed by all the Judges of the Court before whom the witness is examined, and that, if it is signed by only one of them, that irregularity alone vitiates the deposition. The object of requiring the presiding officer of the Court to sign the deposition of the witness examined by him is to ensure the accuracy of the record, and it cannot reasonably be urged that that object can be achieved only if all the Judges composing the Court sign the record.

While I cannot accede to the contention that the mere circumstances that the deposition was signed by only one of the three commissioners renders it inadmissible in evidence, I observe that the deposition was not even read over to the witness, and that defect cannot, in my opinion, be overlooked It is clear that the statement alleged to have been made by the prisoner before the commissioners does not bear a certificate that it was read over to him, and there is no oral evidence to show that it was in fact read over to the deponent. Mr. Justice Jai Lal, who was a member of the tribunal, does not remember whether the evidence was read over to Taj Mohammad ; and Nafis-ud-Din, who acted as the reader to the tribunal, is clear that he was never asked to read the statements over to the witnesses examined by the tribunal, and he adds that they were not read over to the witnesses ; otherwise there would have been the usual certificates to that effect. It is significant that, though the ahlmad of the tribunal was summoned as a witness for the prosecution, he was not examined at the trial ; and this failure to examine a material witness justifies the inference that the witness, if examined, would have deposed against the prosecution.

I need not, however, dilate upon this subject, because it is neither found by the trial Magistrate nor suggested by the learned counsel for the Crown that the record of tbe deposition was read over to the appellant. What is urged before me is that the commissioners were required to make only a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness examined by them and that they were under no obligation to read the deposition over to the witness. Now, S 5, Defence of India Act, enacts that, subject to any rules made by the Local Government, the commissioners, in trying the accused persons shall follow the procedure prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates; and S. 360, Criminal P. C., which governs the trial of warrant cases, prescribes in clear terms that, as the evidence of each witness is completed, it shall be read over to him * * * * * *This section was prima facie applicable to the proceedings before the commissioners and my attention has not been invited to any rule which dispensed with the requirement of the law enacted by the section. Nor do I think that the provision authorizing the commissioners to make only a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness can be viewed as containing by implication a repeal of the important and salutary rule prescribed by S. 360. The rule was enacted in order to ensure accuracy in recording the evidence given by a witness and to give him an opportunity to correct any mistake made by the writer.

There is ample authority in support of the proposition that when a deposition is not read over to a witness in accordance with the requirements of the law under which it was taken, it cannot be used against him on a charge of perjury: vide, inter alia, Emperor v. Mayadeb Cossami (1) Emperor v. Jogendra Nath Ghose (2); Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (3); Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (4) and Kartar v. Emperor (5).

If the statement made by the prisoner before the commissioners is excluded, and I think it must be excluded, from consideration, the question for determination is whether there is any other material on the record to show that the evidence given by him on 16th May 1925, was intentionally false. In this connexion reliance is placed by the prosecution upon the deposition made by the prisoner on the 5th August 1918, inplicating Jalla, Amir and Salehon, among others, in the murder of the Tahsildar, and alleging that he was previously acquainted with them. I have already pointed out that this is not a case of alternative charges in respect of two contradictory statements, so that it may be argued that one of the two statements must be false and that it is not necessary to prove which of them is false. The assignation of perjury in this case is founded on the falsity of the evidence given by the appellant on 16th May 1925, and it is the duty of the prosecution to establish that charge. The mere fact that he had, on a previous occasion, made an inconsistent statement does not necessarily prove that the previous statement was true and that the latter statement is false. It is to be observed that the earliest statement made by Taj Mohammad was on 28th July 1918, shortly after the assault on the Tahsildar; and that on that occasion he did not mention the names of Jallu, Amir and Salehon, but merely stated that he would be able to identify the assailants. With respect to the statement made on 5th August 1918, the Magistrate who recorded it, deposes that Taj Mohammad, when making that statement, referred two or three times to a paper which he was holding in his hands, and it is contended that it was that paper which contained the names of Amir, Jallu and Salehon. There can be little doubt that Taj Mohammad had sustained very severe wounds on 28th July and, considering that he was practically a stranger to the inhabitants of the village there is nothing improbable in the suggestion that he was not previously acquainted with the offenders, and that on 5th August he read out their names from a piece of paper which had been given to him by the police or by some other person interested in the prosecution.

Be that as it may: there is nothing to choose between the deposition of 5th August 1918, and that recorded on 16th May 1925, and there is not a scintilla of evidence to warrant the conclusion that the former was true and the latter false.

The discussion, so far, has proceeded upon the assumption that the two depositions contradict each other. It has, however, been repeatedly, pointed out that, in order to establish the charge of perjury, it is necessary to prove that the two statements are wholly irreconcilable. Is this test statisfied in the present case? It is to be remembered that, when Taj Mohammad gave evidence in 1925, he was deposing to a transaction nearly seven years old, and that the absconders had, in the meanwhile, taken steps to disguise themselves by growing beards. In these circumstances he cannot be blamed if he failed to pick them out of a group of persons. Nor can it be held that he intentionally gave false evidence when he stated that he could not say that he had known them before. As observed already, Taj Mohammad neither belonged to village Behk Lurka nor had any official connexion with it, and it appears that he had visited it only once or twice before the murder of the Tahsildar. His acquaintance, if any, with the offenders, must, therefore, be of a very casual character, and if, after the expiry of nearly seven years he expressed his inability to say definitely whether he was previously acquainted with them, he could not be deemed to have made a statement which he knew or believed to be false. There are cases in which a person might honestly and conscientiously swear to a particular fact from the best of his recollection and belief, and from other circumstances at a subsequent time he might be convinced that he was wrong and swear to the reverse, without meaning to swear falsely on either of the two occasions.

The learned District Magistrate appears to be under the impression that proof of the falsity of the evidence is all that is required to bring the case within the purview of S. 193, I. P. C., but the rule of law is perfectly clear that, in order to establish a charge of perjury, it is necessary to prove, not only that the prisoner made a statement which was false, but also that he knew or believed it to be false or did not believe it to be true.

The result of the above discussion is that the evidence upon the record does not warrant the conclusion that the deposition made by Taj Mohammad, on 16th May 1925, was false, much less intentionally false.

Before concluding I cannot help remarking that the District Magistrate has not, in the conduct of the trial, maintained that freedom from bias which was incumbent upon him, and has committed some characteristically unjudicial acts. The proceedings taken by him betray his ignorance of the elementary principle of justice that a person cannot simultaneously perform the functions of a prosecutor and those of a Judge in a criminal case. The Magistrate does not realize that he ceases to be an executive officer when he is sitting in Court to try a criminal case. Nor does he fully understand that as District Magistrate he is directly subordinate to this Court, and that he cannot be allowed to invoke the intervention of his superior executive officers in a matter concerning the discharge of his judicial duties for which he owes responsibility only to the High Court.

The learned counsel for the appellant has strongly animadverted upon the conduct of the trial by the Magistrate and has referred to various incidents in support of his contention that the Magistrate started with a bias against the accused and did not try the case in a fair and impartial manner. He has laid stress upon the fact that his client has repeatedly complained that the prosecution against him was instituted in pursuance of the instructions given by Mr. Macnabb in his capacity as Deputy Commissioner of the District. The complaint finds expression, inter alia, in an affidavit made by the accused in this Court on 11th January 1927, which, in Cl. (a) of para. 4, distinctly states that he, along with certain other persons, was being prosecuted under the instructions of the District Magistrate, and that the application under S. 476, Criminal P. C., for filing a complaint for perjury was made in pursuance of the directions given by the latter to the Public Prosecutor. In accordance with the practice of this Court, a copy of the affidavit was forwarded to the District Magistrate in order to give him an opportunity to submit his explanation with respect to this allegation and other allegations contained therein. The learned Magistrate, instead of submitting directly to the High Court his explanation stating in clear and unequivocal terms whether he admitted or denied the correctness of the allegations, sought the intervention of the Commissioner by writing a letter to him, from which the following extract may be transcribed here :

I have the honour to forward to you copies of letter No. 288 J, dated 14th January 1927, from the Deputy Registrar of the High Court, Punjab, to my address, together with copies of the enclosures.

The observations, which I have to make, are largely of an official and confidential nature, and in view of Ss. 123 124, and 125, Evidence Act, I do not consider that it would be proper for me to make a reply direct to the High Court without previous reference to you.

Margin.

I am, therefore, sending my observation on these paragraphs and would suggest that they may be forwarded to Government for such action as may be deemed advisible, under that,

Consultations between a Magistrate and the police, with regard to the conduct of a case, are confidential and no Magistrate should be forced to disclose before any Court the details or results of his consultation.

Now, I fail to understand how the District Magistrate expected the Commissioner or the Government to interfere in a matter which dealt purely with the question whether the Magistrate had taken such interest in initiating the criminal proceedings as to disqualify him to adjudicate upon the guilt or otherwise of the accused. It is obvious that the Magistrate was labouring under a misconception of the duty which he, as a subordinate judical officer, owed to the High Court ; and it appears that the Commissioner did not take the action suggested by the Magistrate, and the latter then submitted a copy of his explanation to this Court. I cannot too strongly deprecate the attempt of the Magistrate to invoke the aid of the executive officers, in trying to evade the duty of submitting to this Court his explanation in respect of the allegations made by an accused person against him. Nor do I see that Ss. 123, 124. and 125, Evidence Act, have any bearing on the question. S. 123 prohibits a witness from giving evidence, derived trom unpublished official records relating to any affairs of State, without the permission of the head of the department concerned ; and S. 124 forbids the Court to compel a public officer to disclose communications made tc him in official confidence when he considers that public interests would suffer by the disclosure. Similarly, S. 125 does not allow the Court to compel a Magistrate or a police officer to say whence he got any information as to the commission of nn offence. It appears that the sections were quoted by the District Magistrate in a haphazard manner without taking the trouble of understanding their meaning, and it is clear that none of them could be invoked for the purpose of avoiding to answer the simple question as to whether he had given instructions to the Public Prosecutor to take steps to prosecute the appellant for perjury. It is futile to suggest that there was in this case any privileged communication received by the Magistrate which he could not disclose. I need not pursue the subject any further, for the learned counsel for the Crown frankly admits that he cannot defend the conduct of the Magistrate in trying to shirk his duty to the High Court by writing to the Commissioner upon a matter with which the latter had no concern whatsoever.

Nor can the answers given by the Magistrate to the allegations contained in the affidavit be regarded as satisfactory or dispel the apprehension of prejudice in the conduct of the trial. One of these allegations was in the following terms:

That generally, almost on each hearing consultations are held by the District Magistrate with the Public Prosecutor and Court inspector before the hearing commences.

Now in his reply the District Magistrate does not deny this allegation, but seeks to justify his conduct by saying that he sees nothing objectionable in a Magistrate consulting the prosecution with regard to a case. Obviously he cannot do so in public since many of the matters, which the police would have to communicate, are of the confidential nature.

In support of his action he also refers to the fact that he is a busy officer and it is, therefore, necessary for him to see that his time is not wasted by the tendering of unnecessary evidence or the failure to produce a witness which is really required in a case on the first possible occasion. It was, therefore, in order to save time in the long run that I had to consult the Public Prosecutor and the Prosecuting Inspector with regard to the conduct of the case in order to expedite it as much as possible.

The practice of holding private consultatious with the prosecuting agency before commencing the hearing of the case was repeated on 16th December 1926, and it is described in the affidavit in these terms :

That the climax was reached on the last hearing (16th December 1926) when the District Magistrate came to the Court-room, called the case and then went inside his retiring room where he remained closeted with the Court Inspector, Sultan Ahmad, who had been investigating the Behk Lurka case, for about an hour and a half. Khan Ahmad Hassan, Extra Assistant Commissioner, Gujrat, who was the witness to be examined on that date, was also summoned to the retiring room and some sort of consultation held with him.

Here, again, the private conference with the prosecuting officers is not denied by the Magistrate who seeks to justify it by relying upon his previous remarks about the general conduct of the case by the prosecution, and by pointing out that

I was not anxious to waste any unnecessary time on the case since I have many other duties to perform; but since the case was an important one, and it had not been properly worked out by the prosecution, it was my duty to see that it was properly worked out.

The learned Magistrate also admits he asked the witness Khan Ahmad Hassan Khan to come into his retiring room, but expresses his inability to remember exactly what sort of consultation "I had with the witness." He again cites Ss. 123 to 125, Evidence Act, to claim privilege for the conversation he had with the witness, and explains that the principal subject of the conversation, so far as he could remember, was waterlogging in the Gujrat District.

It is a matter for surprise that a judicial officer occupying the position of a District Magistrate does not see the impropriety of holding private conferences with the prosecuting officers in respect of a criminal case upon which he had to adjudicate. The practice followed by him offends againt the elementary principles governing the administration of criminal justice, and the learned counsel for the Crown had no alternative but to admit that it was indefensible. I trust that no Magistrate will ever be guilty of such improper conduct in the discharge of his judicial functions or forget the fundamental rule with its necessary implications that he is an impartial adjudicator between the prosecuting agency and the people.

I do not propose to deal with other instances of the unjudicial manner in which the Magistrate has acted in this case, beyond mentioning certain incidents which took place at the concluding stage of the trial and to which my attention has been specially invited. It appears that, after framing the charge against the accused, the District Magistrate declined to summon all the witnesses cited on his behalf and took upon himself the duty of arbitrarily selecting only a few witnesses who were to be summoned to give evidence for the defence. He then adjourned the case for hearing at a place called Kathwai. Now, according to the affidavit filed by the accused in the High Court on the 19th May 1927, this place is unconnected by rail or by any vehicular traffic with the rest of the district. It is only possible to reach Kathwai on foot or on ponies.

The accused urged before the trial Court that, apart from the inconvenience to him and his witnesses, it will be impossible for the petitioner to take any good counsel to such a far away place which should only be reached by ponies, and that he (Magistrate) should be pleased to fix any place in the district which is a railway station.

It cannot be said that the request was an unreasonable one, but the learned Magistrate took no notice of it. The accused, thereupon, moved this Court which passed on 23rd May 1927, an order directing the Magistrate to give every reasonable facility to the accused to produce his defence evidence, and to hold the trial of the case either at the headquarters of the district or at a place which is either a railway station or easily accessible from a railway station.

It appears that before the hearing of the case, on 6th June 1927, the Magistrate had moved on to another place called Sodhi, and while Kathwai is 17 miles from the nearest railway station, Sodhi is nine miles further on in the Salt Range. Before he commenced the hearing of the evidence on 6th June, a certified copy of the order of the High Court, quoted above, was placed before him, but he persisted in holding the trial at Sodhi and paid no heed to the request of the accused that the case should be heard at a place where his counsel from Lahore could appear without inconvenience. He then recorded the evidence of the witnesses present at that place and closed the case for the defence. In his judgment the District Magistrate explains that Sodhi is not an inaccessible part of the Salt Range, but this explanation is contradicted by the affidavit of the prisoner who describes in detail the difficulties of the journey, from the railway station at Khushab to Kathwai and Sodhi.

In the absence of further information, it is difficult to decide which of these divergent versions is correct, but one thing is clear, that Sodhi cannot be regarded as a place "easily accessible frnm a railway station" as contemplated by the order of this Court, and that the Magistrate should not have held the trial at such an out-of-the-way place.

The learned Magistrate, not only closed the case for the defence on 6th June 1927 but even went so far as to call the accused and his counsel in the middle of the night and pronounced judgment at 1 a.m. inflicting upon the convict the maximum term of imprisonment permissible under the law. He was then taken into custody and had to remain in jail before he was admitted by the appellate Court to bail. It is incontrovertible that one of the most important duties of a Court of law is to create and maintain confidence in the administration of justice and to conduct itself in such a manner as to produce in the minds of the parties an impression that nothing but absolute justice would be done to them. The proceedings taken by the Magistrate show that he did not hear the case with that judicial detachment which should characterize the trial of a criminal case, and that he allowed his executive zeal to outrun his judicial discretion.

For the reasons stated above I hold that the guilt of Taj Mohammed has not been established. I accordingly allow the appeal and setting aside the conviction and the sentence, I direct that he be released from his obligation under the bail bond.

Judgment.—In execution of a money decree passed against Abdullah, appellant, the Anjuman Dehi of mauza Bariar in the tahsil of Batala, attached a house belonging to the judgment-debtor. An objection was raised by the latter that the house could not be attached under S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., as he is an agriculturist and occupies it. This objection was rejected by the Subordinate Judge and an appeal has been dismissed by the District Judge. Consequently this second appeal has been filed by the judgment-debtor.

It is contended ou behalf of the appellant that the view of the learned District Judge that S. 60, Civil P. C. is intended to afford protection to actual cultivators of land is wrong and that the expression "agriculturist" in S. 60, Civil P. C. is synonymous with the term as it is used in certain legislative provisions which apply to this province, as for instance, the Alienation of Land Act, in other words, it is contended, that it means any person who belongs to an agricultural tribe, that it is immaterial whether he owns any land or not and further that in any case it means a person whose main income is derived from agriculture whether the land is cultivated by himself or by his tenants. This contention is clearly opposed to previous authority.

In Gurbakhsh Singh v. Gulam Qadir (1) a learned Judge of the Chief Court of the Punjab held that the word "agriculturist" is used in S. 266 (c) (which is the same as S. 60 (1) (c) of the present Code) denotes a husbandman and a person who carries on and makes his living by tillage and not a mere owner of land and that > the object of the legislature is to provide on economic grounds against cultivators of land being hindered or obstructed from earning their livelihood or practising their calling and against land being thrown out of cultivation by such attachments at the instance of mere holders of money decrees. If the District Judge's reasoning is correct the mere possession of land by the debtor is quite sufficient to protect him from having his dwelling house sold in execution of the decree. He may be a trader or banker or a person practising one of the learned professions, but if he has some land from which he gets rent in cash or in kind, his dwelling house, though it may be a palatial one, must be exempted from attachment. This cannot be the meaning of the clause. It seems to be mainly intended for the benefit of the poorer class of husbandmen who carry on or make their living by actual cultivation.

It was found in that case that though the judgment-debtor was a large landowner he did not cultivate the land himself nor did he own any agricultural cattle. His income was derived from rents paid by tenants to whom his land was let. The learned Judge held that such a person was not entitled to the protection afforded by S. 266 (c) or 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C.

A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court held in First Appeal No. 113 of 1919 D. Rubine v. Balwantrai Ramnarayan Trivide (A. I. R. 1923 Bom. p. 12) that in order to enable a judgment-debtor to get the benefit of S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C. it must be proved that the judgment debtor earns his livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture or that he ordinarily engages personally in agricultural labour. It was found that > at the most the judgment-debtor seems to have leased 150 acres of land some of which he let out again to tenants and some he tilled by the aid of servants.

One of his witnesses stated that he saw the defendant supervise the cultivation of his land. The above facts, it was held, were not sufficient to entitle the judgment-debtor to a finding that he was personally engaged in agricultural labour and was therefore an agriculturist as defined in S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C.

In Mt. Bhuta v. Basheshar Singh (2), the Allahabad High Court held that a person does not cease to be an agriculturist even, if he has lost his agricultural land if it is established that he was cultivating the soil for remuneration. The judgment-debtor in that case admittedly belonged to an agricultural caste and it was found that she had no other source of livelihood except cultivation of land whether her own or of others. It was also found that she has still got some shikmi land. One of the learned Judges who decided that case was of opinion that on the facts proved the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist. The other learned Judge who was a party to the judgment concurred but with considerable hesitation. He based his decision more on the admission made by the decree-holder in some previous proceedings in which he had alleged that the judgment-debtor had been given some land to live on, that her father had built some houses for her thereon and also that she owned two pairs of bullocks for cultivation. It was on this admission that the learned Judge preferred to hold that the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist.

I do not, therefore, think that this last case materially helps the appellant. On the other hand some observations made by the learned Judges appear to support the contention of the decree-holders. In any case the two other authorities that have already been referred to clearly show that the term "agriculturist" as used in S. 60 means a person whose main source of income is actual cultivation or tillage of land and that the protection afforded by S. 60 (1) (c) does not necessarily extend to persons who are merely agriculturists by virtue of notifications issued by the Local Government under the special Acts applicable to this province. In the case before me it has been established that the judgment-debtor does not cultivate any land himself as he is physically unfit to do so. He owns some land which is let out to tenants on the batai system. He does not own any cattle. The house in question is used for stabling his mare and storage of fodder for the mare. Under the circumstances I hold that the judgment debtor has been rightly held not to be an agriculturist within the meaning of S. 60 (1) (c), Civil P. C., and that in any case the house is not occupied by him as such. The consequence is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 All. 432.

Criminal P. C., S. 562—Accused released but ordered to pay compensation to complainant—Order illegal.

The order directing the convicts who were released under S. 562 to pay compensation to the complainant is illegal. [P 134 C 2]

Farrukh Hussain—for the Crown.

Report.

Facts.—Abbas Khan, complainant, was taking away the animals of the accused for the purpose of impounding them because they had trespassed into his lands. The accused interfered in the way, beat Abbas Khan and rescued the animals. One of the injuries inflicted was of a grievious nature. The complainant remained in the hospital for 20 days. The accused was challaned under S. 325, I. P. C. Rahim Ali was acquitted and two others convicted and ordered to execute bonds with sureties under S. 562, Criminal P. C, and also to pay Rs. 25 as compensation to the complainant.

Grounds.—The order of the Magistrate is obviously illegal as regards the accused who were convicted. It appears that the compensation awarded to complainant must have been intended as a fine to be recovered from the accused. If that is so then it would appear that the accused were punished by fine in addition to being bound down under S. 562, Criminal P. C. This is illegal as that section of the Criminal Procedure Code can only be applied when no punishment is inflicted.

Inasmuch as the order of the Magistrate is not legal the file is, therefore, submitted to the High Court with a view to the said order being set aside by the Hon'ble Judges in so far as it relates to the paying of compensation.

Order.—The convicts, who were released by the trial Magistrate under S. 562, Criminal P. C, could not be directed to pay compensation to the complainant. The order is obviously illegal and must be set aside.

It appears that the complainant made an application to the District Magistrate praying that the order under S. 562, Criminal P. C., be set aside and that suitable sentences be awarded to the convicts. But the District Magistrate has not dealt with that application. My order shall not preclude him from adjudicating upon that application.

First Appeal No. 2835 of 1922, Decided on 16th May 1927, from order of Sr. Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 28th July 1922.

Custom (Punjab) — Succession — Rans — Daughter married to a collateral succeeds in preference to collaterals.

Among Rans, if a proprietor has no male issue and his daughter is not married in another family, she succeeds to his entire property. Thus an unmarried daughter, as well as a daughter who has married a collateral, are both entitled to succeed upon the death of their father and his widow in the presence of collaterals. [P 136 C 1]

Moharam Ali Chishti and Mohammad Amin—for Appellants.

Badri Das and Mukund Lal Puri—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—This is a suit by collaterals for a declaration to the effect that a will, dated the 10th June 1917, executed by one Kauda, deceased, in favour of his mother, Mt. Jannat, his widow Mt. Jindo, and his daughters, Mts. Ghulam Maryam and Ghulam Zainab, in equal shares, is void and will not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs will be entitled to succeed to the land in suit upon the death of his widow, Mt. Jindo. It was alleged that parties followed custom and that Kauda was too ill to understand the contents of the will. It was further stated that the land, which has gone to Mt. Jannat, his mother, had been mutated in favour of her granddaughters, Mt. Ghulam Maryam and Mt. Ghulam Zainab, on the 10th November 1918, along with other land which Mt. Jannat had got from her father and that she had no power to gift this land to her granddaughters. The plaintiffs' case was that the widow, Mt. Jindo, should have succeeded to the whole land and that, upon her death, they should succeed. It was further stated that Mt. Ghulam Maryam had married outside the family and, therefore could not succeed to her father, Kauda, while the other daughter, Mt Ghulam Zainab, was unmarried.

The defendants pleaded that most of the property was not ancestral, that Kauda was in possession of his senses when the will was executed and that Mt. Jannat willed the property to her granddaughters on the 18th October 1918 and then orally gifted it the next day to them. This oral gift was entered in a mutation which was sanctioned on the 10th November 1918. Lastly it was pleaded that the defendants were the lawful heirs of Kauda, and that Mt. Ghulam Maryam had married inside her family and was entitled to succeed her father for that reason.

Various issues were struck, but only some of them were decided. The trial Court held that most of the land was not ancestral. He then proceeded to discuss the will, and finding that its execution, which was not denied in the pleadings, was not satisfactorily proved, went on to hold that it had not been proved that it had been executed by Kauda "with a disposing mind." He, however, did not discuss any of the evidence as to whether Kauda had a disposing mind or not. He further found that Mt. Ghulam Maryam, daughter of Kauda, had married within the family and that she was, therefore, in any case, entitled to succeed to her father upon the death of her mother, Mt. Jindo. As regards the bulk of the property which was self-acquired the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue in the presence of daughters, and as regards the property "in clause" of the amended plaint, which was ancestral, they had also no locus standi to sue in the presence of Mt. Ghulam Maryam, Kauda's daughter. The suit was, therefore, dismissed, and the plaintiffs have appealed.

It was admitted before us by the learned counsel who appeared for the appellants that daughters who have married a collateral are entitled to succeed even in the presence of collaterals within four degrees. It was also admitted that the married daughter, Mt. Ghulam Maryam, had two sons and two daughters. If she is her father's heir it is clear that the suit was properly dismissed and a finding in her favour on this point will dispose of the appeal.

Part of the pedigree-table of this family is given at p. 309 of paper-book A. It shows the descendants of Ashaq only. Mt. Ghulam Maryam has not married a descendant of Ashaq, but it is claimed that she has married a more distant collateral who meets this branch in the common ancestor, Mohabbat, son of Bagha. The full pedigree-table is given at pp. 13 to 31 of paper-book B. Mt. Ghulam Maryam married one Waryam, the son of Allah Ditta. Allah Ditta is given in the full pedigree-table as the son of Jind, who was the son of Sau. Sau's grandfather was Akal who was the son of Mohabbat, while Ashaq was the grandson of Mohabbat. The full pedigree-table is that of the settlement before that of 1920. The settlement of 1920 was not completed when the suit was tried. That explains why the name of Waryam, the husband of Mt. Ghulam Maryam, is not written below that of his father Allah Ditta in the old pedigree produced, but there is ample evidence on the record to establish that Waryam is the son of this Allah Ditta.

One of plaintiffs' own witnesses, Saifal, P. W. 14, who is a member of this family, has stated that Waryam, son of Allah Ditta, the husband of Mt. Ghulam Maryam, is descended from Sace in this family, and that is what is recorded as regards Allah Ditta in the full pedigreetable. Two other witnesses of the plaintiffs, namely, Wazir and Fateh Mahomed, P. Ws. 7 and 8, have also stated that Waryam, son of Allah Ditta, is a descendant of the parties as well as the witnesses' common ancestor. Further, three of the defendants' witnesses, Nur Mahomed, Allah Ditta and Waryam, D. Ws. 9, 10 and 20, who are also members of this family, have given similar evidence. There is no doubt, therefore, that Mt. Ghulam Maryam had married a collateral, not very far remote. I would so hold.

The riwaj-i-am of this Tahsil is given at p. 32 of paper-book B. The custom there laid down for Rans is that if a proprietor has no male issue and his daughter is not married in another family, she succeeds to his entire property. This would seem to mean that an unmarried daughter, as well as a daughter who has married a collateral, are both entitled to succeed upon the death of their father and his widows in the presence of collaterals within three generations. In the plaint the plaintiffs alleged that Mt. Ghulam Maryam had not married a person within the family thus indicating that this was the custom amongst them. In face of the evidence and the riwaj-i-am the learned counsel had to concede that a daughter who had married a collateral was entitled to succeed to the estate of her father as there was no possible escape from this conclusion. It does not matter, therefore, whether Kauda, who died on the 25th June 1917, after having executed a will dated the 10th June 1917, executed this will in the possession of his senses, or whether he had power to make it. So far as the collaterals are concerned they are out of Court because the only person entitled to object is Mt. Ghulam Maryam who is certainly her father's heir and who has sons and daughters alive. If there had been no will she would have succeeded to her father's estate upon the death of her mother and grandmother. Her grandmother is already dead though her mother is alive. It may be the case that the unmarried daughter is also entitled to succeed to her father, but it is unnecessary to decide this because admittedly the daughter who has married a pollateral must succeed and thus the claintiffs have no locus standi to sue for a declaration that Kauda's will is void and that they are entitled to succeed upon the death of his widow, Mt. Jindo. For this reason I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1451 of 1927, and Civil Revn. No. 252 of 1927, Decided on 31st October 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 10th March 1927.

Limitation Act, S. 14—Good faith—Presentation of appeal to a wrong Court—The Court taking time in considering that appeal does not lie to that Court—S. 14 applies.

A suit for redemption the value of which for the purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 99, was decreed against the appellant who presented an appeal to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge who, after enquiry, held that the suit was for possession by redemption of "land" as the property in suit was initially land and its character had not been changed by anything alleged to have been done thereon by the defendant. He, therefore, returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court. The next day, the appellant filed the appeal in the Court of the District Judge though the presentation was not within time. The appellant claimed reduction of the time spent by him in prosecuting his appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judgs under S. 14, Lim. Act.

Held : that the provision of S. 14, Lim. Act, applies to this case as the reasons given by the appellant in support of his contention that the property in suit had changed its character were not such as could summarily be rejected. It had not been shown that the appellant had any motive for filing the appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge ; he honestly believed that the appeal lay to that Court.

Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of Appeal No. 1451 of 1927 and Civil Revision No. 252 of 1927. They both arise out of the same case.

A suit for redemption was filed by the contesting respondents against Maula Bakhsh, appellant, in one case and the petitioner in the other and was decreed The value for the purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 99. The defendants being dissatisfied with the decree of the Subordinate Judge presented an appeal in the Court of the Senior Subrdordinate Judge. On the hearing of the appeal an objection was taken by the respondent that the suit being in respect of the land as defined in the Punjab Tenancy Act and the Land Revenue Act was a land suit and consequently that no appeal lay to the Senior Subordinate Judge who is competent to hear appeals in small cause and unclassed suits. The Senior Subordinate Judge, after enquiry, held that the suit was for possession by redemption of 'land' as the property in suit was initially land and its character had not been changed by anything alleged to have been done thereon by the defendant. He, therefore, returned the memorandum of appeal on the 23rd February 1927, for presentation to the proper Court. On 24th February 1927, i.e., the next day, the appellant filed the appeal in the Court of the District Judge at Rawalpindi. Admittedly, on that date, the ordinary period for appeal to the Court of the District Judge had expired. The appellant, however, claimed reduction of the time spent by him in prosecuting his appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, under S. 14, Lim. Act, but the learned District Judge declined to give the appellant advantage of that provision of law holding that there was no scope for doubt about the Court which was competent to hear the appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge and that it could not be held that the appellant filed the appeal in the Senior Subordinate Judge's Court in good faith.

Maula Bakhsh has, therefore, presented a petition for revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, returning his memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court and an appeal against the order of the District Judge dismissing his appeal as barred by time. On the finding of the Senior Subordinate Judge there is no doubt that the suit is a land suit. It related to an area of 2 kanals and 14 marlas. In 1924 the defendant built a kotha on two marlas of this land. It is true that in the kharif of 1924 the land was not cultivated and the suit was instituted on 1st July 1924. It is not, however, possible on that account alone to hold that at the time of the institution of the suit the character of the land had been changed in such a way as to make a suit relating thereto an unclassed suit. The petition for revision, therefore, is dismissed with costs.

With regard to the appeal, I hold that it must be accepted. The reasons given by the appellant in support of his contention that the property in suit had changed its character were not such as could summarily be rejected. They needed consideration. It has not been shown that the appellant had any motive for filing the appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge. On the other hand, it appears that he honestly believed that the appeal lay to that Court. Under these circumstances I hold that this was a fit case in which the provisions of S. 14, Lim. Act, should have been applied specially because the appellant filed his appeal in the Court of the District Judge the day after the Senior Subordinate Judge decided against him. Accepting the appeal I set aside the order of the District Judge and holding the appeal to be within time, I remand it to him for decision on the merits. There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Sardha Ram, Badri Das and Hem Raj—for Appellant.

Man Singh and Kishan Dial—for Respondent.

Broadway, J.—Two persons Sundar Singh and Agya Singh were carrying on business as contractors in partnership. About 20th May 1925 they decided to end this partnership, and referred the questions arising between them to the arbitration of Sardar Bahadur Singh who had to go into the question of dissolution of the partnership and into the accounts. The arbitrator gave his award on 15th July 1925, subsequent to which Sardar Bahadur Singh filed an application in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, for an order that the award should be filed and made a rule of Court. On 30th August 1926, an order was passed directing that the award be filed, and a decree was drawn up in the terms of the said award. Agya Singh then preferred an appeal to this Court attacking the order directing that the award be filed and paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 on the memorandum of appeal. At the hearing of this case a preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Man Singh on behalf of the respondent Sundar Singh to the effect that the appeal was insufficiently stamped inasmuch as Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act, was applicable. Under that article the Court-fee prescribed is an ad valorem one. Mr. Man Singh in support of his contention referred to Gauri Shankar v. Anant Ram (1). That was a decision of my own sitting alone. A reference to my judgment in that case shows that the point now before the Court was not decided by me. The proceedings in that case were under para. 16 (1), Sch 2, Civil P. C., and I held there that the appeal did not fall within the purview of S. 104 (f), Civil P. C. Reference had been made in the course of the arguments in that case to Dharam Das v. Ajudhia Parshad (2) and Hari Mohan Singh v. Kali Prasad Chalina (3), and Mr. Man Singh referred to these two authorities. Now both these cases dealt with the old Code. In Dharam Das v. Ajudhia Parshad (2), it was held that inasmuch as Art. 18, Sch. 2, Court-fees Act did not apply, the only article applicable was Art. 1, Sch. 1, Court-fees Act, fixing an ad valorem fee in the case. The question was not discussed at any length by the Judges deciding the case and Hari Mohan v. Kali Prasad (3), is really more in point. There it was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court following Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (4), that an order having the force of a decree is in fact a decree, and it was, therefore, held that the fee payable was an ad valorem one. Ghulam Khan v Muhammad Hassan (4) is a case decided ultimately by their Lordships of the Judicial Commitee who state at p. 182 as follows:

The decisions of the Indian Courts on those provisions are so conflicting that it may be useful to state generally the conclusion at which their Lordships have arrived on some of the disputed points brought to their attention in the course of the argument.

They then proceeded to lay down certain definite conclusions and the third one is as follows:

Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award. * * * Proceedings described as a suit and registered as such must be taken in order to bring the matter, the agreement to refer or the award as the case may be, under the cognizance of the Court. That is or may be a litigious proceedings—cause may be shown against the application, and it would seem that the order made thereon is a decree within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Civil Procedure Code.

Now, it seems to me that their Lordships held that an order directing the filing of an award in circumstances such as exist in the present case fell within the definition of the expression "decree" as defined in the Civil Procedure Code that was then

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 403.

(2) [1881] 70 P. R. 1881.
(3) [1906] 33 Cal. 11.
(4) [1902] 29 Cal. 167=29 I. A. 51=6 C.W.N. 226=8 Sar 154 (P. C.).

in force. A reference to that definition and in the definition of the term or expression "decree" as found in the existing Code are different in material particulars. There it was specifically laid down that an order specified in S. 588 of the old Code is not within this definition. A reference to S. 588 shows that an order filing an award or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court was not made appealable. It follows therefore that such an order fell within the definition of the expression "decree," and the necessary consequences followed. In the present Code S. 2 (2) defines a decree and specifically states that the expression shall not include (a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order; while S. 104 of the Code (new) sub-Cl (f) specifically provides for an appeal against an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the interventson of the Court In these circumstances it apears to me that the order in the present case is not, and cannot be regarded as a decree and therefore the remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (4), do not appear to me to be applicable.

Mr. Man Singh on this being pointed out to him admitted that the order in this case was not a decree, but contended that it was an order having the force of a decree. He was, however, unable to cite any authority in support of his contention and I am unable myself to see how an order of this nature can have the force of a decree, and I would therefore hold that for the purposes of Court-fees, an appeal from an order under S. 104 (f), Civil P C., would be governed by Art. 11, Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. In this view I am supported by Sarwan Pande v. Jagat Pande (5). At p. 316 [103 I. C.] their Lordships say:

> In our judgment the Court below was wrong in holding that the memorandum of appeal was not sufficiently stamped. It is to be noted that an appeal is allowed by S. 104 (f), Civil P C., against an order filing or refusing to file an award without the intervention of the Court. That being so, the present applicant was entitled to file an appeal against the order of the learned munsif by which he ordered the award to be made a rule of the Court. The appeal being against an order the requisite Court-fee stamp was of eight annas and the memorandum of appeal being stamped with a Court-fee stamps of that value, was sufficiently stamped and the appeal cought to have been heard on the merit

(5) A. I. R. 1927 All. 771=103 I. C. 315.

I would therefore disallow the preliminary objection and holding that the memo. of appeal is sufficiently stamped proceed to hear the case on the merits.

Turning to the merits of the case: Mr. Sardha Ram for the plaintiff Agya Singh contended that the agreement to refer to arbitration dated 20th May 1925, did not contain any reference to matters which the arbitrator decided, namely, the question as to what contracts were joint, and what were not joint was not referred to the arbitrator, nor was the question as to the immovable property of the partnership. The agreement to refer is to be found translated at p. 5 of the printed paper-book from line 14 to line 22 This translation, Mr. Sardha Ram has admitted to be correct. A reference to this shows that the terms of reference were very wide. It recites that the parties to this appeal had been carrying on work as contractors in partnership for a considerable period, and had decided to end the partnership business but that for certain reasons, not given, they were unable to dissolve the partnership amicably. They therefore referred their mutual disputes which related to the settlement of partnership accounts to Sardar Bahadur Singh, Sub-Divisional Officer, who was to be the sole arbitrator and whose decision on the matter was to be binding on both.

It appears that the arbitrator went into the question as to whether certain contracts were partnership contracts or not, and also dealt with certain immovable properties which he found belonged to the partnership. It appears to me that there was nothing either irregular or improper in what the arbitrator did. In order to arrive at a proper settlement of the partnership accounts it seems to me that it was necessary for the arbitrator to ascertain first what the assets and liabilities of the partnership actually were, and in order to discover this it was obviously necessary for him to decide any dispute that might arise during the course of his investigation into the partnership affairs as to whether or not any particular contract or property belonged to and formed part of the partnership assets. In this view I am supported by Sham Lal v.

Parshotam Das (6). I would therefore hold that there is no force in this objection and that the agreement to refer to the arbitrator, the settlement of the partnership accounts necessarily included a reference of all the disputes that might arise during the arbitration proceedings as to what property was to be taken into account. Had there been any moneys belonging to the partnership in banks or deposited with other persons, it is obvious they would have been and ought to have been included in the distribution, and therefore I consider that the arbitrator rightly included in his distribution the immovable property which admittedly belonged to the partnership.

Next it was urged that the arbitrator had been guilty of corruption. This matter was put in issue and decided against the appellant by the Court below. The charge of corruption is based on the fact that while the award was given on 15th July 1925, the arbitrator had on 29th June 1925, deposited a sum of Rs. 20,000 in the Punjab Sind Bank at Amritsar. Admittedly there is no direct connexion between this deposit and any malpractice on the part of the arbitrator. We are, however, asked to presume that this payment was the result of a bribe or illegal remuneration given to him by the respondent. It has not been pointed out to us that the arbitrator had no private means of his own, and I think it would be unfair to raise the presumption contended for.

Next it was urged that the award was bad for want of finality, inasmuch as by Cl. 5 of the award the appellant was directed to transfer or endorse the separate title-deeds and documents and other valuable securities in favour of the respondent. It was contended that the arbitrator should have drawn up a list of all the documents referred to. Inasmuch as the arbitrator decided, rightly or wrongly, that the respondent was entitled to all the properties represented by these title-deeds and valuable securities and, as far as can be made out from the arguments advanced at the Bar, there is no doubt as to what these title-deeds and valuable securities actually were, I am unable to see that the award is bad on this account. If, in the course of the execution of the decree passed in terms of the award any question arises as to whether or not a particular title-deed refers to property which belongs to the partnership the question can be settled by the executing Court. The decree itself would to my mind be specific enough

Finally it was urged that the arbitrator was wrong in administering a special oath to the respondent. It appears that the oath was administered at the instance of the appellant and this objection therefore scarcely appears to be within his powers. In any event the arbitrator has solemnly stated as a witness that the oath was administered at the instance of the appellant, that the statement was made by the respondent on oath as required by the appellant and he filed the record of the statement made which he said had been signed by both appellant and respondent. The appellant went into the witness-box after the arbitrator had given his evidence and did not deny his signature nor contradict the arbitrator's statement. I must therefore hold that there is no substance in this objection. I would therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Addison, J. — Defendant 3 gave Rs. 300 to defendant 1 for payment to defendant 2. This was in 1919. Defendant 1 did not pay the amount and defendant 3 orally assigned the debt to plaintiff who sued for the amount with interest. The appellate Court applied the principles of the Transfer of property Act which is not in force in the Punjab and held that the oral assignment of the debt was invalid. Against its decree dismissing the suit this revision has been preferred.

The learned Judge who admitted the revision doubted whether interference was warranted by the terms of S. 115, Civil P. C. but since a similar case Teja Singh v. Kalyan Das Chet Ram (1) had been reported, he admitted the petition and directed it to be heard by a Division Bench.

It was held in Teja Singh v. Kalyan Das Chet Ram (1) that although the equitable principles underlying the Transfer of Property Act are followed in the Punjab, the Act itself with its technicalities does not apply and and an oral assignment of a debt for consideration is consequently not invalid. There was practically no discussion of the question whether the order could be revised under S. 115, Civil P. C. All that was said by the learned Judge in chambers was that the Subordinate Judge committed an irregularity in relying upon that Act to dismiss on a purely technical point a claim which he otherwise held to be just and equitable.

Most of the cases cited before us had reference to the refusal of jurisdiction or the assumption of jurisdiction by a Court. These fall within Sub-Cls. (a) and (b), S. 115. It was admitted that, if a revision lay in the present case, this would be by virtue of sub-Cl. (c) and not sub-Cl. (a) or sub-Cl. (b). It has, therefore, to be decided whether the appellate Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. It was further admitted that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it has determined that question it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity because it has come to an erroneous decision either in fact or in law; but it was argued that the appellate Court acted illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction in relying upon the principles of an Act which was not in force in the Punjab.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 575=6 Lah. 487.

The leading case on the subject is Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (2). This was a decision under sub-Cl. (c). Their Lordships of the Privy Council said:

> The question then is: Did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case in the exercise of their jurisdiction act illegally or with material irregularity? It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them namely, whether the suit was barred as resjudicata and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided it wrongly they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

It is clear from this decision that erroneous decisions in law or fact do not come within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C. Another decision of their Lordships is Malkarjan v. Narhari (3) where it was said:

> It (the lower Court) made a sad mistake, it is true, but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right.

The latter decision was approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rajwant Prasad Pande v. Ram Ratan Gir (4).

There are decisions of the various High Courts on this question which appear to be difficult to reconcile. No useful purpose will be served by referring to them, as the leading authorities of the Privy Council are set out above.

There are numerous decisions of this Court in which different principles of the Transfer of the Property Act have been applied although the Act is not in force in the Punjab. The appellate Court in the present case has distinctly stated that the Act was not in force, but it proceeded to apply the principles of Ss. 130 and 131, T. P. Act as other principles had been followed in the Punjab. The only question is whether in doing so it acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. I do not think so. The appellate Court was the final authority to decide the question before it and it had jurisdiction to decide it. This is not a case where the appellate Court deliberately refused to follow a decision of this Court for Teja Singh v. Kalyan Das Chet Ram (1) had not been decided when it gave its decision. It had jurisdiction to decide the question whether the oral assignment of the debt was invalid and, if it erroneously decided it it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. It had jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right and its decision cannot be challenged in revision. In my judgment, therefore, no revision lies and I would dismiss the petition with costs.

First Appeal No. 2996 of 1922, Decided on 11th May 1927, from the decree of Sr. Sub-Judge., Ferozepore, D/- 26th August 1922.

(a) Civil P. C., O.13, Rr. 4 and 5—Rules not complied with—What documents were considered by lower Court not clear—Case was remanded.

Where the Judge who tried the case omitted to comply in any way whatsoever with the requirements of law laid down in O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5, and consequently it became impossible to say what documents the trial Court admitted in evidence and what documents or portions of documents had been taken into consideration by the trial Judge in arriving at his conclusions:

Held : that although no objection was raised in the grounds of appeal to the course adopted, the proper course was to remand the case for proper trial. [P 142 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5—Provisions must be strictly complied with—Counsel on the opposite party must see that the Judge endorses as required by law.

The trial Judge must strictly comply with the provisions of O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5, Civil P. C., in dealing with the documentary evidence. It is the duty of the counsel engaged in a case to see that the documentary evidence which he relies upon is properly tendered in Court and proved, and he should also see that, when admitted in evidence, the Judge places upon it the endorsement required by O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5, Civil P. C. [P 143 C 1]

Kishan Diyal and Bishan Narain—for Appellants.

Fakir Chand and Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondent.

Fforde, J— After this appeal had been opened by counsel for the appellants it became apparent that none of the documents upon the strength of which the plaintiff's claim has been decreed had been legally tendered in evidence. Not a single document bears the endorsement which is required by O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5, Civil P. C. Some of the documents bear an endorsement to the effect that they were admitted in evidence, but the date shows that they were so admitted before the case proceeded to trial. Other documents bear an exhibit number and the initials of the Judge, but none of the other requirements of O. 13, R. 4, have been complied with. Other documents bear exhibit numbers only, and a fourth class bear neither an exhibit number nor any endorsement of any kind whatsoever.

The plaintiff's case depends almost entirely upon documentary evidence, but in no instance does he appear to have even attempted to produce the documents in question in Court at the proper time, and the Judge who tried the case has omitted to comply in any way whatsoever with the requirements of law laid down in O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5. It is true that the appellants did not raise this objection in their grounds of appeal ; but the difficulty that we are confronted with is a substantial one, inasmuch as it is impossible for us to say what documents the trial Court has admitted in evidence, and what documents or portions of documents have been taken into consideration by the trial Judge in arriving at his conclusions. In almost every instance in which we have been asked to examine a document a controversy has arisen at the Bar as to whether or not that particular piece of evidence was ever produced or considered. Under these circumstances it is obvious that this appeal could not possibly be decided upon the material which is before us. The Judge who wrote the judgment in this case has not attempted to weigh the evidence in a manner which will enable us to see how he has come to his conclusions. He has set out the names of a number of witnesses and stated the effect of their testimony without attempting to show what their evidence is, or what is the documentary matter which is supposed to have supported the statements which they made in Court. Counsel are not prepared to agree that we should deal with the whole of the documents before us as though such documents had been properly admitted in evidence and, indeed, it would be hard for any such agreement to be arrived at in view of the extremely confused manner in which this material has been placed upon the record. Under these circumstances we most reluctantly feel coerced to send this case back for a proper trial and for a proper judgment. It is unfortunate that a case, which was instituted so far back as 21st of August 1920, should have to be remanded for a fresh trial simply because the trial Judge has failed to comply with the most material requirements of the Civil Procedure Code. For the above reasons we must accept this appeal and under our inherent powers remand the case to the trial Court for a proper trial. In doing so we desire to draw the trial Judge's attention to the necessity for strictly complying with the provisions of O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5, Civil P. C., in dealing with the documentary evidence. We might also point out that it is the duty of the counsel engaged in a case to see that the documentary evidence which he relies upon is properly tendered in Court and proved, and he should also see that, when admitted in evidence, the Judge places upon it the endorsement required by O. 13, Rr. 4 and 5, Civil P. C. Costs in the trial Court up to date and in this Court shall abide the event.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 1302 of 1927, Decided on 24th November 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 1st February 1927.

Civil P. C., Ss. 47 and 144 — Appellate Court varying judgment of lower Court—Lower Court's decree actually executed—Application for restitution—No ad valorem fee need be paid —Court-fees Act, Sch. 2. Art, 11—Civil P. C., S. 144.

Applications under S. 47 and 144 are classed together when referred to in S. 2 of the Code and are obviously kindred and similar applications though there is a real distinction that when a decree has been actually executed and the property has passed, the application is of the nature of an application to recover possession. It is in consequence of the decree passed by the appellate Court that the application is made under S. 144 and it is in a sense a mere accident that because the decree has been fully executed, the petitioner is prevented from coming to the Court under S. 47 and is compelled to take action under S. 144, Civil P. Dev Raj Sawhney—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The first point to be decided is whether this appeal has been correctly stamped with Rs. 4 as a miscellaneous appeal. Counsel for the respondent contends that the application being one under S. 144, Civil P. C., for restitution, in consequence of the judgment of this Court having varied the judgment of the District Judge, which had been actually executed at the time, the stamp should be ad valorem, and he relies upon Jiwa Ram v. Nand Ram (1), Baijnath Das v. Balmakund (2), and Balmukund Marwari v. Basanta Kumari Dasi (3), while on the other side in Somasundaram Pillai v. Chokalingam Pillai (4), Kurgodigowda v. Lingam Gouda (5). and Hamid Ali v. Ahmed Ali (6), the contrary view has been taken. In Hamid Ali v Ahmed Ali (6) the Full Bench decision of the Patna Court was considered and dissented from. The learned District Judge has followed that view and, after considering all the authorities, I find that I cannot agree with him. Applications under Ss. 47 and 144 are classed together when referred to in S. 2 of the Code and are obviously kindred and similar applications though there is a real distinction that when a decree has been actually executed and the property has passed, the application is of the nature of an application to recover possession. It is in consequence of the decree passed by the High Court that the application is made under S. 144 and and it is in a sense a mere accident that because the decree has been fully executed the petitioner is prevented from coming to the Court under S. 47 and is compelled to take action under S. 144, Civil P. C. It would be most inequitable that he should be penalized by being forced to stamp his application ad valorem, and adopting the reasoning contained in 45 Bom. 1137, I find that the application has been duly stamped and I direct that the amount paid in excess in the District Court be refunded.

The respondent then takes a second preliminary objection that the decision of the learned District Judge contains a finding of fact on the only point agitated and the appeal does not lie. It is unnecessary to give a history of the previous litigation between the parties and it is sufficient to say that the question of whether the petitioner had been in possession at a certain time of a portion of a house, which is the subject-matter of dispute, was left open at the time the appeal was decided by this Court though it was held that he was certainly not a tenant. The finding of the District Judge is that he has failed to establish that he was in possession of any part of the house. He says:

I therefore agree with the lower Court on the facts and find that Rahmat Ali was not in possession of any portion of the house and is not entitled to restitution.

This finding cannot be challenged in second appeal. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—It appears that the police of the Attock District received information that certain dacoits were collecting to commit a dacoity at Dhok Baju Dakhli Kariman. The names of the dacoits were also known. Accordingly arrangements were made to prevent the commission of the dacoity and a police guard was sent out to render assistance to the villagers. This was on 23rd October 1926. The house which was to be dacoited belonged to one Dosa, a man of doubtful character himself who was shown on Register No. 10. He lived in Dhok Baju and he, together with Fakir Muhammad, was deputed by the lambardars to meet the police guard which was coming under the command of Raja Khan, Head Constable, from Campbellpur. Raja Khan was accompanied by Khan Bahadur lambardar and as they neared Dhok Baju certain men were seen at a distance. Raja Khan sent Khan Bahadur on to reconnoitre and to ascertain who those persons were. Khan Bahadur went on and found five persons seated in a depression under a shisham tree just outside Dhok Baju. He questioned them and was beaten by one of them as well as threatened by another. While he was with them Dosa and Fakir Muhammad arrived on the scene. These two, seeing the lambardar, at first did not realize that the other persons present were dacoits, but as soon as they realized this fact all three of them went off and joined Raja Khan and his policemen who were told that the men in question were dacoits. Raja Khan then moved his force nearer to these persons in order to intercept them. The dacoits fired at the police force, but, as they were armed with revolvers only, the police and villagers sustained no casualties. The police returned the fire with the result that one at least of the dacoits received a bullet wound. The dacoits, however, succeeded in effecting their escape and the matter was reported to the police station in due course.

An investigation followed, and as the names of the five persons were known steps were taken to arrest them. The persons so arrested were Wali, Ahmad, Mehmad, Bakhsha and Mirza. Ahmad and Mehmad are brothers and these two with Bakhsha were arrested together, on 27th October 1926, at Maira Badia. They reside in another village Chhokar in the Rawalpindi District. Their arrest was effected in the courtyard of the house of the sister of Ahmed and Mehmad. Mirza was also arrested and found to have received a bullet wound in his wrist. Wali was granted a pardon and these four persons together with three others were sent up for trial charged under Ss. 399 and 402, I. P. C.

At the completion of the trial the assessors were unanimously of opinion that the case for the prosecution was correct and that all the persons sent up for trial were guilty. They accept the statement of Warl as true. The learned Sessions Judge, however, took a different view. He came to the conclusion that the testimony of Wali was unreliable and that the witnesses, who claimed to have identified the four persons named above, were not reliable. He accordingly acquitted all the seven persons who were arraigned before him.

Against this acquittal the Local Government has preferred an appeal under S. 417, Criminal P. C., in the cases of Ahmed, Mehmad, Bakhsha and Mirza, and after hearing Mr. Mackay for the Crown and Mr. Ali Hussain Khan for the respondents, in my judgment the verdict of the assessors qua these four persons was the correct one.

The learned Sessions Judge has recorded a lengthy and detailed judgment in which his reasons for disbelieving the approver are set out in detail. I do not think it necessary to discuss those reasons as, in my opinion, the weight to be attached to them is very considerably reduced by the fact that the learned Sessions Judge appears to have overlooked the fact that Mirza, who undoubtedly was injured by a gun hot wound and according to Lieutenant-Colonel Corry, I. M. S., Civil Surgeon by a 303 bullet, distinctly mentions the presence of Wali on the scene. It is true that Mirza denied having been at Dhok Baju for the purpose of committing a dacoity and told a story to account for his presence there, but after a careful examination of that story it seems to me that it is one that is wholly incredible. To a large extent it is based on enmity not with the police, but with a certain lambardar. Nevertheless that enmity has not been established and as held by the learned Sessions Judge, the police cannot be said in this case to have lent themselves to any fabrication.

To my mind the case rests almost entirely on the testimony of Dosa, Fakir Muhammad and Khan Bahadur. These are the three witnesses who actually saw and spoke to the dacoits on that occasion. Subsequently to the arrest of these respondents an identification parade was held under the auspices of a Magistrate of the First Class. The Magistrate has been produced as a witness and has described the steps taken by him to ensure the correctness and fairness of the identification. After consideration of his testimony I have no reason whatever to think that the witnesses had any opportunity given them to see the persons to be identified prior to the parade. Indeed none of the respondents alleged that they were shown to these persons. At this parade Dosa and Fakir Muhammad identified all four of the respondents while Khan Bahadur lambardar identified Bakhsha and Mirza alone. Now, Khan Bahadur's statement that he was sent on to reconnoitre by Raja Khan is supported by Raja Khan himself, and there is no reason to doubt the veracity of these two witnesses. Khan Bahadur says that when he arrived at the spot he found these five persons there among whom he recognized Wali as a man he already knew. None of the other four were known to him. One of the dacoits slapped him and another searched his person. He identified Bakhsha and Mirza because it was these two who slapped him and searched his person. The evidence of these witnesses, which I consider credible leaves no room for doubt as to the presence of these four, together with Wali under the shisham tree on the night in question. They corroborate very materially the statement of Wali whose evidence as far as it refers to these men appears to be perfectly clear and above suspicion.

It is true that the learned Sessions Judge refers to certain discrepancies between the statement made by Wali in Court and certain statements made by him in the course of the police investigation. It was contended, and I think rightly contended, by the learned counsel for the Crown, that the learned Sessions Judge's action in referring to statements made before the police with a view to contradict prosecution witnesses was entirely erroneous. The procedure is a simple one and it is clear that in this case that procedure was not carried out. Copies of the statements do not appear to have been given to the accused persons on trial, and certainly no attempt has been made to prove any statement made to the police by Wali and any of the other witnesses. It is clear, therefore, that references to those statements were irregular and ought not to have been made. Wali was seen by Khan, Bahadur, lambardar, with the respondents on the night in question and Wali was known to that witness. Wali later on produced a revolver and it is a curious feature in the case that Mirza, in setting up a story to explain his presence there, not only admits Wali's presence, but definitely admits that Wali was armed with a revolver. So far as Mirza is concerned that is a very strong corroboration of his (Wali's) statement. In my judgment the statements of Dosa, Fakir Muhammad and Khan Bahadur offer sufficient corroboration of Wali's statement as against these four respondents.

There is, however, further corroboration as regards Ahmed and Bakhsha. Ahmed was instrumental in producing a revolver in the course of the investigation. This revolver he had placed in the custody of Mt. Mukhi. Ahmed took the police to this woman's house and had the revolver produced. According to Wali, Ahmed was on the night in question armed with a revolver. Again Bakhsha was said by Wali to have had a spear and in the course of the investigation, Bakhsha produced a spear-head. There is thus ample corroboration of the approver's story qua these two respondents, and I am unable to agree with the learned Sessions Judge's comments as to the evidence relating to the recovery of these articles.

In the case of Mehmad it appears that he was said to have received an injury on his thigh. He was examined by Lieutenant Colonel Corry, and that witness found a small injury on the thigh, which, he says, could not possibly have been caused by a 303 bullet but might have been caused by such a bullet having first hit a stone and being splintered and one of splinters entering the body of Mehmad. He advised a skiagram to be taken, but the prosecution failed to comply with the suggestion. No steps appear to have been taken to recover the trousers that Mehmad was wearing on the occasion which must have been pierced through to cause the injury, had that injury been due to a gunshot wound as alleged. Mehmad himself says that he received this very slight injury some fifteen days before when he was playing kabaddi. Whether his account is correct or not, I consider that the learned Sessions Judge is right in thinking that the prosecution have failed to prove that Mehmad received any injury on the night in question. Against him, however, there is the testimony of Dosa and Fakir Muhammad already referred to, which, to my mind sufficiently corroborates the approver's story.

I would hold, therefore, that it has been proved beyond any reasonable doubt that these four persons along with Wali assembled on the night of 23rd October 1926 under a shisham tree at Dhok Baju, that two of them at any rate were armed with revolvers and one at least was armed with a spear. Ahmed Mehmad and Bakhsha are residents of Rawalpindi District, and their presence on the occasion requires considerable explanation. The reason for their presence at that place on the night in question has been given by the approver, and his evidence, having been so materially corroborated in other particulars, I have no hesitation in accepting his statement as to the object with which he and these other persons assembled at the spot on the night in question. In these circumstances, I consider that all the four respondents committed an offence falling within the purview of S. 402, I. P. C. In this I am supported by the decision of Mr. Justice Shadi Lal in Karmun v. Emperor (1). I would, therefore, accept this appeal and convict Ahmed, Mehmad, Bakhsha and Fakir Chand—for Appellants.

Judgment. — The land in dispute covers an area of 12 marlas, which was in the settlement of 1884-85 a part of Khasra No. 824, the total area of which was then 5 kanals 5 marlas and which was shown as barani agricultural land. By mutation dated 7th August 1884, Bhola etc. Brahmins owners of this Khasra No. 824, mortgaged it along with land in several other khasra numbers to Dhanna Saini. The mortgage was a possessory one and it is admitted that the mortgagees actually got possession of the entire mortgaged property, including the 12 marlas, now in dispute. In 1891 one Nandu Sadh, caste Chamar, got possession of this plot of 12 marlas and built a dharamasala on it. In the jamabandi of that year, in the cultivation column the land was shown in possession of Nandu, non-occupancy tenant, and in the kafiat column it was stated that no rent was charged as the land was dharamarth. This entry continued till 1907-08. In 1911-12, at the time of the new settlement this plot of 12 marlas was included in the abadi deh and described as a part of Khasra No. 1124, which was the abadi of chamars and was shown as being in their possession.

In 1905 the descendants of the original mortgagors sued the descendants of the original mortgagees for possession of the entire mortgaged property, including these 12 marlas and obtained a decree. But as this particular plot was in possession of the successors-in-interest of Nandu Chamar who had not been impleaded in that litigation, they refused to surrender possession of the land to the mortgagors. The present suit was accordingly instituted on the 21st May 1925, by the mortgagors against Ram Lok, etc, Chamars who had been in possession of this land since the death of their guru Nandu. The suit was decreed by the trial Court, but on appeal by the defendants has been dismissed by the learned District Judge. The sole question argued before me is whether the possession of the Chamars has been adverse not only against the mortgagees but also against the mortgagors. Mr. Fakir Chand for the appellants has contended that as the mortgage was with possession and the mortgagees had actually entered into possession of the property in 1884, the act of the Chamars in taking possession of the land in 1891 might be adverse against the mortgagees, but can under no circumstances be adverse against the mortgagors. In support of his contention the learned counsel has relied on Khanu Mal v. Khan Muhammad (1) and Tarabai v. Data Ram (2). The facts of those cases, however, are wholly distinguishable from those of the present case. It is no doubt true that as a general rule adverse possession against a mortgagee is ineffectual against the mortgagor, especially when it began at a time when the mortgagee was in possession, but when a trespasser takes possession of the mortgaged property and asserts a title, which is hostile not only to the mortgagee but which also assails the title of the mortgagor, and the mortgagor allows 12 years to elapse, the title of the trespasser will become indefeasible not only against the mortgagee but also against the mortgagor. I cannot assent to the contention put forward by Mr. Fakir Chand that in a possessory mortgage, so long as the mortgagor is entitled only to the equity of redemption there can be no invasion of his interest, and in such a case it is not legally possible for a stranger to acquire an adverse title against him. The question was considered at great length as long ago as 1820 in the great case of the Marquis of Chalmondeley v. Lord Clinton (3) where Sir T. Plumer, M. R. held that an equity of redemption, in common with other equitable estates in land is capable of being extinguished by the operation of the statute of limitation.

On appeal this view was affirmed in the House of Lords where Lord Eldon, L. C. enunciated the principle that adverse possession of an equity of redemption for 20 years was a bar to another person claiming the same equity of redemption.

Reference may also be made in this connexion to the case of Khanoo Lal v. Mt. Manki Bibi (4) Hubdar Khan v. Gajadhar Chaube (5) and the remarks of Macleod C. J. at p. 546 [of 49 Bom. Ed.] of the recent case of Tarabai v. Dataram (2) which was cited by Mr. Fakir Chand himself.

In this case, as has already been pointed out, Nandu Chamar took possession of the land in 1891, changed its character from agricultural land to religious property, and constructed a dharamsala upon it. From the report of the local commissioner it appears that this dharamsala and the appurtenant land has descended from him to his chelas Ram Lok, etc, defendants. Now Nandu, by constructing the dharamsala not only denied the title of the mortgagee, but also that of the, mortgagor and asserted a hostile title to both. In addition to this in 1911-12 the name of the mortgagor was removed from the revenue papers and this plot was included in Khasra No. 1124 described as abadi chamaran and in the possession of the latter as owners. These facts leave no doubt that the title openly set up by the respondents in 1891, was hostile both to the mortgagors and the mortgagees and by lapse of time the rights of the mortgagors in the equity of redemption have become extinct.

Mr. Fakir Chand has relied upon the entry in the jamabandi of 1891-92 where Nandu is entered in the "cultivation" column as a non-occupancy tenant. But it is well known that persons who take possession without any title are shown in the "cultivation" column as non-occupancy tenants so long as changes in the proprietary columns are not made by mutation. Entries in the "Cultivation" column are always to be read along with those in the kafiat column, and reading the two together no doubt is left that Nandu did not hold the land under the mortgagees in 1891 or subsequent years.

This being my view of the facts of this case and the law applicable thereto, I am of opinion that the learned District Judge came to a correct conclusion in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. The appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Fakir Chand –for Petitioner.

Arjan Das - for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff petitioner instituted a suit for recovery of a certain sum of money alleged to be due on foot of an entry in the plaintiff's bahi which was alleged to have been executed by Waryam Singh, the original defendant. The entry was produced in Court and it purported to bear the thumb-impression of the debtor Waryam Singh and to be signed by two witnesses, Rikhi Ram and Sant Ram. Waryam Singh denied execution of the entry as well as receipt of consideration. Necessary issues were framed, but before the case was concluded Waryam Singh died and his heirs and legal representatives were substituted as defendants in his place. The Sub-Judge decreed the suit in full ordering that the decretal amount was recoverable only from the estate of Waryam Singh deceased. The defendants appealed to the Senior Sub-Senior urging two points: first, that execution of the entry in question had not been proved, and secondly, that proper opportunity had not been afforded to the defendants to rebut the evidence led by the plaintiff. The learned Senior Sub-Judge has accepted the defendants' appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has preferred a petition for revision to this Court and I have heard Mr. Faqir Chand on his behalf and Mr. Arjan Das for the defendants respondents.

The sole ground on which the learned Senior Sub-Judge has dismissed the suit is that the execution of the document has not been proved because the plaintiff, who is the alleged writer of this entry, did not enter on the document that he was its scribe and the attesting witness Sant Ram signed it without seeing the execution. In holding that on these facts the execution of the document was not proved the learned Judge has relied upon five rulings which are mentioned in his judgment. All these rulings, however, relate to cases decided in provinces where the Transfer of Property Act is in force. In four of them the question was whether the deeds in question had been executed and attested in accordance with the provisions of S. 59, T. P. Act, and in the fifth the document was a deed of gift which was required to be executed and attested in the manner prescribed in S. 123 of that Act. Now it is well known that the Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab and though the Courts of this province sometimes follow the equitable principles of common law which have been embodied in certain sections of the Act, it has been held over and over again that the technical rules contained in it cannot be relied upon by any litigant in this province. Reference may in this connexion be made to Teja Singh v. Kalyan Das Chet Ram (1) and Dula Singh v. Bela Singh (2) It is conceded for the respondent that deeds in this province need not be executed or attested according to the formalities required by the Transfer of Property Act. One of the rulings referred to by the learned Judge refers to S. 68, Evidence Act, but that section applies only to cases where a document is required by law to be attested. There is no rule of law in force in the Punjab which requires a bahi entry of this kind to be attested at all. S. 68 had, therefore, no applicability to this case. The Judge has, therefore, entirely misconceived the position and has acted with material irregularity in holding that execution is not proved.

As to the second point: Mr. Faqir Chand for the petitioner has conceded that the contesting defendants-respondents being minors are entitled to an opportunity to produce evidence in rebuttal of the plaintiff's case. The case must therefore, be sent back to the trial Court for recording the defendants' evidence. As the case is going to be retried the parties may be given opportunity to prove or disprove that the thumb-mark on the bahi entry in question was that of Waryam Singh.

For the foregoing reasons I accept this petition for revision, set aside the decree of the learned Senior Sub-Judge and remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for disposal in accordance with law. Costs will abide the event.

N. C. Pandit—for Appellants.

Nand Lal and A. R. Kapur—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—Civil Appeal No. 2055 of 1922 and Civil Appeal No. 1058 of 1923 arise out of suits by the occupancy tenants of the village Ruri, in tahsil Sirsa of the Hisar District, for a declaration that the shamilat land in patti Machhi and patti Harya of that village, of which partition was sought by the proprietors, was reserved for grazing purposes and was not liable to be partitioned. The occupancy tenants relied upon the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz of the settlements of 1854, 1882 and 1901-02, which were in their favour. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, relying upon a recent extract from the wajib-ul-arz of the settlement (apparently of the year 1921), held that the condition as regards the impartibility of these shamilat lands was no longer in force. He considered, however, that the occupancy tenants were entitled to have areas of 200 and 100 bighas respectively in patti Machhi and patti Harya reserved for grazing purposes in the present circumstances of the patti and granted declaratory decree to this effect only. From this decision the occupancy tenants have appealed in both the suits.

The sole point for decision in these appeals is whether the condition as regards impartibility of the shamilat lands in dispute, which appeared in the wajib-ul-arz of the old settlements was rightly held to be inoperative now. The extract from the wajib-ul-arz of the recent settlement, on which the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, has relied, does not expressly say that the lands in dispute will hereafter be subject to partition. All that can be urged on behalf of the proprietors is that the condition as to impartibility does not appear in the wajib-ul--arz of the settlement of 1921. But this was merely due to the fact that a dispute on the question arose between the parties and the occupancy tenants were referred by the revenue authorities to get the matter settled in a civil Court. The omission of the condition as to impartibility from the wajib-ul-arz of 1921 is, therefore, by itself no evidence of the condition having become inoperative.

It is true that it has been held in some cases that certain agreements embodied in the wajib-ul-arz of a settlement were operative only for the terms of the settlement. But this cannot obviously be taken to be a general proposition, and each case must depend upon the terms of the agreement in dispute. In the year 1901-02, it appears that the unculturable land available for grazing in the village had already become much reduced in area, and the parties concerned agreed that banjar land shall always be excluded from partition and shall continue to be shamilat land set apart for grazing purposes and public good': (vide Ex. P-8, p. 22—27 of the printed paper-book). It will thus appear that the condition in question was not only not restricted to the term of the settlement, but was expressly stated to be operative for all time. It may be stated that the occupancy tenants in this village have substantial rights and pay no malikana. It seems that the agreement referred to above was arrived at for the purpose of safeguarding adequately the rights of the occupancy tenants in respect of pasture lands.

There is no evidence of any subsequent agreement between the parties concerned superseding the agreement of 1901-02. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that the conditions of the village have changed and that 200 and 100 big-has will be sufficient for the purposes of grazing in patti Machhi and patti Harya respectively. But these figures appear to have been fixed in a somewhat haphazard manner. The number of cattle is apt to vary from time to time and I am not satisfied that the areas set apart by the decrees of the Senior Subordinate Judge will be adequate for the future. In any case the parties concerned are the best judges of their requirements and the agreement arrived at by them in 1901-02, in view of all the circumstances, cannot be lightly ignored. I would therefore hold on the facts of these cases that the condition as regards the impartibility of the shamilat lands in patti Machhi and patti Harya it still binding.

On behalf of the respondents the question of jurisdiction which was raised in the lower Court, was again pressed. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, has held on the authority of 144 P. R. 1907 (1) that the suit is cognizable by a civil Court and this view appears to me to be correct. On behalf of the respondents I. L. R. 3. Lah. 4 (2) was cited but the facts in the present case appear to be practically on all fours with those in Sundar v. Wazira (1), which was held to be distinguishable in Singh Ram v. Data Ram (2).

I would accordingly accept both these appeals and grant plaintiff the reliefs prayed for with costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 2397 of 1922, Decided on 11th January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 5th June 1922.

Custom (Punjab)—Mohyal Brahmins of village Karimpur of Jhelum District are governed by agricultural custom.

Mohyal Brahmins are primarily agriculturists and cultivate land with their own hands. They have been gazetted under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act as an agricultural tribe in the Jhelum District and they are governed by agricultural custom. [P 151 C 2, P. 152 O 1]

Nanak Chand—for Appellant.

Badri Das—for Respondents.

Zafar Ali, J.—The two questions that have been argued before us in this second appeal are: (1) whether the land in dispute was ancestral qua the plaintiffs; and (2) whether the alienor of the land, who is a Mohyal Brahman of village Karimpur in the Pind Dadan Khan tahsil of the Jhelum District, was governed by agricultural custom which restricted his power of alienation. On both these questions the concurrent findings of the Courts below are in favour of the plaintiffs, and we are of opinion that there is sufficient evidence on the record in support of either finding.

As regards (1): the evidence is :

(a) that Mohyal Brahmans were among the early settlers in this village as stated in the history of its foundation;

(b) that the name of Hazari, the common ancestor of the plaintiff and the alienor, is given in the pedigree table of the proprietors of the village prepared at the first regular settlement; and

(c) that the two branches of the defendants of Hazari held almost equal lands in 1860 and that the land sold formed part of joint holding in which either branch had one-half share in that year.

We are of opinion that this threefold evidence, taken as a whole, fully justified the inference that the land had descended from Hazari. The history of the foundation of the village militated against the theory that Hazari's two sons might have acquired the land jointly by purchase in equal shares.

On the other point the evidence is that Mohyal Brahmans are primarily agriculturists and cultivate land with their own hands. They have been gazetted under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act as an agricultural tribe in the Jhelum District. They settled in the village along with Mussalman agriculturists of the Jalab tribe and their only occupation was to cultivate land and not to perform priestly functions. Not unlike several other agricultural tribes they possess a martial spirit and many of them serve in the army. In Rose's Glossary of Tribes, Vol. 2, Mohyals are described as secular Brahmins. In the Gazetteer of the Jhelum District, Part A, published in 1904, the following occurs at page 120 :

The Muhials do not number more than some eleven thousand souls in the Province, and they are rather widely distributed, though their principal habitat is the Jhelum District.

* * * * * Though numerically unimportant, they are a stirring and enterprising race, and frequently rise to prominence in the service of Government, which they enter in large numbers : they make excellent soldiers, but it is chiefly in civil appointments that they have earned distinction. They are remarkable amongst the Hindu population being hereditary agriculturists seldom if ever, practising trade or usury, and specially despising the life of indolence led by the ordinary Brahmin, who lives by charity, and with whom the Muhial, though admitting a common origin, strongly objects to be classed.

In view of all that has been stated above we are of opinion that Mohyals are governed by agricultural custom.

These being our findings, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 1020 of 1927, Decided on 18th November 1927, from order of Sub-Divl., Mag., Hissar, D/- 31st August 1927.

Criminal Trial—Evidence of witnesses for prosecution should not be recorded piecemeal.

When the evidence for the prosecution is recorded piecemeal, then there is every opportunity for each succeeding witness to know what the statement of the previous witness was and also on what lines the cross-examination of the witnessess was being conducted on behalf of the accused. Such a procedure is irregular. [P 152 C 1]

Abdul Aziz—for Appellant.

Feroze Din for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Siraj-ud-Din, appellant, aged 18 years, according to his own statement and 20 years according to the Magistrate has been convicted by a Magistrate 1st Class, with enhanced powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., under S. 376, I. P. C., for having raped Mt. Bakhtawar, the daughter of Nabi Bakhsh aged 13 or 14 years, on the forenoon of 18th April 1927, and has been sentenced toseven years' rigorous imprisonment. He has appealed to this Court and I have heard Mr. Abdul Aziz who represented him and also Mr. Feroze Din, counsel for the Crown.

The case for the prosecution as stated at the trial is that Mt. Bakhtawar was taking some tobacco for her father who was working in the fields outside the village and when passing in front of a kotha she was suddenly seized by the accused, taken inside the kotha, thrown on the ground and ravished. It is alleged that when she was seized on the road she cried aloud and this attracted the attention of her father, Nabi Bakhsh, who actually saw the accused drag his daughter inside. Nabi Bakhsh thereupon ran towards the kotha and in the way met Nizam and Imam Din, and all the three went and found the accused raping the girl. It is alleged that the kotha had no door and was not consequently shut, that the girl was actually crying when these witnesses reached the scene of the crime and that the accused left her when they reached there. An attempt was made to secure the accused but he made good his escape after he had been slapped by the father twice but he left a shoe and some clothes at the spot.

The statement of Mt. Bakhtawar is that the accused had a discharge before her father and his companions came to the spot. According to her the father was working at a distance of 20 or 25 paces from the place where she was seized; according to the father the distance was about 150 paces, but it is common ground that the place was visible from where the father was. It may also be mentioned that the mother and the brother of Mt. Bakhtawar were also working with her father It is further alleged that the ghagri of Mt. Bakhtawar got stained with blood as the girl bled as the result of the rape. This ghagri was secured by the Investigation Police Officer and sent to the Chemical Examiner, but no blood or semen was found thereon.

The matter was reported at the thana five kos from the village at 7 p. m. and Mt. Bakhtawar stated in that report that she was forcibly taken inside the kotha by the accused and was thrown on the ground and that the accused wanted to rape her; but on hearing her noise her father, Nizam and Imam Din came and released her and thereupon the accused ran away leaving his shoe and clothes on the spot. She added that "if her father had not arrived the accused would certainly have violated her." In her cross-examination she was confronted with this statement but she denied that she had made it and asserted that her statement at the time was the same that she had made at the trial. The learned Magistrate has tried to explain away this serious discrepancy between the two statements by remarking that the Head-Constable who recorded the statement was inexperienced, but the learned counsel for the Crown has not supported the Magistrate in this connexion and has admitted that as a matter of fact, the statement recorded in the first information report is exactly as it was made by Mt. Bakhtawar. The learned counsel, however, opined that Mt. Bakhtawar was not willing to state that she had been disgraced and it was for this reason that she minimized the circumstances of the assault on her. I am of opinion that the statement made in the first information report represents what Mt. Bakhtawar stated to the Head Constable, and this view is supported by the manner in which the report is recorded.

The eyewitnesses have supported the case for the prosecution as put forward at the trial. Their testimony is almost consistent and is not open to any serious criticizm. But the learned counsel for the appellant has invited my attention to the facts that the evidence for the prosecution was recorded by the learned Magistrate piecemeal with the result that there was every opportunity for each succeeding witness to know what the statement of the previous witness was and also on what lines the cross-examination of the witness was being conducted on behalf of the accused. There is force in this contention and the record discloses a disregard of the instructions of this Court as to the manner in which the evidence has to be recorded. I consider that there is justification in the complaint of the counsel for the accused that his client has been prejudiced by the manner in which the evidence was recorded in this case.

The medical evidence, however, has an important bearing on the case. The medical witness has stated that the hymen of the girl was ruptured but that this rupture was not a recent one. He is also of opinion that it was not the first time that the girl had been subjected to sexual intercourse. He noticed one slight injury on the person of the girl and was of opinion that was due to forcible intercourse. But in cross-examination he admitted that the injury might be due to intercourse with the consent of the girl. Under these circumstances, in my opinion it is not possible to hold that the medical evidence supports the case for the prosecution. On the other hand, it tends to support the contention of the counsel for the appellant that if there was sexual intercouse with the girl by the accused on the particular day it was with her own consent and, that, therefore, it was not a case of rape. The contention receives further support from the fact that the parents and a brother of the girl were working in a field about 150 paces from the scene of the occurrence and the place where the girl was seized by the accused was visible from there. It is unlikely that the accused would have dared to forcibly seize the girl under the circumstances. Moreover, it is alleged that on hearing her cries her father immediately ran to the scene of the occurrence and before his arrival the accused had practically finished the intercourse. This story, in my opinion, is improbable and is inconsistent with the allegation that the girl was raped.

The investigation in this case was not started till 24th April whereas the offence is alleged to have been committed on 18th April and the matter reported at the police station the same day. The girl was not examined by the medical witness till 26th April. The accused naturally asserts under the circumstances that the case regarding him has been fabricated.

Though I am not prepared to hold that the accused did not have intercourse with Mt. Bakhtawar on the day of occurrence I am not satisfied that such intercourse was forcible or without the consent of the girl. It is not improbable, as contended by the counsel for the convict that the girl was a consenting party and that when the matter became public, first a report of an attempt to rape or an offence under S. 354, I. P. C., was made at the thana but subsequently the story was developed as stated at the trial.

Having regard to all the circumstances I am of opinion that the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt, and accepting his appeal I acquit him and order his release forthwith.

First Appeal No. 934 of 1925, Decided on 31st May 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-J., Amritsar, D/- 23rd March 1925.

(a) Contract Act, S. 74—Joint Hindu trading firm—Firm appointing trustees to realize assets and discharge debts—Sale of property by the trustees — Vendee depositing earnest-money—Trustees agreeing to secure signatures of proprietors but failing to do so—Vendees are entitled to get the contract rescinded and get the earnest-money back or to affirm the contract and recover damages.

When two parties have entered into the relation of vendor and purchaser by making a binding contract for the sale of land, the vendor is bound to show a good title to the property sold and to comply with all necessary and reasonable requisitions to ensure such a title. To show a good title and to convey the property sold are conditions precedent to the purchaser's liability on the contract. In the case of the breach of this duty on the part of the vendor, the purchaser is at liberty, where the contracting parties can be restored to their former position, either to rescind the contract and to obtain restitution in integrum or to affirm the contract and to recover damages for the breach. [P 155 C 2 ; P 156 C 1]

A joint Hindu trading firm having fallen into financial difficulties and being unable to meet the demands of its creditors, appointed trustees for the creditors to realize the firm's assets and to discharge its liabilities and the deed of trust laid down the condition that the trustees would be competent to execute deeds of sale in respect of the houses themselves or get the same executed by members. The premises of the above firm were duly put up for auction and knocked down to the plaintiff and a deposit of Rs. 15,800 was made by the vendee. A deed of sale was executed by the trustees in favour of plaintiff, but the signatures of other proprietors were not secured though the trustees expressly agreed to secure them. The plaintiff sued for the rescission of the contract and return of the deposit.

Held : that the vendees were acting with complete bona fides in their endeavour to secure a reasonably sound title to the property which they had contracted to buy. The defendants' failure to execute a good conveyance, owing to their omission to secure the signatures of the adult members of the joint Hindu family owning the property, amounted to a breach of one of the main duties of the contract, and entitled the vsndees to "sue under the equitable jurisdiction of the Court to enforce rescission and procure the consequent restitution."

(b) Hindu Law—Joint family — Alienation by the manager—Vendee is justified in insisting on other adult members to be parties to the contract.

It is a reasonable and proper requisition on the part of the vendee that not only the manager of the family but also adult members, whose names can reasonably be secured, should be parties to the conveyance. [P 156 C 1]

Fforde, J.—This is a suit for rescission of a contract of sale of certain shop premises and for return of the deposit money. The sale was by public auction under the instructions of the defendants who were selling as trustees for a joint Hindu trading firm known as Jawala Nath-Kanshi Ram. This firm, having fallen into financial difficulties, and being unable to meet the demands of its creditors, appointed the defendants trustees for the creditors to realize the firm's assets and to discharge its liabilities. The deed of trust, which is dated 27th January 1922, was made between Nathu Mal, Harikishen Das and Bishen Das of the one part, and Lala Kishen Chand and Lala Gokal Chand (the defendants respondents) of the other part. Nathu Mal and Harikishen Das are brothers and senior members of the joint Hindu family, while Bishen Das is their nephew. The deed starts with the following recital:

A debt of about one lac and twenty thousand rupees is due by our firms styled Jawala Nath-Kanshi Ram at Amritsar and Benares. We raised this amount from different creditors and spent it in connexion with our business. According to Hindu law all the members of the family are liable for payment of the said amount. As we cannot ourselves arrange for payment of the aforesaid debt, we have appointed Lala Kishen Chand, son of Lala Sain Das, and Lala Gokal Chand, son of Lala Shib Sahai, caste Khatri, and Bhai Gurmukh Singh, son of Bhai Narain Das, caste Arora, residents of Amritsar, Katra Ahluwalia and Chauk Darbar Sahib, as our trustees to arrange for payment of the debt.

The property vested in the trustees is then described, and the deed continues :

The trustees shall be competent to execute deeds of sale in respect of the said houses themselves or get the same executed by us. If any purchaser of a house or shops wishes to join any one of us in connexion with the execution of deed of sale or secure the signature of any person from amongst us and the members of our family we shall have no objection in this behalf.

The present suit is mainly concerned with this latter clause. The premises which are the subject-matter of this litigation, were duly put up for auction and knocked down to the plaintiff Sham Das for Rs. 63,200, and a deposit of Rs. 15,800 was made by the vendee on 15th August 1922. A deed of sale was executed on 7th November 1922 by the trustees (the respondents) in favour of Sham Das, and another deed of even date was executed by the same persons in favour of Lala Dunni Chand and Lala Durga Das who had agreed, with the consent of the vendors, to take a portion of the property which had been knocked down to Sham Das. In both these sale-deeds there appears the following recital:

Let it be noted that we have secured on this deed of sale also the signatures of the proprietors of the firm known as Jawala Nath-Kanshi Ram for the satisfaction of the said vendees.

In point of fact, the name of only one of the proprietors, namely Harikishen, appears as a vendor in this conveyance.

The whole question now is whether or not the purchaser were entitled to insist upon the other members of the firm Jawala Nath-Kanshi Ram joining in the conveyance. There is no doubt that the trustees did agree to procure the signatures of these persons to the deed of sale, and it is equally clear that they neglected to do so. The vendors now say that the trustees could by themselves give a good title, and that it was not necessary to have the name of any member of the joint family added to the conveyance. The purchasers, on the other hand, have all along been insisting that all the joint owners of the property should execute the deed. After several vain attempts to make the vendors comply with their request the vendees, on 6th March 1923, sent a telegram to the trustees, informing them that if they did not comply with their request within 24 hours, they would be held liable for the consequences. This was followed up by a telegram on 7th March 1923, informing the trustees that, as they had failed to perform their part of the contract, the vendees cancelled the contract and claimed damages and return of the earnest-money. No reply was made to these telegrams until 10th April 1923, when the trustees sent the following telegram through Mr. Todar Mal, Barrister :

Under instructions from Messrs. Gokal Chand-Kishen Chand this formal notice to repeat they were throughout readily willing to complete and register sale-deeds of two shops of Jawala Nath-Kanshi Ram are to even now and though non-essential Nathu Mal-Bulla Mal sign the deed, but you evaded to perform your part as market gone down all responsibilities yours.

The vendees replied by formal notice, dated the 17th April 1923, to the trustees, giving them a further opportunity to secure the required signatures to the conveyance, and notifying them that if these signatures were not obtained within a period of one week from the date of notice, the vendees would take proceedings for recovery of the earnest-money. The trustees replied to this by a post-card, dated the 21st April 1923, addressed to Lala Sham Das, plaintiff, in which they informed him that if he attended at the house of Lala Duni Chand, vakil, at 5 p. m. on 24th April with the deeds of sale of the premises in question, the signatures of the remaining original proprietors of these premises would be secured there. In pursuance of this notice, the parties with their friends met on the appointed day at the office of Mr. Duni Chand. It is alleged that Nathu Mal and Bishen Das (alias Bulle Shah), two of the members of the proprietary family, were willing to sign the deed of sale but did not do so; and the meeting proved abortive. No further steps appear to have been taken by the trustees to secure the necessary signatures, and the next step was the institution of the present suit on 1st May 1923, by Sham Das.

The questions to be decided are whether: (1) the vendees were entitled to insist upon at least the male members of the proprietary family joining in the conveyance; (2) the failure of the trustees to procure such signatures entitled the vendees to rescind the contract and recover the deposit money; and (3) the vendees gave the trustees reasonable time to comply with their demand.

In my judgment, all these questions must be answered in the affirmative. When two parties have entered into the relation of vendor and purchaser by making a binding contract for the sale of land—as was admittedly the case here—the vendor is bound to show a good title to the property sold and to comply with all necessary and reasonable requisitions to ensure such a title. To show a good title and to convey the property sold are conditions precedent to the purchaser's liability on the contract. In the case of the breach of this duty on the part of the vendor, the purchaser is at liberty where the contracting parties can be restored to their former position, either to rescind the contract and to obtain restitutio in integrum or to affirm the contract and to recover damages for the breach. (William's, Vendor and Purchaser, 3rd Edn., Vol. I, p. 35.) If in the present case the signatures required by the purchasers were necessary for the purpose of giving a good title, the failure to secure those signatures is a breach of one of the main duties which the vendors had to fulfil. The learned trial Judge in the course of his judgment has said :

> The plaintiff was no doubt entitled to get a good marketable title * * * The purchaser, while he is not on the one hand at liberty to raise doubts which are not considerable or rational, cannot be compelled on the other hand to take a title which will .expose him to litigation and hazard.

With these expressions I am in entire agreement, but I do not agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiff did get a good conveyance in view of the omission of the vendors to secure the signatures of the adult members of their family to the deed of sale. The deed of trust itself provides that these signatures shall be secured should any purchaser of the property auctioned so require. The vendors, moreover, expressly undertook to secure these signatures. Any person buying house property owned by a joint Hindu family is always open to the risk of subsequent litigation to defeat his title. It is a very common thing for members of such a family who were minors at the time of the sale to bring a suit often at the instigation of one of the adult members for the purpose of setting aside such a sale. A purchaser is entitled to insist that every reasonable step shall be taken to reduce to a minimum the chances of such litigation succeeding. Although he can never be immune from the risk of litigation, he can at least reduce its prospects of success by securing the signatures of all the adult members of the joint family to the deed of sale. In order to get a good contract of sale, I think, it is a reasonable and proper requisition on the part of the vendee that not only the manager of the family, but also all adult members, whose names can reasonably be secured, should be parties to the conveyance. As I have said, not only was this safeguard provided for in the deed of trust under which the trustees were authorized to sell the property in dispute, but the trustees expressly agreed to this condition.

It remains to be considered whether the purchaser gave the trustees reasonable time to carry out their obligation in this regard. I am satisfied that they did. Negotiations on this matter were continuing from November 1922, until April 1923. The trustees had every opportunity to make arrangements for securing the signatures of the proprietors, and they do not appear to have made any but half-hearted attempts to do so. They have nowhere said that they were not given sufficient time. They accepted the final notice of the 17th April without demur and, indeed, formally undertook to comply with it. The suggestion—which the learned trial Judge seems to have accepted—that the purchasers in insisting upon the signatures in question were merely doing so for the purpose of avoiding the contract of sale, owing to the fact that the value of house property had fallen, is not warranted on the evidence before us. House property is said to have been falling in value since 1921, but there is no convincing evidence that there was a sudden drop in value shortly after the auction had taken place. The plaintiff Sham Das was a lessee of a portion of the premises sold and had been carrying on his business there for a considerable time. He genuinely desired to acquire this property to prevent his business being disturbed in the event of those premises being acquired by some other purchaser. I think the vendees were acting with complete bona fides in their endeavour to secure a reasonably sound title to the property which they had contracted to buy. The defendants' failure to execute a good conveyance, owing to their omission to secure the signatures of the adult members of the joint Hindu family owning the property, amounted, in my judgment, to a breach of one of the main duties of the contract, and entitled the vendees to > sue under the equitable jurisdiction of the Court to enforce rescission and procure the consequent restitution. (Williams Vendor and Purchaser, 3rd Edn. Vol. I. p. 35).

The learned trial Judge has given what amounts to a compromise decree, for which he had no sanction from the parties and which was not within the scope of the suit. He has ordered that the trustees shall execute two fresh sale deeds in favour of the plaintiff, to be signed by all the members of the joint Hindu family carrying on business under the name and style of Jawala Nath-Kanshi Ram. If the trustees fail to produce these deeds so signed within one month, the learned Judge has declared that the plaintiff shall be entitled in equity to a refund of the deposit, namely, Rs. 15,800. If the deeds, however, are produced in Court within the time specified, the plaintiff's suit is to be dismissed. I can only infer from this decision that the learned Judge, in agreement with the plaintiff, took the view that the names of all the members of the joint family were necessary for the purpose of conveying a reasonably good title.

In my judgment, the plaintiff is entitled to have the contract of sale rescinded and to be restored to his original position. The deposit of Rs. 15,800 has been in the hands of the defendants, and Dr. Narang states that it has been drawing interest at the rate of four per cent. I think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of this sum with interest at four per cent. from the date it was paid to the defendants until the date of its refund. I would accordingly accept this appeal, decree the rescission of the contract of sale and order the defendants to refund to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 15,800 together with interest at four per cent. from the 15th August 1922, up to the date of realisation, and I would also award the plaintiff his costs throughout.

Dalip Singh, J.—The question of the law to be decided in this revision which was referred to a Division Bench by order dated the 4th November 1927 is whether an endorsement of part payment of the principal made at the instance of an illiterate debtor is sufficient to extend limitation under S. 20, Lim. Act.

In this case there is no endorsement or mark made by the debtor himself under the endorsement. As pointed out in the referring order the only two rulings directly in point are Bali Ram v. Sabha Sukh (1), a Division Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court, and Sri Ram v. Kasi Mollah (2), a single Bench ruling of the Patna High Court.

We respectfully agree with the view of law as laid down in Bali Ram v. Sabha Sukh (1) and we do not agree with all respect with the ruling reported as Sri Ram v. Kashi Mollah (2). As pointed out in Bali Ram v. Sabha Sukh (1) it has not been suggested in any case that in the absence of a mark the clear words of S. 20, Lim. Act, requiring the payment and the handwriting to be made by one and the same person are complied with by an endorsement by another person at the instance of the person making the payment. We, therefore, hold that the revision must be accepted and the suit dismissed as barred by limitation. There will be no order as to costs.

Moti Sagar and Mehi Chand Mahajan—for Respondents.

Sir Shadi Lal, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the rendition of accounts, and the question of law debated before us is whether the appeal is cognizable by the High Court or by the District Court. A perusal of the plaint shows that the plaintiffs valued their relief tentatively and approximately at Rs. 1,100 and asked the Court to grant them a decree for the amount that may be found due to them on rendition of accounts.

The Subordinate Judge, who exercises an unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction, has passed a decree for Rs. 11,000 odd in favour of the plaintiffs and directed them to make up the deficiency in the Court-fee.

Against this decree the defendant has preferred the present appeal, and Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondents raises the preliminary objection that the appeal lies to the District Judge, and not to this Court. The question for determination is whether the forum of appeal is determined by the amount at which the plaintiff values the relief sought by him or by the amount found by the trial Court to be due to him. There is a divergence of judicial opinion on the subject, but the view taken by the Punjab Chief Court in Mamman Mal v. Abdul Aziz (1), and Manna Lal v. Samandu (2), and subsequently followed by this Court, is to the effect that it is the amount found by the Courts to be due to the plaintiff, and not the value put by him on his relief, which must be regarded as the value of the suit for the purpose of determining the Court to which the appeal lies. The same rule has been laid down by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ijjatulla Bhuvan v. Chandra Mohan (3), and by the Bombay High Court in Ibrahimji Issaji v. Benjanji Jamsedji (4). The Madras and the Allahabad High Courts have, however, adopted the view that the amount at which the plaintiff values his relief, though approximately, determines the forum of the suit as well as of the appeal : vide Kannayya Chetti v. Venkata Narasayya (5), and Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Ala Bakhsh (6).

It will be observed that S. 7 (iv) (f) of the Court-fees Act allows the plaintiff to put his own value upon the relief sought by him, but S. 11 of the Act makes it clear that, when a higher sum is found due to him, he must make good the deficiency in the Court-fee before he can execute the decree. It is beyond dispute that the value fixed by the plaintiff in the plaint is only a tentative one, and there is no valid reason why this approximate value should be treated as binding upon the parties for the purposes of determining the forum of the suit as well as that of appeal. If the contention urged on behalf of the respondents be accepted, it would lead to some absurd results. Suppose the plaintiff values his claim in the plaint at Rs. 500 and institutes his suit in a Court whose jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 1,000 Not only would the trial Court be competent to pass a decree for Rs. 1,00,000, if such sum is found due to the plaintiff, but an appeal from that decree would lie to a Subordinate Judge of the 1st Class, whose decision on questions of fact would be final. The Courts should avoid, as far as possible, an interpretation of law which would lead to an absurdity of this character.

It is unnecessary to examine the various judgments which have been cited at the Bar, because, as I have already stated, a difference of opinion undoubtedly exists on the subject. Suffice it to say that after considering the matter carefully I am not prepared to dissent from the rule which has been consistently followed in this province, that the amount ascertained by the Court to be due to the plaintiff, and not the sum at which he values his claim tentatively and approximately, should be regarded as the value of the suit for the purpose of determining the forum of the appeal. Civil Petn. No. 358 of 1927, Decided on 5th December 1927, for transfer of a suit.

Civil P. C., Ss. 22, 23 and 151—Petition by defendant for transfer of suit to his place of residence for his convenience is not acceptable.

The principle is well established that it is the right of the plaintiff to choose the forum for his action, and that in deciding whether the plaintiff should be deprived of that right, a very strong case must be made out by the defendant, and further that in deciding whether a suit should or should not be transferred it is not merely the convenience of the defendant that has to be considered, but the plaintiff's convenience also should he borne in mind.

Badri Das and G. C Narang—for Petitioner.

Moti Sagar, Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Respondents.

Order.—This is an application under Ss. 22, 23 and 151, Civil P. C., made by the defendant Ruchi Ram Khattar for the transfer of the civil suit for the recovery of Rs. 1,08,974-8-3, instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rawalpindi, to the Dera Ismail Khan District in the North-Western Province. The suit is based on a promissory note admittedly executed by the petitioner in favour of one Sundar Das. Sundar Das, it is alleged, endorsed the promissory note in favour of Sarab Narain Shah, plaintiff. The promissory note was admittedly executed in Dera Ismail Khan, where the petitioner resides, but it is alleged that Sundar Das, who also is a defendant in the suit and is a resident of Rawalpindi, endorsed to Sarab Narain Shah in Rawalpindi. Sarab Narain Shah himself is a resident of the Jhelum District. He does not carry on any business in Dera Ismail Khan.

The application for transfer is made on the ground that there was a dispute between Ruchi Ram aud Sundar Das with regard to certain contracts alleged to have been jointly taken by them, which was referred to arbitration. The award of the arbitrator was that Sundar Das should pay Rs. 1,25,000 to Ruchi Ram. An application was therefore made in the Court of ths District Judge at Dera Ismail Khan to file the award and it appears that during the pendency of that application Ruchi Ram attempted to attach before judgment the amount due from him to Sundar Das on the basis of the promissory note, but for some reason or other he did not succeed to attach the amount. It is alleged by the petitioner that in order to prevent the attachment of the amount due on the promissory note Sundar Das has fictitiously endorsed the promissory note to Sarab Narain Shah, a relation of his. It is alleged that a good portion of the amount due on the promissory note has been paid by the petitioner and that this will be the main defence in the case. It is, therefore, contended that it will be very inconvenient for the petitionor (the defendant) if the suit is tried in Rawalpindi as he will have to bring his witnesses all the way from Dera Ismail Khan, or it will be necessary to issue commission for their examination as the Court is not competent to procure their attendance in Rawalpindi, a course which, it is intended, will be unsatisfactory. It will thus be observed that the sole ground for the transfer of the suit is the convenience of the defendant.

The petition is strenuously opposed both by Sarab Narain Shah and Sundar Das. Sarab Narain Shah, as I have already stated, has no connexion with Dera Ismail Khan and naturally it will be very inconvenient to him if he is made to go to that district to prosecute h case.

A large number of judicial authorities were cited by counsel on both sides in support of their respective contentions. I do not propose to discuss them in this judgment as an examination thereof shows that each depended on its particular facts which influenced the learned Judges to transfer or not to transfer the cases before them. The principle, however, is well established that it is the right of the plaintiff to choose the forum for his action and that in deciding whether the plaintiff should be deprived of that right a very strong case must be made out by the defendant, and further that in deciding whether a suit should or should not be transferred it is not merely the convenience of the defendant that has to be considered, but the plaintiff's convenience also should be borne in mind. Now, in the present case, while it is true that it suits the petitioner (the defendant) that the case should be tried in Dera Ismail Khan where he resides and carries on business, it is equally clear that it will be very inconvenient to the plaintiff if he is ordered to prosecute his suit in the Dera Ismail Khan District. It also appears from the allegation made by the petitioner in the petition for transfer that the right of the plaintiff to maintain the suit is likely to be questioned on the alleged ground that the transfer was fictitious and malafide. I express no opinion whether such a plea is open to the defendant or not or whether there is any substance in that plea, but if such a plea is raised it may be necessary for the Court to adjudicate on the genuineness of the transfer of the promissory note to the plaintiff. Evidence on that point will be available mostly in Rawalpindi.

After a careful consideration of all the circumstances I am not satisfied that this is a fit case in which I should exercise my discretion by transferring the case to the Dera Ismail Khan District. It is obvious that both parties are anxious to look to their own convenience and to disregard the interest of the other party. But the plaintiff having the primary right to choose the Court for the institution of the suit, I see no reason to deprive him of that right in this case. The consequence is that this petition is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the mortgagors for possession by redemption of certain property which had been mortgaged to defendants 1 and 2, on payment of a sum of Rs. 5,500. The mortgagees were let into possession and the period mentioned in the mortgage-deed was three years. The mortgagees were to realize the profits of the mortgaged property and to appropriate it in lieu of interest after paying the Government revenue.

The date of the mortgage was the 25th August 1911, and the present suit was instituted on the 22nd December 1922. The main defence of the defendants for the purposes of this judgment is to the effect that the mortgagees had not been put into possession of the mortgaged property during the first three years of the mortgage, although they admit that they have received the profits for the first two years. They, therefore, claim profits for one year. They further plead in para. 2 of their written pleas that > with consent of the mortgagors they have effected repairs to a ghair abad well and had got two pipes set up therein at a cost of Rs. 600.

They claim this sum for having made improvements upon the property. They further plead that they had planted some orange trees on the land at an expense of about Rs. 600 or Rs. 700 and they ask to be reimbursed for that outlay. They also say that they reclaimed certain banjar land by spending about Rs. 1,000 and claim this sum also from the plaintiff. There were certain other pleas which do not seem to have been pressed and which need not be noticed by the Court. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit, but went on to hold that they must pay, in addition to Rs. 5,500, the mortgage-money, a further sum of Rs. 1,550 being the estimated profits for the year during which possession was withheld from the mortgagees by the mortgagors.

The defendants-mortgagees have come up in appeal to this Court challenging that part of the decree of the Court below which has refused to allow them the costs of the alleged improvements and the expense incurred by them in planting orange trees and in reclamation of the land. The plaintiffs have filed a cross-appeal in which they challenge the finding of the Court below as to the sum of Rs. 1,550.

The learned counsel for the defendants-mortgagees did not seriously press his case as regards the alleged planting of orange trees and the reclamation of banjar land, but he strenuously argued that the mortgagees were entitled to the costs incurred in the so-called improvements, effected by them by executing certain borings in the ghair abad well. It is unfortunate that the contesting defendants' pleader did not clearly define his position as regards the alleged improvements and has led evidence in a somewhat haphazard manner. At first he put forward the case of the repairs having been effected with the consent of the mortgagors but afterwards goes on to suggest the general plea of improvement in the same paragraph.

In the evidence produced by the defendants, they attempt to make out a case both of consent and of improvement. The trial Court has very properly decided as a fact that no consent by the mortgagors has been established. On the general question of improvement the Court has also decided against the contesting defendants. The transfer of Property Act (4 of 1882) does not apply to the Punjab and so we need not consider the provisions of that Act. We are thrown back upon the general principles of law so far as it applies to the question of improvements effected by a mortgagee while in possession. According to the old English authorities a mortgagee was not entitled to be recouped for any improvements that he might make upon the mortgaged property unless he obtained the consent of the mortgagor beforehand.

But the tendency of later decisions appears to be more favourable to the mortgagee in this respect, and it has been laid down that, prima facie, a mortgagee who has expended money in improvements is entitled to an inquiry whether the outlay has increased the value of the property and to be allowed such outlay so far as the value is proved to have been increased thereby : vide Coote on Mortgages, Vol. 2, 1924 edn. p. 1225.

The leading authority on the subject is the well-known case of Sheppard v. Jones (1). It lays down that the improvement for which the mortgagee can claim to be compensated at the time of the redemption of his mortgage must be a lasting and permanent improvement. It must have increased the saleable value of the property and it must be a reasonable sum the payment of which would not make the redemption of the mortgage by the mortgagor difficult or impossible. This is nothing but ordinary justice that the increase in the price of the property should not go into the pocket of the mortgagor without his reimbursing the mortgagee whose money was instrumental in raising the price of the property. The law is also very succinctly put by Mr. Fisher in his well-known work on Mortgages, vide paras. 1782 and 1783 of Fisher's Law of Mortgage : see also the cases reported as Nijalingappa v. Chanabasawa (2) and Rikhi Kesh v. Jwala Sahai (3). Thus the law is clear and well settled. Let us apply the law to the proved facts of the case.

Now, there is no evidence on the record to show that the improvement was a lasting one or that it materially increased the saleable value of the property. The alleged improvement, according to the mortgagees consisted of making some holes in the bottom of a ghair abad well. An official was examined as a witness on behalf of the mortgagees. He stated the borings were done in 1917 and that the pipes inserted in those borings worked for four or five years. Now, the suit was brought in 1922, so that the effect of the improvement must have been exhausted before the time the suit was actually filed in Court. After the removal of the pipes or their decay in the ordinary process of nature there would only remain a hole in the soil at the bottom of the well. The walls of this hole in course of time are bound to bank in after the removal or decay of the pipes. We have thus no evidence on the record to show that the improvement was of a lasting nature and such as would increase the value of the property and permanently add to its utility. This being so and the plea of consent being rightly decided by the trial Court against the mortgagees, we think that the decision of the Court below on this point was right and accordingly we dismiss the defendants-mortgagees' appeal with costs.

(3) [1919] 78 P. R. 1919=52 I. C. 862.

Now remains the question of the cross-appeal filed by the plaintiffs-mortgagors. We are satisfied on the evidence that the mortgagees were not given possession by the mortgagors during the years 1911, 1912 and 1913. The defendants-mortgagees admit that they received the profits for two years from Nand Singh, one of the mortgagors, and we think that the mortgagees are entitled to the profits of the year 1913-14. We, therefore, affirm the decree of the trial Court on this point and dismiss the plaintiffs-mortgagors' appeal with costs.

Jot Ram-Chandra Bhan—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 1434 of 1927, Decided on 8th December 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 7th March 1927.

(a) Railways Act (9 of 1890), S. 72—Risk-note B—Date of forwarding note—Railway receipt and risk-note not same—Risk-note cannot give immunity to railway company from liability of goods lost.*

According to risk-note B, as approved by the Governor-General in Council the forwarding note, the railway receipt and the risk-note must all be executed on the same date, and so where there is no proof that they were executed on the same date, the risk-note for goods consigned is not in the approved form and it cannot afford immunity to the railway from its liability as a bailee, in case the goods are lost : 20 C. W. N. 685, Rel. on. [P 163 C 2]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Exceptions—Evidence Act, S. 105.

In order to bring a case within the exception, strict compliance with its terms is necessary. It is one of the established cannons of interpretation that exceptions are to be taken most strongly against the party for whose benefit they are introduced. [P 163 C 2]

Cordon Noad—for Appellant.

Shamair Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The suit, which has given rise to this second appeal, was instituted by the firm of Messrs. Jot Ram-Chandar Bhan, merchants, Delhi, against the E. I. Ry. for recovery of Rs. 630, being the amount of compensation for non-delivery of 11 complete bags of sugar and shortage of two maunds in the remaining 115 bags which had been consigned to the appellant from the Kidderpur Docks to Delhi.

The defendant railway denied liability alleging loss by theft committed in a running train for which it was protected to the term of risk-note-B, under which the goods had been booked at a reduced rate. The plaintiffs denied having executed the risk-note and further urged that "even if there was any risk-note it was illegal." The Court framed the following issues :

(1) Were the goods in question booked at a reduced rate under risk-note ?
On defendant.

(2) Were the goods short-delivered lost on account of the wilful negligence of the defendant ?
On plaintiff.

(3) Were the goods short-delivered lost in transit ?
On defendant.

(4) To what compensation are the plaintiffs entitled ?
On defendant.

It found issues 1 and 2 in favour of the defendant and issue 3 in favour of the plaintiff and dismissed the suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs. On appeal the learned District Judge held the execution of the risk-note by the plaintiff proved, but passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 528-10-0 on the ground that the risk-note was inoperative as it had not been executed on the same day on which the forwarding note and the railway receipt were executed and also because it had not been proved that the consignment was actually carried by the railway at reduced rates.

The defendant railway has filed a second appeal and on its behalf the learned Government Advocate has contended that the risk-note is not inoperative in any way. The railway receipt (Ex. D-X) bears date 6th October 1922 while the forwarding note (Ex. D-3) produced by the defendant is dated 4th October 1922. The risk-note, Ex. D-2, is in the usual printed form and the relevant portion reads as follows :

> Whereas the consignment of . . . tendered by me as per forwarding order No. . . of this date for dispatch by the E. I. Ry. Administration or their transport agents or carriers to Delhi Shahdara station and on which I have received the railway receipt No. . . . of same date is charged at a special reduced rate, etc.

It will be noticed that according to the printed form the risk-note, the forwarding note and the railway receipt must be executed on one and the same date and in this particular note, it is recited that they all bear the same date. But, as clearly stated, the forwarding note produced by the railway was not executed on the 6th but bears the date 4th October and the recital in the risk-note, the forwarding note and the railway receipt all bear the same date is incorrect. The question for decision, therefore, resolves itself to this: whether the risk-note has become inoperative by reason of the fact that no forwarding note of the date on which the risk-note was issued is forthcoming and the recital in the risk-note to the contrary is wrong. The learned Government Advocate argues that this is an immaterial error and does not in any way affect the relative rights of the parties. Mr. Shamair Chand, on the other hand, contends that the terms of the note must be strictly construed and that rigid adherence to the printed form is essential before it can be operative. Neither party has cited any authority, English or Indian, before me and so far as I am aware the case is one of first impression. I have, therefore, given the matter much careful consideration and have reduced the conclusion that the appellants' contention must prevail.

In Cl. (1), S. 72, Railways Act, it is enacted that the responsibility of a railway administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods delivered to it to be carried by railway is, subject to the other provisions of the Act, that of a bailee under the Contract Act. Clause (2) of the same section declares that an agreement purporting to limit this responsibility shall, in so far as it purports to effect such limitation, be void except when it falls within one of the two exceptions mentioned therein. The first of these exceptions is when a risk-note in one of the forms approved by the Governor-General in Council has been duly executed. It will be seen that the legislature after declaring that the liability of the railway is that of a bailee, has jealously guarded any limitation of such liability, except when the consignor has agreed to cut it down by executing a note in the form approved by the Governor-General in Council.

It seems to me that in order to bring a case within the exception strict compliance with its terms is necessary and before the railway can claim protection by reason of the execution of the risk-note, it lies on it to prove that the particular note relied on, is both in form and in substance one of those approved by the Governor-General in Council. It is one of the established canons of interpretation of statutes and documents that exceptions are to be taken most strongly against the party for whose benefit they are introduced, and there is authority for the proposition that > even though the document might have been executed by the other party the words in which the exceptions are expressed are considered as his words : see Beal's Cardinal Rules of Interpretation, p. 183.

Reference may also in this connexion be made to a Division Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mohabarsha Bankapur v. Secy. of State (1) where a clerical defect in Risk-note-Y was held fatal to the defence of the railway against its liability as a bailee.

According to the risk-note B, as approved by the Governor-General in Council, the forwarding note, the railway receipt, and the risk-note must all be executed on the same date. Here the risk-note is, as already pointed out, of the 6th and the forwarding note of 4th October. There is no proof that they were executed on the same date and not on the cards which they actually bear. Whether the discrepancy is due to oversight or design, the fact remains that this particular risk-note is not in the approved form and it cannot afford immunity to the railway from its liability as a bailee.

Further, it must be noted that the plaintiffs had specifically denied that the goods had been carried by the railway at a reduced rate and the point was put in issue, the onus of which had been laid on the defendant. But no evidence was produced to discharge this onus, and, as pointed out by the learned Additional District Judge, the railway clerk, Surainder Nath, who appeared as a witness did not depose to the goods having been carried at reduced rates. The matter was within the special knowledge of the railway and could have been easily proved from their books. In these circumstances, the learned Additional District Judge was fully justified in finding this issue against the defendant. The learned Government Advocate has argued that on the finding that the risk-note had been carried by the plaintiff, the burden of proving that the goods were not carried at a reduced rate (as stated in the body of the note), shifted on to the plaintiff and he ought to have proved that the goods had not been carried at a reduced rate. But the defendant did not object to the form of the issue or the allocation of onus in either of the Courts below and I cannot allow the question to be raised for the first time in second appeal.

Mr. Shamair Chand for the respondent sought to challenge the finding of the learned District Judge that wilful negligence on the part of the railway had not been proved. But this was a clear finding of fact with which this Court could not interfere and I did not accordingly allow him to argue this point.

Having regard to my findings on the main point argued, the plaintiff succeeds and his claim was rightly decreed by the learned Additional District Judge for Rs. 528-10-0. The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed, but under the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1544 of 1927, Decided on 16th December 1927.

Police Act (5 of 1861), S. 29—Mere negligence in duty does not amount to "violation of duty."

Every negligence does not amount to "violation of duty," within S. 29 much less when it is not wilful. [P 165 C 1]

Muhammad Amin—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—These are two petitions in revision of the order dated 12th August 1927 of the Sessions Judge of Ambala whereby he upheld the conviction of the petitioners under S. 29, Police Act, and sentenced each to a penalty of two months' pay. The petitioners are two constables of police in the District of Ambala. Muhammad Ali petitioner was directed by the Sub-Inspector to arrest one Qutbu who had been suspected of theft and to produce him before the Sub-Inspector. Muhammad Ali arrested the suspect and obtained the assistance of Wali Muhammad constable at the thana of Bilaspur, and was escorting him to the place where he expected to find the Sub-Inspector. He was, it appears, riding a mare while the constable Wali Muhammad was actually holding the handcuffs of Qutbu. There were some other persons with this party who apparently had been deputed to accompany these constables by a lambardar at their request. In the way the prisoner escaped.

The petitioners were sent up for trial and were found by the Magistrate guilty of having intentionally allowed Qutbu, to escape. On appeal the Sessions Judge has disbelieved the testimony of the prosecution witnesses and has acquitted the petitioners of the offence of having intentionally allowed the prisoner to escape. He has, however, convicted them of being guilty of "violation of duty" inasmuch as, according to him, they were guilty of negligence in permitting the prisoner to escape. The following extract from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is an indication of what facts he was prepared to find:

In my view the only important ground of appeal is the 5th, that there is no evidence on the record to prove that the escape of Qutbu was due either to the negligence or intention on the part of the appellants. The chamar witnesses gave a story which appears to me improbable . . . . . In my opinionthis evidence is clearly false and the chamars have concealed the true facts or else did not accompany the party at all. Had the appellants intended to permit Qutbu to escape it is most improbable that they would have asked Gadi lambardar to furnish three chamars to accompany them . . . I can only conclude therefore that the appellants never intended to allow Qutbu to escape. The question remains whether they permitted him to escape negligently. As already stated there is no evidence at all of the actual manner of escape, but the chamars have said that Muhammad Ali was riding a horse and Wali Muhammad was holding the handcuffs, In default of any explanation by the appellants as to the actual manner of escape I think it should be held that the escape was due to the negligence of the two appellants, for had Muhammad Ali been on the look out he could have chased, he being on horseback and had Wali Muhammad been on the look out he would not have lost hold of the handcuffs.

The learned Judge then discusses the question whether "negligent sufference of escape" is an offence under S. 29, Police Act, and after aswering it in the affirmative on the ground that it fell within the expression "violation of duty" as used in that section upheld the conviction.

Now I have carefully considered the question of interpretation of the expression "violation of duty" as used in S. 29, Police Act, and am of opinion that it connotes something more than mere non-performence of duty. The word "violation" implies something more than mere omission to perform a duty. It may under certain circumstances include "illegal omission," but such omission must be of some positive duty imposed by law and it is the duty of the prosecution affirmatively to prove what under the circumstances disclosed a person who is alleged to have been guilty of violation of duty should have done and that he wilfully failed to do that. In this case the learned Sessions Judge has convicted the petitioners merely on what appears to me to be an assumption that it was for them to establish the circumstances under which Qutbu escaped from their custody.

The circumstances may and probably do raise an inference of negligence, but then I am not prepared to hold that, every negligence amounts to "violation of duty." In my opinion violation implies a certain amount of violation on the part of the accused. The facts found in this case did not raise any presumption of the existence of any consciousness on the part of the petitioners that they were breaking any rules that governed them in the matter of the escorting of the prisoner. Their negligence was not wilful. After a careful consideration of the circumstances of the case I have arrived at the conclusion that the facts disclosed do not fall within the ambit of S. 29, Police Act. Accepting this petition I set aside the conviction of the petitioners and direct that the penalty if paid be refunded to them.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1348 of 1927, Decided on 25th November 1927, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Montgomery, D/- 11th August 1927.

Hindu Law—Aroras—Marriage with maternal aunt by chadar andazi ceremony is invalid.

The marriage by the chadar andazi ceremony with his maternal aunt by an Arora, who is governed by Hindu law, cannot be a legal marriage. [P 165 C 2]

J. L. Kapur for R. C. Soni—for Petitioner.

Jamna Das—for the Crown

Judgment.—Sodagar has been convicted under S. 498 of enticing and retaining Mt. Jawali, who is said to be the wife of one Sawan Ram. The question raised on revision is that the parties being Aroras no valid marriage could have taken place by chadar andazi or any other form of ceremony between this man Sawan Ram and Jawali. The relationship is that Sawan Ram is the sister's son of the deceased husband of Mt. Jawali. There is the evidence of the two witnesses to the effect that such a marriage is valid, one a Mahomedan and the other a Brahmin, who stated in the widest possible terms that Hindus can marry their maternal aunts—a proposition which is not supported even by counsel for the complainant. The position, therefore, is that if the parties are governed by Hindu law, and the presumption is that Aroras are so governed, the marriage was no marriage. Further if it was performed at all, it was performed by the chadar andazi ceremony which, I understand from both sides, is not recognized by the strict Hindu law. The only possibility, therefore, is that, although Aroras as a whole are governed by Hindu law, the members of the particular family are governed by the agricultural custom of the people amongst whom they live, a fact which would only be established by clear and convincing evidence. There is none. The case must, therefore, fail as the first essential has not been proved, I accept the application for revision and acquit the accused.

(a) Railways Act, S. 72—Risk-note.

A risk-note signed by a person other than the one who consigned or delivered the goods to the railway is invalid : 20 C. W. N. 685, Rel. on. [P 169 C 1]

(b) Railways Act, S. 72—Risk-note proved invalid—Damage proved—Railway must prove that it was not due to their negligence.

In the absence of a valid risk-note damage being proved, it is for the railway to account for it and show that it was not due to any negligence on their part. [P 169 C 1]

(c) Railways Act, S. 72—Risk-note A—Loss due to undue delay in transit is not covered.

Risk-note A confers exemption from liability only in respect of the "condition" of the goods at the time of the delivery at destination. It cannot confer immunity from liability for loss due to other causes, e. g., loss due to fall in prices resulting from undue delay in transit, or loss due to disappearance of goods due to theft etc. : *A. The refusal of railway authorities to reweigh goods or note the condition or weight in their registers at the time of delivery gives no cause of action to a consignee,and if he refuses to take delivery, he cannot complain that the sale of goods was unnecessarily delayed and consequently the goods fetched a very low price: 58 *I. Bhide, J.—Appeals Nos. 1084 and 2769 of 1925 arise out of two suits based on similar facts which were disposed of together by the Senior Sub-Judge of Karnal. The appeal in one of the suits lay to this Court, while that in the other lay to the District Judge, Karnal, but the latter appeal was transferred to this Court on the motion of the appellant. The material facts for the purposes of these appeals, which may be taken to be proved beyond any doubt, are as follows :

Certain consignments of goods consisting of makki (maize) and khali (oil-cakes) were booked under risk-notes A from Kursela (B. N. W. Ry. to Karnal and Panipat (on the E. I. Ry.) by Devi Parshad-Ram Sahai, commission agents of Kursela, and the railway receipts were endorsed in favour of the plaintiffs Dassunddhi-Mal-Bashambar Das of Karnal to whom the goods had been sold. According to the instructions of the consignor, the goods were to be sent via Mukame Ghat. The goods were booked between the 31st January 1922 and the 4th February 1922 and reached Mukame Ghat on 9th February 1922, but were detained at the latter place on account of a strike amongst guards of the E. I. Ry. owing to which the conveyance of goods in the "upward" direction, that is, towards Allahabad and Delhi had been stopped on the latter railway. The goods remained at Mukame Ghat till the 5th March 1922. On the latter date they were dispatched to Bara Banki for being sent on to Karnal and Panipat by another route and reached Bara Banki on 11th March 1922. (The judgment of the Senior Sub-Judge shows that the goods reached Bara Banki on 22nd March 1922 but this appears to be a mistake). The goods remained at Bara Banki from the 11th to the 22nd March 1922 as the O. R. Ry. to which they were to be transhipped there refused to accept the goods for some reason and the higher authorities of that railway had to be approached.

On 22nd March the goods were transhipped from the B..N. W. Ry. to the O. R.Ry. and reached Karnal and Panipat within a short time, that is between the 27th March and 1st April 1922. On arrival, however, the goods were found to be in a damaged condition. The goods at Karnal were inspected by the Assistant Medical Officer of the E. I. Ry. and his reports Ex. D. K and D. L. show that about one-fourth of the goods were in a rotten condition and unfit for consumption. Out of the Panipat consignment also some 24 bags of makki were found to be altogether rotten: vide evidence of Behari Lal, Goods Clerk, P. W. 18. The plaintiff asked the railway officials to make a note as regards the condition of the goods in the railway registers, but the railway officials declined to do so. Thereupon the plaintiff also refused to accept delivery. The goods remained at Panipat and Karnal till some time in July and August 1922 respectively, when they were auctioned after notice to the plaintiff. The goods at Karnal fetched only Rs. 1,600 while those at Panipat fetched Rs. 850. The railway company offered to pay the price realized after deducting what was chargeable as demurrage, etc. to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff refused to accept this sum and instituted separate suits in respect of the Karnal and Panipat consignments out of which the present appeals arise.

The learned Senior Sub-Judge has held that there was undue delay in transit, causing damage and deterioration of the goods, that the E. I. Ry. was not justified in refusing to make a note in their registers about the condition of the goods at the time of delivery, that the risk-note A, under which the Panipat goods were consigned, was invalid and the one in respect of the Karnal goods also could not absolve the railways inasmuch as the deterioration and damage in this case was due to undue delay in transit. It was found that in the ordinary course the goods should have reached Karnal and Panipat in about 15 days, that is, about the middle of February 1922. Calculating on the basis of the market rates for makki and khali prevailing at that time, the plaintiff was awarded a decree for Rs. 5,175-7-0 in respect of the Karnal goods and for Rs. 2,658-9-6 in respect of Panipat goods. Both the B. and N. W. Ry. and the E. I. Ry. have been made defendants, but the decrees were passed against the B. and N. W. Ry. only as according to the findings of the learned Senior Sub-Judge, the undue delay which was responsible for the damage and deterioration of the goods occurred on that railway only. From this decision the B. and N. W. Ry. have appealed in both the cases. The main points urged on behalf of the appellants were :

(1) Although there was some delay in transit it cannot be considered to be unreasonable in the circumstances of the case.

(2) The goods were in a deteriorating condition from the outset and no damage was caused by any undue delay or other negligence on the part of the appellant railway.

(3) The plaintiff was not justified in refusing to take delivery on the ground that the railway officials refused to make a note as regards the condition of the goods in the railway registers, and the appellants are not responsible for the consequences of his refusal.

(4) The goods were consigned under risk note "A" which gives complete protection to the appellants.

As regards the first point : it was conceded that the railway was bound to convey the goods to destination within a "reasonable time," but it was urged that in view of the strike on the E. I. Ry. the delay in the present case was not unreasonable. It will appear from the facts already given that the chief delay occurred at Mukame Ghat and Bara Banki. The goods were detained at the former place from 9th February to 5th March (i. e, 24 days) and from 11th to 22nd March (i. e., 11 days) at the latter place. The delay at Bara Banki has been satisfactorily explained. It was due to the refusal of the O. R. Ry. to accept the goods at first, not to any negligence on the part of the appellant railway. The same cannot be, however, said of the delay of 24 days at Mukame Ghat. It is true that the consignor had given instructions for the goods being conveyed via Mukame Ghat, but this was apparently not considered to be an essential part of the contract and the goods were eventually dispatched by the appellant railway by another route which was all along open, without reference to the consignors. It seems to me that when it was found on the arrival of the goods at Mukame Ghat that the E. I. Ry. was not accepting goods for conveyance to destination via Mukame Ghat the Railway authorities as agents of the consignors should have either asked for further instructions from them (cf. S. 214, Contract Act), or should have sent the goods by the alternative route which was eventually adopted. I think it should have been possible to adopt one or the other course easily within the course of a week or so at any rate. I would, therefore, hold in the circumstances, that there was unnecessary delay of at least two weeks at Mukame Ghat which could not be held to be "reasonable."

It will be convenient to discuss the second and fourth points together. There is no evidence worth the name in support of the contention that the goods were in a deteriorating condition from the outset. Our attention has been drawn to the evidence of Babu Gopalji Sahai, Station Master (D. W. 4), who has stated in cross-examination that the goods had begun to deteriorate. This witness, however, admitted that he had opened only two bags. The defendants in their written statement did not allege that the goods were in a bad condition from the outset. The form of the risk-note A shows that it is intended to be taken when goods are already in bad condition or so defectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage, or wastage. The contents of the risk-notes taken in the present case show that they were taken because the packing was defective. In each case the reason given refers to the condition of the bags and not to that of the contents of the bags. The written statements of the defendants also show that the risk-notes "A" were taken because the packing was considered defective. It must also be remembered that Munshi Lal, a servant of the plaintiffs, was present at the time the goods were booked and it can scarcely be expected that he would have accepted any goods in a deteriorating condition.

There is no doubt that part of the goods were found to be in a damaged condition on arrival at destination. The original consignments consisted of 383 bags of makki and 45 bags of khali for Karnal and 207 bags of makki and 13 bags of khali for Panipat. The reports D K and D L of the Assistant Medical Officer in respect of the Karnal consignment (which have been referred to already) show that there were only 340 bags of maize and khali intact, while the contents of the rest were lying in heaps in a rotten condition, mixed up with torn gunny-bags. The Panipat goods were not examined on arrival by the Assistant Medical Officer, but the missing goods report, Ex. D-9, shows that out of the 220 bags only 165 were intact, the contents of the rest being loose and in a rotten condition. The goods wore found to be partly damaged, not only at destination, but also at Bara Banki, where they were transhipped from the B. & N. W. Railway to the O. R. Railway on 22nd March 1922. The evidence of the railway officials at Bara Banki (D. W. 9, D. W. 10 and D. W. 11) shows that the contents of about 20 to 40 bags in each wagon containing the consignments in dispute were found to be loose and in a rotten condition at the time of transhipment.

The learned Sub-Judge has found that delay in transit was responsible for the damage, and has relied upon the opinion of Kidar Nath (D. W. 5). Kidar Nath's "opinion" on such a matter can hardly be considered relevant. In any case it is not supported by any reasons and seems to be of little value. If mere delay, i. e., lapse of time, was responsible for damage, it does not appear why it should affect only a portion of the consignments. It seems highly probable that the damage was due to some other cause, but the evidence on the record does not disclose it. The learned Senior Sub-Judge seems to be inclined to think that damage may have been also caused by the goods lying on the river bank at Mukame Ghat. But there is no evidence to show that the goods were taken out for transhipment at Mukame Ghat. In fact, the evidence on the record is to the contrary. The evidence of Kidar Nath (D. W. 5) shows that when the B. & N. W. Railway wagons reached Bara Banki, the Kursela seals were intact except in the case of one wagon.

The appellant railway ascribes the damage to defective packing and seeks protection under the risk-note A. It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that as a matter of fact the packing was not defective and the railway had no authority to demand risk-note A at all. But this plea was not raised in the lower Court and on the evldence as it stands it does not appear justifiable to hold that the appellant railway had exceeded its authority in demanding the risk-note A. The learned Senior Sub-Judge has found that the risk-note A in respect of the Panipat consignment was invalid owing to the fact that it was not signed by the consignor or their agent. This finding seems to be correct. The Panipat risk-note purports to bear the signature of one Munshi Lal, who was a servant of the plaintiff. He was not the person who consigned or delivered the goods to the railway and his signature on the risk-note is of no avail. The name "Devi Prasad Chaudhri" also appears on this note, but Devi Prasad has denied having signed it and the evidence of the Station Master, Kursela (D. W. 7) shows that it was Munshi Lal who wrote the name. Risk-notes, under which a railway claims exemption from liability have to be strictly proved cf. Mohabarsha Bankapur v. Secy. of State (1) and the risk-note A, in respect of the Panipat consignment, cannot, therefore, help the appellant. The validity of the risk-notes in respect of the Karnal consignments is not disputed.

The Panipat risk-note being invalid, the position of the railways in respect of that consignment was that of an ordinary bailee, and it was incumbent on the railways to show that they took as much care of the goods during transit as a man of ordinary prudence would have done. In the absence of a valid risk-note damage being proved, it was for the railways to account for it and show that it was not due to any negligence on their part. But no such evidence has been produced.

The appellants would, therefore, be liable for the damage to the Panipat goods during transit.

In respect of the Karnal goods, however, the risk-notes would seem to protect the railway. The risk-notes are prima facie evidence of defective packing, and this evidence has not been rebutted. In the absence of any other explanation, it must, I think, be held that a part of the goods was damaged during transit owing to defective packing and such loss is covered by the risk-notes.

The risk-note A, however, confers exemption from liability only in respect of the "condition" of the goods at the time of the delivery at destination. It cannot confer immunity from liability for loss due to other causes, e. g., loss due to fall in prices resulting from undue delay in transit, or loss due to disappearance of goods, due to theft etc., cf. B. N.-W. Ry. v. Munna Lal Bishambhar Nath (2) and E. I. Ry. Co. v. Gopi Krishan (3). In the present instance it has been found that there was an unreasonable delay in transit of at least two weeks. The goods reached destination about the end of March. So, if there had been no "unreasonable" delay, they should have reached there about 15th March. If, therefore, there was a fall in the price of the goods in question between 15th March and 1st April the appellant railway would be liable for the loss resulting therefrom.

The net result of the above findings is that at the time of arrival of the goods at destination the liability of the railway was as follows: (a) there being an unreasonable delay of two weeks in transit, the railway was responsible for loss (if any) due to fall in the price of the goods during that period.

(b) In respect of the Panipat goods, the railway was liable to compensate plaintiff for the goods which were found to be damaged.

(c) In respect of the Karnal goods, the railway was not liable for any damage and was only bound to deliver the goods in the condition in which they arrived.

The last point for decision is whether the plaintiff was justified in refusing to take delivery merely because the railway officials refused to make a note in their registers about the quality and quantity of the goods, and what are the consequences of the refusal. It is conceded on behalf of the plaintiff that there is no provision in the Indian Railways Act, or the rules framed under that Act, requiring railway officials to make a note as regards the condition or weight of goods at the time of delivery. The weight of authority is in favour of the appellant's contention that the refusal of railway authorities to re-weigh goods or note the condition or weight in their registers at the time of delivery gives no cause of action to a consignee. This was taken as "settled law" in Suraj Mal v. B. N.

Ry. Co. (4), which follows a number of previous authorities ; and the same view was taken by the Single Bench of this Court in Secy. of State v. Sham Lal Deoki Nandan (5). It seems unfortunate that the plaintiff refused to take delivery under a mistaken notion of his rights, but in view of the authorities referred to I think it must be held that the railway was not responsible for the consequences of his refusal to take delivery.

Owing to plaintiff's refusal to accept delivery at destination, the E. I. Ry. was entitled to sell the goods after notice under S. 56, Indian Railways Act, and action was taken accordingly. The Panipat goods were sold for Rs. 850 on 26th July 1922, and the Karnal goods for Rs. 1,600 on 9th August 1922. The railway claimed Rs. 694-13-0 on account of freight, wharfage, etc., in respect of the Karnal goods and Rs. 362-5-0 on account of similar charges in respect of Panipat goods, and offered to pay the balance to the plaintiff, but he refused to accept the same.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the sale was unnecessarily delayed, with the result that the goods deteriorated still further and fetched a very low price. As regards this it may be pointed out that the liability of the railway as "carriers" terminated when the plaintiff refused to accept delivery. In the absence of any agreement to that effect, the railway cannot be held liable even as warehouse-men, thereafter. The mere fact that the railway claimed demurrage does not give rise to any implication that the railway consented to act as warehouse-men : Chapman v. G. W. Ry. (6), Gangaji Cotton Mills Co. Ltd. v. E. I. Ry. Co. (7), and Secy. of State v. Harkishan Das Kurumal (8). After the plaintiffs' refusal to accept delivery the railway's liability was merely as holders of unclaimed property under S. 56, Railways Act, and the provisions of that section appears to have been complied with.

It has been found above that the plaintiff was entitled to claim damages on account of fall in price (if any) of the goods between 15th March and 1st April. There seems to be no evidence on the record as regards any fall in price of the goods in question during this particular fortnight, but, in any case it appears unnecessary to go into this question as plaintiff himself refused to accept delivery without any legal justification and precluded himself from selling the goods at the time.

As a result of the above findings, my conclusion is that plaintiff is only entitled to recover the balance of the sale price as offered by the E. I. Ry. plus the value of the goods out of the Panipat consignment which were found to be damaged on arrival at destination. (The judgment then gave details of the above and concluded.) On the above findings I would accept both the appeals and, setting aside the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, pass decrees in favour of the plaintiff as follows :

(i) Civil Appeal No. 1084 of 1925 (Karnal case).—Decree for Rs. 905-3-0 only. Plaintiff to pay costs of appellant throughout.

(ii) Civil Appeal No. 2769 of 1925 (Panipat case).—Decree for Rs. 1242-14-6 only. Parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Misc. First Appeal No. 1850 of 1927, Decided on 8th December 1927, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 20th July 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., Sch. 2, paras. 17, 20—Application to file agreement—Arbitrator delivering his award and filing it in Court before disposal of the application—Application becomes infructuous and Court cannot make second reference to arbitrator.

Mehr Chand Mahajan for Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Appellant.

Fakir Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—One Nathu Mal died sonless in 1908 leaving him surviving a widow, Mt. Puran Devi, and two daughters Mt. Durga Devi plaintiff-respondent and Mt. Parbati defendant-appellant. Both these daughters are married and Mt. Parbati has got a son named Piare Lal. Mt. Puran Devi died on 22nd January 1925, and disputes arose between the daughters about succession to the property of Nathu Mal. On 11th April 1925 an agreement was executed by Mt. Parbati and Mt. Durga Devi referring the dispute to the sole arbitration of one Mansa Ram.

On 30th April 1925 Mt. Durga Devi filed an application under Sch. 2, para. 17, Civil P. C., in the Court of Mr. Barkat Ali, Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana, praying that the aforesaid agreement be filed in Court, and a reference made to the arbitrator to decide the dispute and deliver an award. Various adjournments were granted principally owing to the difficulty in having the summonses served on the opposite party Mt. Parbati. As she failed to appear, the Court on 13th November 1925, directed ex-parte proceedings to be taken against her. On that date the Court also passed an order directing the plaintiff's mukhtar "to produce the arbitrator with the faisla salsi (award) on 18th December 1925." On that date the learned Judge was on leave and the case was adjourned to 25th January 1926. In the meantime the arbitrator had started proceedings on 13th December 1925, and as Mt. Parbati did not appear before him he delivered an ex-parte award on 7th January 1926.

On the date fixed for the hearing of the case, i. e., 25th January 1926, the arbitrator appeared in Court and filed his award. Time was granted to the parties to file objections on or before the 6th February 1926. On that date Mt. Parbati appeared and filed a number of objections against the award. The case was next taken up on 12th April 1926, on which date Mr. Barkat Ali passed an order holding that the proceedings taken up to that date had not been quite legal inasmuch as no order under para. 17 (3) had been passed directing the agreement to be filed nor had any order issued to the arbitrator under Cl. 4 of the same paragraph. He accordingly directed that the case should "begin de novo according to the provisions of para. 17," and called upon Mt. Parbati to show cause why the agreement be not filed.

It is important to note that this order has been interpreted by Mr. Barkat Ali's successor, Mr. Muhammad Hassan, who has decided the case, as one superseding the award dated 7th January 1926, and both Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellant and Mr. Fakir Chand for the respondent are agreed (though on different grounds) that this order had the effect of setting aside the award.

On 12th April 1926, after the above order had been passed both parties were examined at length as to the circumstances under which the agreement dated 11th April 1925, to refer the dispute to arbitration had been executed and the following issue was framed:

Was not the agreement freely consented to by Mt. Parbati?

Onus probandi on defendant.

The case was adjourned for evidence to 18th October 1926, but for one reason or another no progress was made for a whole year until 2nd July 1927, when Mr. Muhammad Hassan took it over. On that date an application was presented by the appellant stating that it was useless to make an enquiry into the legality of the agreement dated 11th April 1925, as the arditrator had already made an award on 7th January 1926, and the reference to him had exhausted itself. The respondent was ordered to give a reply to this application and in the meantime evidence was recorded. On 20th July 1927, the learned Subordinate Judge passed an order holding that the defendant-appellant had failed to prove that the agreement had not been voluntarily executed by her and ordered that the agreement be filed and a reference made to the arbitrator directing him to file a fresh award on or before 9th August 1927.

Against this order a miscellaneous appeal under S. 104 (d), Civil P. C. has been preferred by Mt. Parbati and it has been urged on her behalf that the arbitrator having delivered an award on 7th January 1926, and actually filed it in Court on 25th January had become functus officio and no fresh reference could be made to him to deliver another award, even though the award already delivered had been superseded by order of the Court.

Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellant and Mr. Fakir Chand for the plaintiff-respondent have addressed me at length on this point and after giving my best consideration to their respective contentions, I am of opinion that this appeal must succeed. At the time when the application under para. 17 to file the agreement was made by the respondent, the arbitrator had not entered upon the arbitration, but before this application could be disposed of he had actually delivered his award on 7th January 1926, and it had been, as already stated, filed in Court on 25th January 1926. The application had, therefore, become infructuous as the Court could not make another reference to him. The object of having the agreement to refer to arbitration filed in Court under para. 17 is to direct the arbitrator to enter upon his duties and deliver his award; but where the arbitrator has actually delivered the award before the application is disposed of, the object that the application had in view is achieved, though not through the agency of the Court and nothing further remains to be done on application. All proceedings under that paragraph must, therefore, necessarily come to end. The proper course for the parties to follow in such a case is to take steps under para. 20 to have the award made a rule of Court. This may be done either by amendment of the previous application or by withdrawing it and filing a fresh application under para. 20. But in the present case this procedure was not followed. On the other hand the Court proceeded to set aside the award on 12th April 1926. After this had been done, the lower Court had, in my opinion, no jurisdiction to proceed with the matter any further under para. 17.

The fact that in this particular case the Court, on 13th November 1925, had directed the plaintiff's mukhtar to produce the arbitrator with faisla sals[i] (award) and that the arbitrator did fil[e] the award in Court on 25th January 1926, in pursuance of this order is wholly immaterial for the decision of the point now before me. In the first place, I am not quite sure whether in the vernacular order of that date the words "faisla salsi" were not written by an oversight for "iqrarnama salsi" (agreement to refer). But even if this was not the case, and the Court really meant to direct the arbitrator to file the award on 13th November 1925, this order was one directing the arbitrator to enter upon the arbitration and to proceed to deliver his award and must be taken to have been passed under para. 17 (4). If this were so, the procedure under para. 17 had been complied with and the application granted. In this view of the case also, the reference to the arbitrator could not be made a second time by the Court on 20th July 1927, and the order under appeal is obviously wrong.

Mr. Fakir Chand, while admitting that the legal position is as stated above, has tried to distinguish the present case on the ground that the reason given by Mr. Barkat Ali for setting aside the award was that the proper procedure under para. 17 had not been followed, and that it was a necessary consequence of that order that the Court should follow the proper procedure and make a fresh reference to the arbitrator. I am not at all pressed by this argument and consider it to be wholly fallacious. At this stage of the litigation, I am not concerned with the reasons given by Mr. Barkat Ali in his order of 12th April for superseding the award. His reasons may be right or may be wrong, but the fact remains that the award was set aside and both parties acquiesced in it. Mr. Fakir Chand admits that his client could have appealed against that order under S. 104, Civil P. C., but did not do so, and, consequently the order became final under S. 105 (2). In this view of the matter also, the case resolves itself to the same point, viz., whether in a private arbitration where the arbitrator had once delivered the award, and that award had for some reason or other been set aside, can the Court direct him to make another award without a fresh agreement freely entered into by both the parties. There is no doubt whatever that the only possible answer to this question is in the negative. The proposition of law is finally established that an arbitrator becomes functus officio as soon as he delivers the award: Mordue v. Palmer (1). The reference to him has exhausted itself, his authority is at an end and he is not at liberty to exercise a fresh mind on the case and to deliver another award: Brooke v. Mitchell (2).

Reference may also be made to Russell on Arbitration and Award, 11th edn., p. 156 et seq; Banerji on Law of Arbitration in India, p. 237-38, Har Narain v. Bishembhar Nath (3); and Satish Chandra Bose v. Paliram Aggarwalla (4). It is also beyond question that an arbitrator's authority once exhausted is not resuscitated by the award being set aside or becoming otherwise void, so as to enable him to make a fresh award. As pointed out by Russell, > his authority once exercised, though ineffectually, is gone for ever.

For the contrary view Mr. Fakir Chand has cited 35 P. R. 1884 and Ralla v. Badhawa (5). The former of these rulings, however, related to an application to refer a pending suit to arbitration under S. 508, old Civil P. C. It was found that the order passed by the Court under S. 512 of the Code was not in accordance with the application and it was held that the reference was invalid and consequently the award delivered thereon was not a proper award. That case is wholly distinguishable from the present, as here the reference was not made in a pending suit, but the parties had agreed out of Court to refer their dispute to arbitration. It is hardly necessary to emphasize that the two cases stand on an entirely different footing. In pending suits the authority of the arbitrator is derived from the order of the Court making the reference and if this order is defective there is no proper reference and consequently there can be no legal award. On the other hand, in a private arbitration it is the agreement entered into between the parties which confers jurisdiction on the arbitrator to deal with the dispute. In such a case, if proceedings are taken under para. 17 and a reference secured under Cl. 4, it is not this reference which constitutes the arbitrators as a private tribunal, but it is merely the machinery by which the tribunal already constituted by agreement of parties is made to function. This ruling is, therefore, of no assistance to us in the decision of the present case.

In the second case Ralla v. Badhawa (5) the reference no doubt had been made under S. 523 of the old Civil P. C., corresponding to the present Sch. 2, para. 17, but there the agreement to refer contemplated that in the event of there being a difference of opinion and an umpire being appointed, an award should be made by a majority of them. On such difference arising an umpire was appointed, but the reference actually made under S. 523 did not provide for the umpire acting jointly with the arbitrators and delivering an award in agreement with one or the other of them and the award actually given by the umpire differed from that given by either arbitrator. The result was that neither the reference under S. 523 nor the award that followed thereon was in accordance with the agreement. The tribunal had not been constituted in accordance with the agreement and there was in effect no award at all. The Chief Court accordingly held that both the reference and the so-called award were illegal and remanded the case to the lower Court for making a proper reference and having a proper award. It will thus be seen that that decision proceeded on its peculiar facts and is no authority for the contention put forward by Mr. Fakir Chand.

I, must, therefore, hold that the order under appeal, making a fresh reference to the arbitrator and calling upon him to deliver a fresh award, is illegal and ultra vires and must be set aside. Accordingly I accept the appeal and direct that the respondent's application be dismissed. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I order that the parties shall bear their own costs in both Courts.

Second Appeal No. 1332 of 1927, Decided on 17th November 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiapur, D/- 7th January 1927.

Pre-emption—Sale by sonless proprietor—Suit by reversioners for declaration that sale is inoperative as against their reversionery rights—Resale of land to the reversionars by the vendees—Son of original vendee bringing a suit for pre-emption—Suit for pre-emption cannot succeed.

Two sonless proprietors sold certain lands and their collaterals instituted suits against vendor and his vendee for a declaration that the sale or sales effected by him would be inoperative as against their reversionary rights; but suits were compromised. The vendees resold the lands to the reversioners for certain sums somewhat less than they had paid to their vendors and the reversioners mortgaged the same to them for the same amounts. Afterwards the son of one of the original vendees brought a suit for pre-emption :

Held : that the reversioners got the lands not as ordinary purchasers, nor in pursuance of a bargain in open market, but as reversioners and they could not be deprived of what they got as reversioners by a pre-emption suit.

H. C. Kumar—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The three second appeals Nos. 1332, 1333 and 1344 of 1927 arise out of two identical pre-emption suits, and the only question involved in all of them is whether the sales on which the suits were based gave the plaintiff a right of pre-emption ; and if they did, what was the consideration for each sale and could it be paid. The plaintiff succeeded in both the Courts below. The facts that need be stated to determine the above questions are as follows :

Two sonless proprietors named Nikka and Naraina having sold certain lands individually by three separate deeds their collaterals, Hamira and others, instituted the two suits, one against each vendor and his vendee or vendees for a declaration that the sale or sales effected by him would be inoperative as against their reversionary rights. After issues had been framed, but before evidence, these suits were compromised. The vendees resold the lands to the reversioners for certain sums somewhat less than they had paid to their vendors and the reversioners mortgaged the same to them for the same amounts. The deeds of sale as well as of mortgage were executed and registered together, and the suits were then withdrawn.

One of the pre-emptors is a son of one of the original vendees and one is a collateral of another.

Now, there can be no manner of doubt that the transactions, as evidenced by the registered sale-deed were sales, but at the same time it is clear that the sales were effected in pursuance of a compromise based on the principle of give-and-take. The reversioners gave up their claim as put forward in their plaints and the original vendees gave up the lands. As the reversioners had not got the purchase money to pay up at once, they left the lands in mortgage with the vendees for that money. If instead of executing sale-deeds the parties had executed a deed of compromise embodying the same terms, a decree would have followed on that compromise and that would not have given rise to a claim for pre-emption. The deeds, however, give effect to the terms settled for compromising the suits and were executed as a matter of fact to create evidence of that compromise.

Even if it were decided that the transactions were sales pure and simple, then the question is what was the consideration for each sale. It was not only the money which the reversioners contracted to pay, but also the abandonment of their rights to secure which they had instituted the suits. It is obvious that the vendees one and all would not have agreed to re-sell the lands to the rever-sioners if they had not been apprehensive of the results of the litigation. Thus the reversioners got the lands not as ordinary purchasers, nor in pursuance of a bargain in open market, but as reversioners. It follows, therefore, that besides the money that they agreed to pay there was the additional consideration for the sales that the suits were withdrawn. This additional consideration cannot be valued in money, but the pre-emptors must pay the whole of the consideration before they can get the lands. As they cannot possibly do this, they cannot succeed in their suits. They cannot deprive the reversioners of what the latter have got as such. For all these reasons I am of opinion that the suits for pre-emption must fail.

Before concluding the judgment a preliminary objection raised by the respondents' counsel must be noted. This was that the appeal was barred by time because according to the office note it was returned to the appellants' counsel to be re-filed within a week, but it was actually re-filed long after the expiration of that week. Along with the memorandum of appeal in each case copy of the judgment of the trial Court was attached, but the office wanted that copy of the detailed judgment of the trial Court, which was filed in one case should also be filed in the other case. It was not necessary for purposes of the appeal to file that copy, but the appellants' counsel obtained an additional copy of that judgment and it was for that reason that the re-filing of the appeal was delayed. The appeal did not become barred by time on account of that delay.

On the merits I accept the appeals and reversing the orders of the Courts below dismiss the plaintiff's suits with costs throughout.

HARRISON, J.

Faiz Mohammad—Complainant—Petitioner.

v.

Nabu and another — Accused— Respondents.

Criminal Revn. No. 1235 of 1927, Decided on 7th October 1927, reported by Sess. Judge, Karnal, on 15th July 1927.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 256 and 257—Accused requesting to recall prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination after framing of charge — Complainant willing to deposit expense of witnesses—Order directing complainant to pay costs to accused is illegal.

The accused, after the charges were framed, requested to recall the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination. The complainant stated that the witnesses were won over by the accused and thus he was unable to produce them in Court but he was willing to pay the process-fees for their production. Thereupon the Magistrate ordered him to pay the process-fee and costs of witnesses and also a certain sum of money to be paid to the accused as costs.

Held: that the order directing the complainant to pay costs to the accused was quite unjustifiable. [P 175 C 2 ; P 176 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 257—Accused calling prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination—It is doubtful whether complainant should pay expenses.

It is doubtful whether under the Code, it is the duty of the complainant to pay the expenses of his witnesses over again for further cross-examination. [P 176 C 1]

The language of S. 257, Criminal P. C., seems to imply that it is the accused who applies for re-calling of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination and it is he who should pay the expenses and not the complainant. [P 176 C 1]

Facts.—This was a case under S. 323, I. P. C. After the prosecution evidence in the case had been recorded the accused were charged under S. 323 on 7th June 1927. On 8th June they stated that they will further cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses. The Magistrate ordered the complainant to produce his witnesses again on 7th June. On that date the complainant filed a petition that his witnesses who were related to the accused had been won over by the other side and so were not willing to come with him and that he will deposit their expenses and will have summons issued to them. On this the Magistrate (Chaudhry Ghasi Ram, Magistrate, Second Class, Thanesar) adjourned the case to 24th June directing the complainant to pay process-fee and costs of the witnesses and also ordered the complainant to pay Rs. 20 as costs to the accused. It is against this order that complainant has applied for revision.

Grounds. — The complainant had given a very plausible reason for the non-attendance of his witnesses. Without inquiring into the truth or falsehood of this allegation the Magistrate should not have ordered him to pay Rs. 20 as costs to the accused.

The complainant is a boy aged 13 or 14 years only. The Magistrate seems to have lost sight of this fact.

It is doubtful whether under the Criminal Procedure Code it is the duty of the complainant to pay the expenses of his witnesses over again for further cross-examination. There seems to be no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code to justify this procedure.

There is a note to S. 257 in Rama Natha Aiyer's Criminal Procedure Code, Vol. 2, p. 1016, to the effect that there is nothing in the Code which enables the Magistrate to demand from a complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses for cross-examination in a warrant case. In Amin Chand v. King-Emperor (1) it was laid down that under S. 256, Criminal P. C., it is the duty of the Magistrate to re-call prosecution witnesses for cross-examination if the accused so demands after the charge is framed. The Sessions Judge who forwarded that case for revision to the High Court was of opinion that it was the duty of the Magistrate to re-call such witnesses presumably at the public expense. The language of S. 257, Criminal P. C., seems to imply that it is the accused who applies for re-calling of prosecution witnesses for cross-examination and it is he who should pay the expenses and not the complainant. It was not, therefore, for the complainant to pay expenses or to produce witnesses in this case. The Magistrate should have called the witnesses either at the expense of the Government or at the expense of the accused. His order, therefore, that complainant should pay Rs. 20 to the other side was not quite justified, the more so because the complainant in this case was willing to deposit the expenses of the witnesses. It is recommended, therefore, that the order of payment of costs, Rs. 20, may be set aside.

Order —For the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge, I set aside the order directing the payment of Rs. 20 by the complainant to the accused.

SHADI LAL, C. J., AND BHIDE, J.

Hindustan Assurance and Mutual Benefit Society Ltd., Gujranwala — Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Khalasa Bank, Gujranwala and another—Plaintiff and Defendant—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 1924 of 1926, Decided on 30th November 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 28th April 1926.

Contract Act, S. 196—Ultra vires transaction of directors but within powers of the company, can become valid if ratified by shareholders of company having full knowledge of facts of the transaction.

A transaction, which is ultra vires of the directors but within the powers of the company, can be rendered valid if it is ratified by the company. But a person relying upon a ratification by the shareholders must satisfy the Court that they had full knowledge of the facts relating to the transaction to be ratified or that the means of knowledge were available to them. [P 177 C 2]

Badri Das and A. N. Chona—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Narain Singh—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 5th October 1917, Diwan Mangal Sen executed a bond in favour of the Khalsa Bank Limited, Gujranwala (hereinafter to be described as the bank) for fifty thousand rupees which he acknowledged to be due by him to the bank on hundis and a floating account and promised to pay the money with interest by certain instalments. It appears that he was, at that time, the Managing Director of the Hindustan Assurance and Mutual Benefit Society Limited, Gujranwala, (which will be described hereinafter as the Assurance Society), and on the aforesaid date he executed also a deed on behalf of the Assurance Society, by which the society stood surety for the payment of the debt owed by him to the bank, and hypothecated certain properties by way of security for the performance of the promise.

The principal debtor paid some of the instalments due under the bond, and upon his failure to discharge the remaining liability the bank brought the present action for the recovery of the amount due to it and sought to make the principal debtor as well as his surety liable for the payment of the debt. The trial Judge has granted a decree against both the defendants, and that decree is not challenged by Mangal Sen. It is the Assurance Society which contests its liability as a surety, and the main question debated in this appeal is whether the Assurance Society is legally bound by the contract of suretyship made on its behalf by the managing director.

It may be stated at the outset that, on 23rd September 1917, the directors of the Assurance Society had passed a resolution declaring that > the Board is willing to stand as surety for Diwan Mangal Sen's personal liability with the Khalasa Bank Limited and to give them lien on the company's property if need be and it was this resolution that was recited in the surety bond by Diwan Mangal Sen, as his authority for executing the document. Mr. Badri Das for the appellant has argued that the resolution expressed only the willingness of the directors to stand surety for the debts of Diwan Mangal Sen but did not convey their final consent to the execution of the surety bond. There can, however, be little doubt that the resolution was intended to give expression, not to a mere pious wish on the part of the directors, but their decision, that the Assurance Society should become surety for the payment of the debt. Nor could the cancellation of the resolution on 20th October 1917, detract from the obligation which had already been accepted under the surety bond executed in pursuance of that resolution. The question, however, remains whether the directors had any authority to make the Assurance Society liable as a surety for the debt of a private person. Neither Art. 112, which deals with the general powers of the directors, nor Art. 114, which specifies the special powers conferred upon them, makes any mention of such a contract of suretyship It is true that under Cl. (1) of Art. 114 the directors were competent > to enter into contracts for the society and to contract on behalf of the society, such debts and liabilities as they may in the exercise of their discretion, consider necessary in transacting the business of the society. . . . .

but this clause was obviously intended to include such acts as were necessary for the transaction of the ordinary business of the society and for purposes incidental thereto. A contract to stand surety for the payment of a debt due by a third person cannot be regarded as an act of the above description and does not come within the ambit of the clause.

A transaction, which is ultra vires of the directors but within the powers of the company, can be rendered valid if it is ratified by the company. But a person relying upon a ratification by the shareholders must satisfy the Court that they had full knowledge of the facts relating to the transaction to be ratified or that the means of knowledge were available to them. The learned counsel for the respondent admits that there is not a particle of evidence to show that the matter was ever placed before the shareholders, and there can, therefore, be no ratification by the company. In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to consider whether the powers expressed in the Memorandum of Association conferred upon the company any authority to enter into the contract in question.

I must accordingly hold that the Assurance Society is not bound by the contract of suretyship, and the action, founded as it was upon that contract, must fail, in so far as the Assurance Society is concerned. But it is urged that part of the money borrowed by Mangal Sen was utilized for the purposes of the company, and that the latter should, at any rate, refund the benefit derived by it. This contention is, in my opinion, wholly untenable. In the first place, the action, as stated above, was founded upon the contract of suretyship, and the plaintiff cannot be allowed to rely upon a different cause of action. Secondly, the facts, though obscure, do not support this new claim by the bank. It is clear that the debt, for which Mangal Sen executed on 5th October the bond for fifty-thousand rupees, was due by him on the basis of three documents for thirty-thousand, thirteen-thousand and seven-thousand rupees respectively (vide pp. 44 and 45 of the paper-book). It, however, appears that out of the sum of thirty thousand rupees, for which Mangal Sen acknowledged his liability, twenty-five thousand five hundred rupees were credited to the Assurance Society in the books of the bank in satisfaction of a debt due by it to the bank but there is nothing to show how and why Mangal Sen, who admittedly was acting on behalf of the Assurance Society, got the Society recorded as a debtor of the bank for that amount. Be that as it may, one thing is absolutely clear. The plaintiff agreed that the debt due by the society should be discharged and that Mangal Sen's liability should be accepted in lieu thereof. Consequently entries were duly made in the books of the creditor to give effect to this transaction, and the Assurance Society was no longer under any liability which could be enforced in a Court of law.

The result of the above discussion is that I allow the appeal preferred by the Assurance Society and dismiss the plaintiff's suit against it with costs in both the Courts.

The cross-objections preferred on behalf of the bank relate to the prayer contained in the plaint that interest on the decretal amount be awarded from the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of realization. This prayer was evidently overlooked by the trial Judge, but there is absolutely no reason for disallowing future interest. I accordingly accept the cross-objections and direct that Diwan Mangal Sen shall pay the decretal amount with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from the date of institution of the suit up to the date of realization.

Bhide, J.—I agree.

Before an order of discharge or acquittal can be set aside, it must be proved that it is clearly wrong. [P 178 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. S. 439—Retrial.

G. C. Narang and Brij Lal—for Petitioner.

Ghulam Rasul—for Respondent.

Judgment,—Sardar Bishan Singh was tried by Mr. Manmohan Nath, Magistrate 1st Class, Karnal, on 25th November 1925, for various alleged offences under S. 342, 355 and 500, I. P C. After hearing the evidence the learned Magistrate, in a very careful, full and clear judgment, discharged the accused. On 4th February 1926 the complainant filed a petition for revision of this order of discharge. Notice of that petition was not served on the accused until April 1926. The hearing was fixed for 4th December 1926 and the learned Sessions Judge who heard the revision application did not pronounce the judgment till 22nd June 1927. The result is that a year and a half after the present petitioner had been discharged he has been ordered to be retried.

The first question which I have to decide is whether the learned Sessions Judge was correct in holding that the Magistrate's order is perverse as he alleges it to be. So far from holding that that order is perverse I am satisfied that it is entirely warranted by the evidence in the case. By no possible line of reasoning could it be held that it is clearly wrong which is what the law requires to be held before an order of discharge or acquittal can be set aside. I need only say that I find myself, on hearing the whole case in entire agreement with the conclusion which was arrived at by the learned trial Magistrate and with the reasons which he has given in his judgment for arriving at that conclusion. I may add that an order in a case of this kind for retrial of the accused after such a lapse of time amounts to a travesty of justice. I accordingly accept this petition, set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge and affirm the order of discharge passed by the learned trial Magistrate. I order the further proceedings now pending to be quashed.

Municipal Committee, Amritsar — Plaintiff—Appellant.

Harnam Dass — Defendant — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 2444 of 1923, Decided on 25th May 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Amritsar D/- 23rd June 1923.

Decree — Setting aside—Mistake of trying Court—Decree cannot be set aside.

A decree once obtained can only be set aside on the ground of fraud. It cannot be set aside on the ground of mistake where the mistake was not the mistake of the plaintiff nor of the defendant but the mistake of the Munsif who tried the suit : 43 Cal. 217, Foll. [P 179 C 2]

Fakir Chand and Sham Das—for Appellants.

Badri Das, J.L. Kapur and Kidar Nath—for Respondent.

Harrison, J.—The history of the litigation between the parties is that in the year 1919 the plaintiff, who is the mahant of a temple in Amritsar, brought a suit against the Municipal Committee which resulted in his obtaining a decree for ejectment and also for rent, that decree being upheld by the appellate Court in 1920. The case was tried by a 1st Class Munsif.

In 1921 the Municipal Committee instituted the present suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, for possession of the area which formed the subject-matter of the previous litigation and also for a certain additional plot. So far as the additional portion is concerned a decree has been given and no appeal has been presented. So far as the original portion is concerned the suit has been dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge who, relying on Topanidhi Dhivraj v. Sreeputhy Sahanee (1), has held that the question of title is res judicata and, therefore, the plaintiff's suit cannot succeed.

On appeal it has been contended before us on the strength of Shibo Kant v. Baban Kant (2), and other authorities that the matter is not res judicata inasmuch as the Muusif was not competent to try the present suit even if its valuation be reduced to whatever it was in the year 1919 and the additional portion be deducted. On the other side reliance has been placed upon Mt. Sahibzadi Begam v. Mahomed Umar (3), and it is contended that this lays down precisely the same law as the Privy Council rulings, G. H. Hook v. Administrator General of Bengal (4), and Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (5). It is unnecessary for us to give any finding on this somewhat difficult point as, in our opinion, the appeal must fail on the alternative contention of the respondent. This is that the suit is nothing more nor less than a suit to circumvent and set aside a decree and that this is patent on the face of the record and is recited in so many words in the plaint. It is well-established law that if this is so the suit cannot proceed and it is not necessary to quote any further authority than Kusodhaj Bhukta v. Braja Mohan Bhukta (6). A decree once obtained can only be set aside on the ground of fraud. No such fraud as been pleaded in this case. It is only necessary to read the plaint to come to a decision for in para. 5 the following passage occurs :

> The defendant on the basis of wrong facts obtained a decree for ejectment against the Committee on 31st July 1919, and he afterwards ejected the plaintiff,

> after the passing of the decree the defendan ejected the plaintiff and now, without the permission of the plaintiff, (no reason being shown why he should get the permission of the dispossessed-tenant.)

has unlawfully begun to construct "a building on the site in dispute, etc." Counsel contends that this fact of building altered the position and necessitated the case and urges that had it not been for the building the Committee might possibly have refrained from bringing this suit. This is neither here nor there. In our opinion the suit is plainly one to set aside a decree on the ground of mistake. The mistake was not the mistake of the plaintiff nor of the defendant, but the mistake of the Munsif who tried the suit and of the Judge who dismissed the appeal. Kusodhaj Bhukta v Braja Mohan Bhukta (6), makes it absolutely clear that this cannot be done. We, therefore, find, without going into the question of res judicata that the plaintiffs' suit regarding this portion must fail and has rightly been dismissed. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 212 of 1927, Decided on 18th November 1927, for transfer of the case from Court of Dist. Magistrate, Lyallpur.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 526 and 476—Prosecution of witness for perjury at conclusion of his evidence—Accused applying for transfer of case—Case should be transferred as the action of the Magistrate was precipitate and not at proper time.

Where in a criminal case a certain witness was being examined and at the conclusion of the evidence of this witness the Magistrate ordered his prosecution under S. 193, I. P. C. and at the conclusion of the hearing of the case on that date that he did formally order his prosecution:

Held: that the action of the Magistrate, however well intended it may be, was, to say the least of it, precipitate. The proper time, if he was inclined to take action against any witness under S. 476, Criminal P. C., would have been at the time of delivering judgment in the main case. [P 180 C 1, 2]

Mukand Lal Puri—for Petitioner.

Order.—This is an application for the transfer of a case. A lengthy affidavit has been filed on behalf of the applicant and it contains a lot of verbiage. There are number of other allegations too which have been met by the learned Magistrate who has submitted his explanation. There is one matter, however, on which, I am afraid, I cannot agree with the view of the learned District Magistrate. A certain witness named Ganesh Das was being examined, and at the conclusion of the evidence of this witness, the learned District Magistrate ordered his prosecution under S. 193, I. P. C. The Magistrate further ordered that the witness may be detained in Court until the end of the hearing to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. As a matter of fact at the conclusion of the hearing of the case on that date he did formally order his prosecution, acting apparently under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate in his explanation submits as follows:

The whole attitude and expression of the witness showed so obviously that he was telling lie that the dignity of a Court of law required that immediate notice should be taken of the matter and I accordingly recorded the note referred to.

The "note" here refers to the Magistrate's decision ordering action being taken under S. 193, I. P. C. In my opinion, this action of the learned Magistrate, however well intended it may be, was, to say the least of it, precipitate; the proper time, if he was inclined to take action against any witness under S. 476, Criminal P. C., would have been at the time of delivering judgment in the main case. My own view is that such a step as the Magistrate took in the present case is bound to strike terror into the heart of the defence witnesses, and under the circumstances they would be most unwilling to give evidence. This would be very prejudicial to the defence in the case. In a sense the step taken by the learned Magistrate is tantamount to condemning the testimony of one witness at least as false before the trial of the case had concluded. This alone is sufficient to justify the transfer applied for: Golam Bari Gazi v. Yar Ali Khan (1).

Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, in my opinion it would be better if the case were to be transferred to the neighbouring District of Sheikhupura. I feel certain, in my mind, that the learned Magistrate would have decided the case with perfect impartiality and according to his own lights, but the action taken by him against this particular witness was such as to create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused person that the Magistrate had made up his mind against him. The case may be transferred to the neighbouring District of Sheikhupura, but it is distinctly understood that the evidence, so far as it has been recorded in the case, would stand good and only fresh evidence would be produced on behalf of the defence if the accused persons so wish. The case has been dragged on for a long time, which is regrettable, and I trust the Magistrate, before whom the case now goes, would see to it that there are no adjournments and the case is disposed of as soon as possible.

HARRISON AND TEK CHAND, JJ.

Doda Shah — Decree-holder — Petitioner.

v.

Bishen Das—Judgment-debtor — Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 767 of 1926, Decided on 9th December 1927, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 24th July 1926.

* Civil P. C., Ss. 47 and 145 — Sapurdar being a surety his liability can be enforced in execution proceedings.

A sapurdar being a person to whom goods attached in execution of a decree are entrusted is a surety and his liability can be enforced in execution proceedings in virtue of S. 145 read with 47, Civil P. C. [P 183 C 1]

Gobind Das—for Petitioner.

Gobind Ram Khanna—for Respondent.

Order of Reference.—In execution of a money decree some moveable property belonging to the judgment-debtor was attached, and was handed over by the bailiff for custody to the respondent who executed what purports to be a bond on 26th March 1925. In this bond it is recited that the obligor would be responsible to produce the attached property when called upon to do so by the Court or any of its officials, that on his failure to do so he would be liable to make good the amount of the decree and that the Court would be entitled to recover the same from his person and property.

It appears that the respondent on being called upon by the Court to produce the property attached failed to .comply with the order and consequently the Court proceeded to recover the amount of the decree from him in execution proceedings. An objection was taken by him that he was not liable as the proper y remained in the possession of the judgment-debtor and also that he not being a surety under S. 145, Civil P. C., no execution proceedings could be taken against him. The Senior Subordinate Judge held on appeal that the respondent was liable to be proceeded against in execution proceedings as he was governed by S. 145, Civil P. C., but he held that as the property remained in possession of the judgment-debtor, the respondent was not liable to produce the same. The decree-holder has come up to this Court on revision.

Counsel for the respondent has raised a preliminary objection that the Senior Subordinate Judge having held that the property attached remained in the shop of the judgment-debtor and was not placed in the hands of the appellant though he signed the security bond, this petition cannot be entertained. I do not read the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to mean that the respondent did not make himself liable for the production of the property attached. It seems to me that what the learned Judge intended to hold, and on the material before him that was the only finding that could reasonably be arrived at, was that the respondent on being entrusted with the property made himself responsible to produce it when called upon to do so by the Court or any of its officials, but that the property was not physically taken out of the judgment-debtor's shop and given in possession of the respondent and therefore that no liability is incurred by him as it is not shown that the respondent has himself done away with the property entrusted to him. This view cannot be sustained. By executing the bond the respondent admitted that the property had been entrusted to him and that he made himself liable to produce it or to compensate the decree-holder. He is liable under the bond whether the judgment-debtor concealed the property or he himself misappropriated it. The fact of the attachment of the property is also admitted in the bond. I overrule the objection of the counsel for the respondent and hold that the respondent was liable under the clear terms of the bond to produce the property and on his failure to do so to make good the loss of the decree-holder.

The important question that required decision in this case is whether the liability of the respondent could be enforced in execution proceedings or whether it was necessary to bring a regular suit to enforce such liability, On that point previous authorities seem to be divergent. So far as this Court is concerned in Darbari Mal v. Kanshi (1) liability under similar circumstances was ordered to be enforced in execution proceedings. There was, however, no adjudication on the point as no objection was taken to the power of the Court to proceed summarily. This was followed in Nazir Ahmad v.

Bakhshi Ram (2), in which it was held that such liability could be enforced in execution proceedings; beyond citing the authority of Darbari Mal v. Kanshi (1), however, the learned Judge did not discuss the question. I am inclined to hold that the liability of the person to whom attached property has been entrusted for custody under the circumstances disclosed in this case can be enforced in execution proceedings. The question, however, is one of importance, and, in view of the divergence of opinion in the other Courts, I refer it for decision to a Division Bench. The papers need not be printed. An early date will be fixed.

Opinion :

Harrison, J.—The question referred to this Division Bench by Jai Lal, J., is the method in which the liability of a sapurdar can be enforced, a sapurdar being a person to whom goods attached in execution of a decree are entrusted in accordance with the rules framed by this Court. The alternative suggestions are that the liability should be enforced in execution proceedings in virtue of S. 145 read with S. 47, Civil P. C., and that a regular suit should be instituted in the ordinary way, after assignment of the bond by the Court to the decree-holder.

On two occasions Single Judges of this Court in Darbari Mal v. Kanshi (1) and Nazir Ahmad v Bakhshi Ram (2), have followed the procedure of enforcing the liability in execution proceedings. In Darbari Mal v. Kanshi (1) the question was not raised nor considered nor decided. In Nazir Ahmad v. Bakhshi Ram (2) it was held that, under S. 145, Civil P. C, a sapurdar was a surety, but the question was not agitated of how he came to fall within the definition. In the Madras High Court there has been some conflict of opinion. The two Judges, who first dealt with the question, differed as to the applicability of S. 145 : Subba Reddi v. Veerareddy (3). Subsequently a Division Bench accepted the view of Sadasiva Iyer J., in Raja of Venkatagiri v. Sura Krishna Reddi (4) and held that the section did not apply. Finally, a Division Bench, while agreeing that the section was not applicable, held that, in exercise of its inherent powers, the executing Court could go into the matter and dispose of it : A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1005. The Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur in Khetsi Das v. Harba (5) and both Judicial Commissioners of Peshawar in 1927 P. L. R. 525 have held that S. 145 does not apply, and the latter Court has gone so far as to hold that property attached in consequence of an application made to the executing Court by a man holding a simple money decree is not an attachment in execution, a view with which we find ourselves wholly unable to agree. On the other hand a single Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Madho Prasad v. Peary Lal (6), has held that a sapurdar is a surety and can be proceeded against as such.

Now, the necessary ingredients to be established, before it can be held that the relationship of principal and surety exists, are that there shall be two persons, that the former shall be liable to perform certain duties and the latter shall undertake, in the event of his failing to do so, that he will either perform them himself or indemnify the promisee. It is urged that he, the sapurdar should be treated as the surety of the bailiff, who entrusted him with the goods, but the handing over of the goods absolved the bailiff from liability under the rules of this Court and, therefore, it cannot be said that the sapurdar's duties begin on the failure of the bailiff to perform any duty. Similarly, it cannot be said that he is a surety of the decree-holder, and the only possible position is that he is the surety of the judgment-debtor. As showing that this is the true position Shagat Govind Das referred us to the form relating to attachment of moveable property in execution of decree for money, being No. 8, Appendix E, of Sch. 1, Civil P. C. In that the following words occur :

> These are to command you (i. e. the bailiff) to attach the moveable property of. . . . and unless the said judgment-debtor shall pay to you the said sum of Rs. . . . . together with Rs. . . the costs of this attachment, to hold the same until further orders from this Court.

What is contemplated, therefore, is in the first place attachment, then payment followed by release of the attached property, and in the alternative, there having been failure to make such payment, the retention of the attached property until the further orders of the Court. In other words, so long as the property remains in the hands of the bailiff so long does the duty of the judgment-debtor persist. He is bound to pay the whole of the decree and he is not discharged by the attachment or the retention of the property. At this point, the sapurdar comes into the picture and takes the place of the bailiff at the stage at which the judgment-debtor has failed to make the payment after attachment, and he carries out the duties of the bailiff in retaining the property until the further orders of the Court. His duties, therefore, are conditional upon the continued failure of the judgment-debtor to perform his duty and satisfy the decree-holder's debt, and in this sense he is, in our opinion, a surety, for he cannot be said to function, except on the failure of his principal to carry out his obligation. There can be no doubt that title in the attached property does not pass to the sapurdar, but remains with the judgment-debtor who receives any benefit or sustains any loss which may occur during the period of attachment. It is clear that the surety of the sapurdar is liable under S. 145 and in our opinion his principal the sapurdar himself, is also liable though for wholly different reasons.

We hold Ss. 145 and 47, Civil P. C., are both applicable. With this expression of opinion we return the case. (In accordance with the opinion expressed, the petition was accepted).

Judgment.—The facts of the case which have given rise to this application, are given in detail in my order dated 30th September 1927, in Civil Miscellaneous No. 441 of 1927 and need not be recapitulated. Briefly it may be stated that on the 23rd June 1927 Messrs Edwlji Dinshaw instituted a suit against Mr. Dhanpat Mal Bhagwan Das in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, at Karachi, for a declaration that no valid or binding agreement of sale of a factory situate at Mian Channu in the Multan District had been made between the parties, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from selling the said factory on account and at the risk of the plaintiffs. On 24th June 1927 Messrs Dhanpal Mal-Bhagwan Das filed a suit in the Court of the Senior Sub-Judge at Multan for specific performance of a contract for the purchase of the aforesaid factory which Messrs Edulji Dinshaw were alleged to have entered into with them. The defendants in this latter case were summoned to appear at Multan on 2nd August 1927. On 1st August they presented in this Court an application under Ss. 22 and 23, Civil P. C., for "transfer" of the case pending at Multan to Karachi. When that application came up for hearing before me a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondents that the application was incompetent as no notice had been given by the petitioners to the respondents before moving this Court as required by S. 22. I upheld that objection and dismissed the application.

On 13th October 1927 Messrs. Edulji Dinshaw filed the present application also under Ss. 22 and 23, Civil P. C., stating that they had sent a notice to the defendants-respondents on 4th August 1927 giving intimation of their intention to move this Court for a transfer under Ss. 22 and 23, Civil P. C. It was pointed out that the defect which proved fatal to the previous application had been removed and that this application was now in proper form.

On the case coming up for hearing before me to-day Mr. Badri Das has raised four further preliminary objections. The first of these is that this application is also incompetent as it was filed about four months after the institution of the suit and had not been instituted "at the earliest opportunity" as required by S. 22. There is, however, no force in this objection. It is admitted by both the parties that no proceedings beyond the filing of a written statement have so far been taken in the Multan Court and issues have not been settled as yet. The notice sent on 4th August 1927 was therefore given at the proper time and thus application presented at the earliest possible "opportunity" and the requirements of S 22 have been complied with. I, therefore overrule this objection.

The second objection is that in the written statement which the defendants-petitioners had filed on 2nd August they had pleaded that the Court at Multan had no jurisdiction to try the suit, which was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Karachi Court. Mr. Badri Das contends that in face of this plea the present application under S. 22 is incompetent as that section is applicable only where it is admitted that the Court in which the suit had been filed and the Court to which it is sought to be transferred, should both have concurrent jurisdiction to try it. It appears from the record, however, that on the 18th August 1927 the defendants filed a written application before the Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, withdrawing this objection and admitting that the Multan Court had jurisdiction In view of this admission which has been repeated by Mr. Ralli in this Court, this preliminary objection also fails and is accordingly overruled.

Mr. Badri Das next objects that Ss. 22 and 23 are inapplicable as the Court of the Judicial Commissioner at Karachi is not a Court subordinate to a High Court, but tries cases on the original side and as the suit, if transferred to Karachi, would be triable by that Court on the original side, Cl. (3) of S. 23 is inapplicable.

In support of his contention the learned counsel has relied on a Single Bench judgment of Campbell, J. in Pragji Soorji & Co. v. Kalu Mal Shori Mal & Co. (1). As at present advised, I am not prepared to accept the view expressed in that ruling as sound and would, with respect, prefer to follow the contrary opinion taken by the Rangoon High Court in Ramanathan Chetty v. Ramanathan Chetty (A. I. R. 1923 Rangoon 22) as correct. I do not, however, think it necessary to deal with this matter at length as I am of opinion that this application for "transfer" must fail on the merits.

For the same reason, it is not necessary to finally decide the last preliminary objection raised on behalf of the respondents that the Karachi Court would have no jurisdiction to try the present suit, for specific performance of a contract to sell immovable property situate at Multan, as such a suit is according to Diwan Lachhman Das v. W. Haslat (2) exclusively cognizable by the Multan Court. The learned counsel on both sides have cited a number of authorities in which apparently contrary views have been held in this point and if the decision of this application had turned exclusively upon this matter I would have referred it to a larger Bench to consider the soundness of the Chief Court decision in Lachhman Das v. Haslat (2).

On the merits, lengthy arguments have been addressed to me by both counsel. It is well settled that where the law allows a person to institute a suit in two different Courts it is the plaintiff who is the arbiter litis. It is he who has the right to choose his forum and his choice will not be interfered with by Courts except where special circumstances are proved to exist: see Shiv Prasad v. Kanhaya Shah Ruchi Shah (3), Askaran

(2) [1891] 39 P. R. 1891.
(3) [1919] 167 P. R. 1919=54 I. C. 935.

Baid v. Bhola Nath (4) and Mt. Ram Kaur v. Atmar Singh (5). Mr. Ralli relies on the following special circumstances justifying transfer in this case:

(a) that the correspondence relating to the alleged contract was conducted at Karachi,

(b) that the evidence which is to be produced in the case will be exclusively from Karachi,

(c) that both parties reside at Karachi, and

(d) that the defendants' suit having been first instituted at Karachi, it is in the interests of justice to have a decision of the disputed points at Karachi. The respondents do not, however, admit (b) and (c) as correct. In their affidavit they deny that the reside at Karachi. They state that they do not now carry on any business at Karachi and that they had given up residence there long before the suit was filed. They also controvert the allegation that all the evidence will be from Karachi. They allege that some of the negotiations took place at Mian Channu and that several of ohe witnesses to be produced reside in the Punjab. I must, therefore, reject (b) and (c) as unproved. The remaining grounds (a) and (d) are in my opinion insufficient to justify the transfer. A departure from the ordinary rule will not be justified merely because the correspondence was conducted at Karachi or that some of the witness will come from Karachi or again that it will be much more convenient for the defendants-petitioners to have the case tried at Karachi. Moreover there is the important fact to be noticed that the property which is the subject matter of this litigation is situate at Mian Channu in the Multan District. Mr Ralli for the petitioner has cited two single Bench decisions of this Court reported as Ramji Das v. Brijlal-Jagannath (6) and Benarsi Das v. Kishori Lal (7). But the facts of those cases were wholly different and I do not find that the exceptional circumstances on which the decision rested in each of these cases exist here. For the foregoing reasons, I dismiss the petition with costs. The records will be reurned to the lower Court with as little delay as possible.

Ghasi and others—Accused—Respdts.

Criminal Revn. No. 1268 of 1927, Decided on 7th October 1927, reported by the Dist. Mag.Gurgaon, on 25th July 1927.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Revision—Wrong acquittal—Order of acquittal cannot be interfered with.

A Court of Revision does not ordinarily interfere with an order of acquittal though it be wrong. [P 186 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 233—Offences of mischief and riot tried together—Trial is bad.

In a case where the act of mischief is quite a separate transaction from that of riot, and the same persons are not accused in both the transactions, the trial is bad for misjoindor of charges. [P 186 C 1]

Facts.—The accused were challaned by the Sub-Inspector of Police under Ss. 429, 147 and 325 I. P. C. The facts are that a cow owned by the complainant trespassed into his field of jowar. Accused 1, Ghasi, killed her by giving her several blows. Net Ram, shepherd, informed the complainant of it who, accompanied by his brother Lachi Ram and his father Tika Ram, repaired to the place of occurrence and found the cow dead. Later on they were beaten by the accused very mercilessly when they complained to the accused about the killing of the cow.

Grounds.—The questions are whether there is sufficient cause to report the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., or to move Government to appeal against the acquittal of Ghasi, accused 1, on the charge of mischief for killing the cow, and whether application should be made for enhancement of sentence for the beating of Babu Mal and Lachhi Ram. The facts are clear and fully proved.

Ghasi, in a fit of rage killed a cow which trespassed into his field. The owners, Babu Mal and Lachhi Ram, apparently set about Ghasi and Tundlla and inflicted some slight injuries. Ghasi's party then fell upon Babu Mal and Lachhi Ram and Babu Ram received five injuries and Lachhi Ram eleven (two head injuries and one neck injury). The lower Court finds that the brutal killing of a cow is not mischief because it is done by a Hindu who cannot intend the death of a cow. This is most mischievous nonsense. Intention is no part of the ingredients of mischief and the idea that all Hindus are perfect followers of their faith is an absurd contention. As for the subsequent assault : the owners of the cow fell upon the brutal perpetrator of this gratuitous act of cruelty and this the lower Court finds only the natural thing for them to do. They did not beat the accused much and it is obvious that no right of self-defence arose that could justify the subsequent trouncing which the five convicted persons gave to the owners of the cow. As a matter of fact the two men who were beaten by the owners of the cow have been acquitted and only their friends have been convicted so that the question of self-defence does not arise. They came up afterwards to avenge the injuries of their kinsmen. The lower Court, after convicting five persons under S. 147/323 released them under S. 562, Criminal P. C.

The net result is, therefore, that the man who beat a cow to death goes scot-free and his friends who gave a sound beating to the owners of the cow are bound down under S. 562, Criminal P. C. This sort of thing will only encourage crime and cruelty.

The file of the case is, therefore, forwarded to the High Court with the request that the order of the lower Court be set aside and a re-trial of the case be ordered.

Order.—The reasons given by the District Magistrate for recommending a re-trial of the case are not sound and cannot be accepted. If an accused has been wrongly acquitted the order of acquittal can be set aside on an appeal by the Local Government under S. 417, Criminal P. C. The Court of revision does not ordinarily interfere with an order of acquittal.

There is, however, a legal defect in the trial of the case which has not been noticed by the District Magistrate. It appears that the offence of mischief was quite a separate transaction from that of riot, and, as the same persons were not accused in both the transactions, the trial was bad for misjoinder of charges.

I accordingly quash the proceedings and direct that the two offences shall be tried separately.

Criminal Revn, Petn. No. 1005 of 1927, Decided on 16th January 1928, from order of Sess. J. Amritsar, D/- 29th April 1927.

Penal Code, S. 482—Infringement of trade-mark— Aggrieved party has remedy both in civil and criminal Courts and not only in Civil—Trade-mark.

It is nowhere laid down by the legislature that under no circumstances could a dispute relating to the infringement of a trade-mark be entertained by a criminal Court and that it should always be adjudicated upon by a civil Court. The only thing which can be said is that the criminal Court may, in view of the peculiar circumstances of a particular case, stay its own hands and direct the complainant to establish his right in civil Court ; 32 Cal. 431: Ref. to. [P 187 C 2]

Kishan Dial—for Petitioners.

Sardha Ram—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—This is an application for revision preferred by two persons Banarsi Das and Prabhu Dial, proprietors of the firm Banarsi Prabhu Dial, Sutwala, who have been found guilty of having committed the offence of using a false trade mark, and have each been sentenced under S. 482, I. P. C., to pay a fine of Rs. 100. The complainant, Hans Raj, is a manufacturer and seller of cotton thread balls and has, since 1917, been using the mark DL as his trade-mark. The Court below found that he had by user acquired the exclusive right of using that mark for the purpose of denoting his goods. It appears that the mark has also been duly registered as his trade-mark, though registration is not necessary in order to complete his title to the trade-mark.

The accused lately began to manufacture cotton thread balls, and have been attaching the mark DL to their goods. Now the trial Magistrate, as well as the Sessions Judge, holds that the mark and the "get up" of the label used by the accused resemble very closely those used by the complainant to denote his goods, and that they are calculated to deceive the purchasers of the goods, upon which they are placed, into a belief that the goods he is buying are the goods of the owner of the first trade-mark.

We have listened to the arguments advanced by learned counsel on both sides

L. N. Dar
Advocate High Court
Jammu & Kashmir

and have reached the conclusion that the mark and the label placed by the accused upon their goods have the effect of inducing the ordinary purchaser to buy their goods in the belief that they are the goods of the complainant. The learned counsel for the accused contends that a letter or a combination of letters cannot constitute a trade mark, but there is no warrant for this broad proposition. There are no doubt English cases in which the Courts have refused to interfere with the discretion of the Registrar, who declined to register marks consisting of letters, on the ground that the registration of such marks would interfere with the right of existing or future firms having those letters as their initials to attach the initials of their firm names to goods. No such mischief can be apprehended in the present case. The trade-mark of the complainant has been used to denote his goods and it is obvious that the letters DL are not the initials of the firm of the accused. There can be little doubt that these letters have been placed by the accused upon their goods simply because they bore a close resemblance to the complainant's trade-mark.

Mr. Kishan Dial for the accused also urges that the dispute between the parties can be appropriately decided by civil Courts, and that the complainant should be allowed to have recourse to criminal Courts. In support of his contention the learned counsel place his reliance upon the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Dowlat Ram v. Emperor (1), where Maclean, C. J., made the following observations :

> It seems to me that when a case of this class is brought into a criminal Court, if the Magistrate is of opinion that there is bona fide dispute as to whether the complainant has any trade-mark at all or whether the accused is or is not eniitled to use the mark he is using, I say if the Magistrate is satisfied that there is this bona fide dispute he should not deal with the matter as a criminal matter, but leave to the complainant to maintain, if he can, in a Civil Court the right which he claim. If after the decision of the civil Court it be found that he has a trade-mark and that the accused is fraudulently counterfeiting that trade-mark the case could be then properly brought into a criminal Court under the section to which I have referred.

Now, there can be no doubt that a person aggrieved by the infringement of his trade-mark has two remedies open to him: (1) he can institute criminal proceedings under the Indian Penal Code or (2); he can bring an action for an injunction and damages. It is nowhere laid down by the legislature that an aggrieved person should seek his remedy in a civil Court and not in a criminal Court. The only thing which can be said is that the criminal Court may, in view of the peculiar circumstances of a particular case, stay its own hand and direct the complainant to establish his right in a civil Court. It is neither possible nor desirable to give a list of the circumstances which might justify this course or to crystallize the discretion of the Court into a hard and fast rule. The existence of a bona fide dispute as to the right to use a trade mark may, as held in Dowlat Ram case (1) constitute a sufficient reason for a criminal Court declining to deal with it as a criminal matter. Or, if there has been undue delay in commencing criminal proceedings, the Court may direct the aggrieved party to establish his right in a civil Court. There may be other cases in which the dispute may be regarded to be a fit one for trial by a civil Court. It would be, however, absurd to suggest that under no circumstances could a dispute relating to the infringement of a trade-mark be entertained by a criminal Court and that it should always be adjudicated upon by a civil Court. This contention, if accepted, would render the law enacted by the Indian Penal Code nugatory.

The case before us is a simple one, and no circumstance has been shown which would warrant our interference with the right of the complainant to invoke the aid of the criminal Courts. Indeed, the Courts below have not only entertained the complaint but pronounced their verdict in favour of the complainant, and I am unable to discover any valid reason to justify interference by a Court of revision.

I accordingly dismiss the application.

Criminal Revn. No. 114 of 1927, Decided on 14th March 1927.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 133—Obstructions by several persons—Magistrate's order not specifying obstructions raised by each person, nor stating that obstructions were raised jointly by all—Order is bad.

When, in proceedings under S. 133 instituted against a number of persons, it is alleged that various unlawful obstructions have been caused upon a public way, but it is not alleged that all the persons had jointly raised those obstructions, it is essential that the order should state accurately, with regard to each person, the specific obstructions made by him which he is required to remove : 44 Cal. 61, Foll.[P 188 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 138—Jury of two nominees of the parties and the foreman appointed by Magistrate is not legally constituted.

When the Magistrate appoints only the nominees of the two parties, with a foreman appointed by himself, the jury is not constituted legally and is incapable of making a legally binding award : 23 Cal. 499, Foll. [P 188 C 2]

Facts.—An application was made by some persons under S. 133, Criminal P. C., for removal of certain obstructions by certain persons. An initial order was recorded in the case by the Magistrate and the jury was appointed, but their verdict was not acceptable to either party. Later on the Magistrate passed an order that the case be sent back to the jurors for recording the evidence of the parties which they had not done before and filing a fresh award. But, on the next day he recorded a statement of the foreman of the jury that all the obstructions in the shamilat land should be removed and then passed an order. It is against this order of the Magistrate that the present application for revision has been filed.

Grounds.—The initial order of the Magistrate does not specify what are the obstructions raised by each one of the accused. I am very doubtful if a single proceeding could have been taken agsinst all the 16 persons because the obstruction raised by each was his own affair and the others had nothing to do with it. So I think that each person should have been separately proceeded against. But even if the single proceeding against all the 16 persons be held valid, the initial order of the Magistrate should have specified what was the nature and the extent of the obstruction raised by each person. In Raimohan Karmokar v. Emperor (1) it was held that an order issued under S. 133, should not be vague and indefinite but must be such that the persons to whom it is directed may be able to learn from its terms what it is that they are to do for the purpose of complying with it and that when in proceedings under S. 133 instituted against a number of persons it is alleged that various unlawful obstructions have been caused upon a public way, it is essential that the order should state accurately with regard to each person the specific obstructions made by him which he is required to remove unless it is alleged that all the persons are jointly responsible for all the obstructions mentioned.

That the jury was not legally constituted, firstly : because there was no application by the accused, as required by Ss 133 and 138 for the appointment of jury ; secondly, the Magistrate's order of 29th May shows that he appointed two of the nominees of the one party and two of the other and foreman himself. S. 138 lays down that the foreman and half of the remaining members shall be nominated by the Magistrate and Upendra Nath v. Kritish Chandra (2) shows that when the Magistrate appoints only the nominees of the two parties, with a foreman appointed by himself, the jury is not constituted legally and is incapable of making a legally binding award.

It is recommended, therefore, that the order of the Magistrate may be set aside.

Order.—Proceedings under S. 133, Criminal P. C., have been forwarded by the learned Sessions Judge of Karnal for revision to this Court on the ground that the order of the Magistrate does not specify what are the obstructions raised by each of the accused. I do not find on the record any allegation that all the persons had jointly raised these obstructions or that they had raised them in conspiracy with each other. I, therefore, consider that the order was bad in form. I also hold as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge that the jury was not legally constituted in that the Magistrate seems to have appointed the entire Jury himself instead of appointing the foreman and half the jury and leaving the other half to be nominated by the parties. I, therefore, accept the revision and set aside the order of the learned Magistrate.

Shaukat Rai—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—Proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., were instituted against Mangal Singh, petitioner in the Court of Khan Sahib Gul Muhammad Khan, Magistrate 1st Class, Lahore. The learned Magistrate held the enquiry and found that the acts of the petitioner fell within the purview of S. 110. He accordingly ordered the petitioner to furnish security in the sum of Rs. 5,000 with two sureties to be jointly and severally liable, and to execute recognizance in the like amount to be of good behaviour for a period of three years. The learned Magistrate at the end of his order directed that on failure of the petitioner to furnish security as stated above he "shall undergo three years" rigorous imprisonment. This order was followed by another order of the same date recorded at 4 p. m. stating that the security had not been furnished and that the record be sent to the Sessions Judge for proper orders as required by S. 123 and that the petitioner be sent to jail by means of a warrant of imprisonment in default of his furnishing security.

On 7th August Mr. Hakumat Rai counsel for the petitioner presented an application in the Sessions Court praying that (a) the petitioner be released on bail and (b) arguments be heard before the case is decided. On 13th August 1926, he filed another application in the Sessions Court repeating the prayer that bail be allowed and that counsel may be heard on evidence and the order of the learned Magistrate set aside or the amount of security reduced.

Both these applications were laid before Colonel Nicolas, Sessions Judge, on 13th August 1926. He refused the prayer for bail, but passed no order on the merits.

On 16th August 1926 two persons Labh Singh and Mohan Singh appeared before the Magistrate and agreed to furnish the required security. Their surety bonds were accepted and the petitioner released on bail. A report to this effect was submitted to the Sessions Judge on 21st August. On record being laid before Lala Topan Ram, Sessions Judge, he directed notice to issue to the petitioner and to the District Magistrate presumably with a view to examine the evidence and hear counsel, but curiously enough no date was fixed on which the petitioner or his counsel was to appear. In the order passed on that date there is a blank, where the date on which the case was to come up for hearing was to be filled, but it seems the matter was overlooked and no date actually fixed, nor does it appear that any notice was sent to the petitioner or his counsel.

On 25th August 1926 the learned Sessions Judge ordered that an explanation be called for from the Magistrate as to why he had released the petitioner on bail after a reference under S. 123 had been made to the Sessions Court, and when that Court was seised of the case. On 4th September 1926 the Magistrate replied that as the petitioner was in jail, and the sure ties appeared before him on 16th August 1926 he thought it proper to accept their surety bonds and to release the petitioner.

This explanation of the Magistrate was laid before the Sessions Judge on 10th September 1926, which was not on the date fixed for the hearing of the case, and on which the petitioner or his counsel were not present. On this day the learned Sessions Judge passed the following order:

> The explanation is not satisfactory and the Magistrate's order in accepting the bail was not in accordance with the procedure. But as the bail has been furnished the order demanding security is confirmed.

It is obvious that at the time of passing this order the learned Sessions Judge did not examine the evidence nor did he record any finding of his own on the merits of the case. He simply confirmed the order of the Magistrate demanding security on the simple ground that " bail had been furnished."

In the meantime on 4th September 1926, the petitioner preferred an appeal to the District Magistrate, Lahore, against the original order of the trial Magistrate dated 6th August 1926, ordering him to furnish security under S. 110. This appeal came up for hearing before Mr. Ogilvie, District Magistrate, Lahore, on 25th October 1926, and he held that as the Sessions Judge had already confirmed the Magistrate's order on 10th September 1926 no appeal lay to him

The petitioner has preferred a petition for revision to this Court and he attacks the order of Lala Topan Ram, Sessions Judge, dated 10th September 1926, confirming the order of the Magistrate demanding security and also the order of the District Magistrate dated 25th October 1926, holding that no appeal lay to his Court.

To begin with, it must be held that the learned trial Magistrate was in error in directing in his order dated 6th August 1926, that in default of the petitioner furnishing the security demanded, he was to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years. Under S. 118, Criminal P. C., the Magistrate is empowered to make an order requiring the accused to execute a bond with or without sureties to maintain good behaviour for such period as he thinks fit to fix. If the period for which security is demanded exceeds one year, then the Magistrate is required by S. 123 (2) to submit the record to the Sessions Judge, and it is for the Sessions Judge after examining the record to pass such orders as he thinks fit. It is now well settled that in such cases the order fixing the term of imprisonment which the accused is to undergo on default of furnishing security is to be fixed by the Sessions Judge and not by the trial Magistrate: see Nanku v. Emperor (1), and the two Allahabad leading cases Queen Empress v. Jafar (2) and Emperor v. Jawahir (3). This part of the order passed by the learned Magistrate was wholly without jurisdiction.

Again, after the Magistrate had submitted the record to the Sessions Court under S. 123 (2) the seisin of the case was thenceforward with that Court and the petitioner could be released on bail by that Court alone. The Magistrate had no jurisdiction to accept bail and release the petitioner. This was the second irregularity committed by the Magistrate. The explanation sent by him to the Sessions Judge was obviously insufficient.

The irregularities committed in the case, however, did not end here. When the case came up before the learned Sessions Judge it was his duty to issue notice to the petitioner and after hearing him or his counsel and examining the record to come to an independent finding on the merits as to whether the order furnishing security was, or was not justified and if so, for what period and in what sum, security was to be demanded. As pointed out above the learned Sessions Judge originally intended to summon the petitioner and give him an opportunity of being heard, but for some reason or other he seems to have overlooked this and confirmed the Magistrate's order demanding security, without affording the petitioner or his counsel any opportunity of being heard. It is hardly necessary to emphasize that that this procedure was irregular, and wholly unjustifiable more especially when Mr. Hakumat Rai, counsel for the petitioner, had already filed two applications specifically requesting that he may be afforded an opportunity of being heard. Again the learned Sessions Judge was bound to examine the evidence himself and come to an independent finding as to the propriety of the order demanding security and the period for, and amount in which it was to be demanded: Crown v. Ida (4) and Emperor v. Girand (5). The order passed by the learned Sessions Judge on 10th September 1926, merely confirming the order passed by the trial Magistrate without notice to the petitioner and without examining the record is irregular and must be set aside: Emperor v. Amir Bala (6) and Bahadur v. Emperor (7).

Duni Chand—for Petitioner.

Muhammad Rafi for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Kundha Singh, a Jat of the Ferozepore District, has been convicted under S 61 (1) (A), Excise Act, of being in possession of 10 chhitaks of illicit liquor and 9¼ seers of lahan. His appeal has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge and his revision is before me. I am not impressed in any way by any of the points urged by counsel, nor by any of the grounds entered in the petition. I am of opinion that the Sessions Judge has rightly held that these articles were found in the possession of the accused.

As regards the liquor, however, a point arises which I have raised myself and which is in my opinion of considerable importance, namely, whether it is or is not shown to be illicit. The report of the Chemical Examiner is as follows :

> The contents of the exhibit are, by analysis, pot-still spirit essentially different from the refined licit patent-still spirit as sent under the advice of your letter No. 474 Ex., dated 12th July 1926. The suspected liquor, however, is not definitely distinguishable from the refined pot-still spirits made at the Karnal Distillery. Hence in my opinion the suspected liquor is of illicit origin, supposing that Karnal Distillery spirits have no possible access to the place of seizure. The alcoholic strength is 40·2 per cent proof.

In other words, as an expert, all that the Chemical Examiner can say is that the liquor in question is either pot-still of the Karnal Distillery or illicit liquor. Speaking as an ordinary rational man and not as an expert, he adds that the natural conclusion that, if Karnal Distillery can be excluded on it being shown that liquor therefrom had no access to the Ferozepore District, it follows that the liquor is illicit. The Sessions Judge merely recites that the liquor was illicit, for the point was not urged before him. The trial Court disposes of the question by saying that the liquor was sent to Chemical Examiner, "who has certified that it is of illicit origin." The Chemical Examiner says nothing of the sort as I have explained above. It was, therefore, necessary that the Crown should show that in the ordinary way of business liquor from the Karnal Distillery does not find its way into the Ferozepore District and probably, when the comparative distances of the rival distilleries of Karnal and Amritsar from Ferozepore are remembered, it would have been easy enough to do so. Until and unless, the Crown had shown that the liquor, on which this open verdict has been returned, could not in the ordinary way of business have come from the Karnal Distillery, the onus did not shift on to the accused of showing that that was where he got it from. Had the Crown produced such evidence the onus would doubtless have shifted. A second method of showing that liquor is illicit is that of proving the strength and showing that it is above that at which liquor is issued from an authorized distillery. In this case we find that the strength of the liquor was extremely low, being only 40 per cent of proof or 60 per cent below proof. The strength at which liquor is issued from the distilleries as explained in Art. 588 of the Punjab Excise Manual is 80 per cent of proof and 20 per cent below proof. This test, therefore, is of no value. I am not prepared to hold that the liquor is illicit, and I should like to point out that in similar cases it is most desirable that evidence such as I have described above should be led on the subject and that it would be quite enough to show that ordinarily the Karnal Distillery which, I understand, distils the whole of the pot-still licit liquor to be found in the Punjab, does not ordinarily send that liquor to the district in question.'

Had the only article found in possession of the accused been this liquor I should have accepted the application and acquitted him. He was, however, found to be in possession of 9¼ seers of lahan. "Lahan" has been declared by Notification No. P. G. N. 25, dated 5th January 1915, to be liquor, and just as liquor cannot be strengthened, so it cannot be dissolved, into its component parts and there can be no such thing as licit lahan, this being the term used for describing the material while in the process of manufacture. I find therefore that in virtue of the lahan the guilt of the accused is established.

In addition to six months' rigorous imprisonment the accused was ordered to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in the alternative to undergo three months further rigorous imprisonment. The amount of lahan fonnd in his possession was not great and as no implements of distilling were discovered he presumably was not conducting these operations on a big scale. I think under the circumstances, and taking into account the fact that he has been sentenced to pay a substantial fine in addition to imprisonment, the amount of imprisonment already undergone together with the fine may be treated as sufficient punishment. Except for this reduction of sentence I dismiss the application for revision.

First Appeal No. 2819 of 1926, Decided on 10th November 1927.

Civil P. C .O. 34 R. 2—Interest—Recovery of money on basis of mortgage deed—Interest from date of institution of suit to the date of payment—Rate of interest not penal—Interest should be allowed.

In a suit for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of a mortgage deed Court is bound to award to the mortgagee interest on the principal from the date of the suit upto the date fixed by the Court for payment of the mortgage debt at the rate stipulated in the mortgage deed, unless the rate is penal or the rate is excessive and the transaction is substantially unfair. [P 192 C 2]

Anant Ram Khosla—for Appellants.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of a certain sum of money on the basis of a mortgage deed : and the question for determination is whether the trial Judge was justified in disallowing interest from the date of institution of the suit to the date of payment. As pointed out in Mulla's Commentary on the Civil Proccdure Code, at p. 160, the Court is bound to award to the mortgagee interest on the principal from the date of the suit up to the date fixed by the Court for payment of the mortgage debt, at the rate stipulated in the mortgage-deed, unless the rate is penal or the rate is excessive and the transaction is substantially unfair. It is not suggested that interest at 12 per cent. per annum can be regarded as penal or that the transaction embodied in the mortgage-deed was unfair. The trial Judge has acted in an arbitrary manner, and the appeal of the mortgagee must succeed.

We according allow the appeal and direct the defendant to pay interest on Rs. 7,070 at 12 per cent. per annum, from the date of the institution of the suit up to the date on which the money was paid by him to the mortgagee. The sum thus calculated, together with the costs of the appeal shall be paid on or before 1st February 1928. A decree in accordance with the terms of O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C., shall be drawn. The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal.'

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 737 of 1927, Decided on 9th December 1927, from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Rawalpindi, D/- 15th June 1927.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 133— "Accomplice", meaning of — Distinction between accomplice and informer explained.

If, at the time when a person joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police. [P 195 C 1]

A person was present when the plans for committing a dacoity were hatched and had agreed to go to the meeting place in the evening armed with a revolver. He returned soon after and remained there for more than six hours but during this period he took no steps whatever either to inform the police or his master that a dacoity was contemplated. He then actually proceeded to a spot near the house where the dacoity was to be committed and took part in the preparations for committing the offence. It was only after it had been decided to postpone the dacoity till the moon had gone down and he had been sent to the town to bring food for two of the offenders that he for the first time disclosed the whole affair :

Held : that in view of these facts the person cannot but be regarded as an accomplice and his evidence needs corroboration in material particulars against each convict. [P 195 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 399—Mere assembling is not preparation, but collecting arms, etc., and proceeding to the place of offence is.

The mere "assemblage" to commit dacoity does not amount to "preparation" within the meaning of S. 399, Penal Code ; but where the members of the gang take into their possession instruments of house-breaking and arms for the purpose of offence and defence and actually proceed to a place near the scene of the contemplated dacoity, they are guilty of an offence under S. 399 : 6 P. R. 1916 Cr., Foll. [P 195 C 2]

(c) Arms Act (1878), Ss. 19 and 20 — In order to apply S. 20 indication of intention to conceal arms from public servant must be shown.

Each case of concealment of arms must be decided on its own facts as to whether it falls under S. 19 or S. 20, Arms Act, but for S. 20 to apply there must be some special indication of an intention to conceal the possession of the arms from a public servant, railway official or public career : 8. *P. Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of criminal appeals Nos. 737, 738, 856, 857, 945 and 1080 of 1927, which are directed against the judgment of the Magistrate 1st Class (with enhanced powers) Rawalpindi, convicting Karim Bakhsh, Mir Zaman, Gheba, Bagga and Fazal Karim, appellants, of an offence under S. 399, I. P. C., for having made preparations to commit a dacoity and sentencing each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for seven years, and also against the judgment of the same Magistrate convicting Karim Bakhsh in a separate trial under S. 20, Arms Act, and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, the sentence to run consecutively with that passed against him under S. 399, I. P. C.

The principal witness against the appellants in the case under S. 399 is Muhammad Jan (P. W. 1), a domestic servant of one Mirza Kale Khan, Inamkhor of mauza Kalanjar, residing in Rawalpindi city. The story told by him is that the appellants Mir Zaman, Karim Bakhsh and Bagga lived in the same mohalla as his employer and that he had known them for a considerable time. On the 7th May 1927, he went to the house of Mir Zaman and found Karim Bakhsh and Bagga there. In the course of conversation Bagga informed the party that one Bawa Ganga Ram, who lived in the Hindu cremation ground happened to possess currency notes worth Rs. 900 besides cash and other moveable property and that a dacoity might be committed in his house. After consultation it was decided to commit the dacoity at the Bawa's house on the following night and during the course of conversation it transpired that Fazal Karim and Gheba appellants and Aulia Muhammad Zaman (absconders) had also agreed to join the commission of the dacoity. It was agreed that the party would meet at the underground near the fort at about 8 p. m. and that Karim Bakhsh and Fazal Karim would bring pistols. The witness Muhammad Jan was also asked to bring, if possible a pistol with him.

After the plan had been settled Muhammad Jan returned to the house of his employer and at about 8 p. m. on receiving information from Mir Zaman, he left for the meeting place, but without a pistol as his master had kept it under lock and key. Bagga, Karim Bakhsh, Mir Zaman and Muhammad Jan arrived at the meeting ground and went into the depression. About half an hour later Gheba, Fazal Karim, Aulia and Muhammad Zaman also arrived there. Fazal Karim was armed with a spear (Ex. P. 1) and a revolver. Mir Zaman and Gheba had lathis (Exs. P. 4 and P. 5), while Karim Bakhsh had also with him an iron rod (sambal, Ex. P. 6). After consultation it was decided to commit the dacoity after the moon had gone down. As Fazal Karim and Gheba had not taken their food it was found necessary to send for it from the town. The witness Muhammad Jan was accordingly sent to bring it. He, however, went straight to his employer Kale Khan and told him that a dacoity was going to be committed in which murders might also take place. Kale Khan took the witness to the thana and there he related the whole story to Mir Afzal Khan, Sub-Inspector (P. W. 3), and Chaudhri Buta Ram, Deputy Superintendent of Police (P. W. 2), who recorded his statement Ex. P. A. It was arranged with the police that Muhammad Jan should go back to the spot with the food and some cigarettes and that the police would follow and would surround the locality where the conspirators had assembled, and that when Muhammad Jan would light a cigarette or cough, the police would fall upon the party.

Accordingly Muhammad Jan returned to the meeting place near the fort with food and cigarettes and the police arrived there at about 11 p. m. A short time after he lighted a cigarette and the police at once challenged, whereupon the conspirators readily took to their heels. The police opened fire wounding Fazal Karim appellant. Karim Bakhsh, who had a pistol, replied by firing two shots. Fazal Karim, Mir Zaman and Gheba were arrested on the spot while Karim Bakhsh, Bagga, Muhammad Zaman and Aulia ran away leaving two lathis (Exs. P. 4 and P. 5), a spear (Ex. P. 1) and a sambal (Ex. P. 6) which the police took into possession. The next morning four discharged cartridges were recovered by the police on the spot. Karim Bakhsh voluntarily surrendered himself on the 8th and Bagga was arrested on the 10th from the house of one Ghulam Hussain. In consequence of information supplied by Karim Bakhsh a revolver was recovered from a trunk which was found in the house of his brother-in-law, Hayat Bakhsh (P. W. 9), the key of which was supplied by Karim Bakhsh's wife.

Bagga, appellant, took the police to the meeting place near the fort on the 13th and a spear (Ex. P. 2) was recovered from the bushes.

In addition to (P. W. 1) Muhammad Jan the prosecution examined several witnesses. (The judgment then discussed other evidence and proceeded). Of the appellants Karim Bakhsh and Bagga pleaded alibi alleging that they were in certain villages near Chaklala, while Fazal Karim admitted that he was in the depression near the fort on the night in question and was wounded with a revolver shot, but stated that he was going to Kalanjar on an errand on behalf of Mirza Kale Khan when the police with Muhammad Jan met him and on Muhammad Jan pointing out opened fire and arrested them. Gheba's defence was practically the same as that of Fazal Karim. Mir Zaman denied having been arrested on the spot.

On appeal the first point urged by Mr. Muhammad Tufail for Karim Bakhsh is that the principal witness Muhammad Jan (P. W. 1) is an accomplice and according to the well-established rule of practice his evidence ought not to be accepted without corroboration. He contends that the lower Court has erred in treating him as an informer and in holding that no corroboration is necessary. The learned counsel in support of his contention has relied on a ruling of the Bombay High Court reported as Queen-Empress v. Javacharam (1). This ruling was however, dissented from in Emperor v Chaturbhuj Sahu (2). In criminal cases the distinction between an informer and an accomplice assumes at times considerable importance and there are certain well-established principles which ought to be taken into consideration in determining whether a person is an accomplice or an informer.

(1) [1895] 19 Bom. 363.
(2) [1911] 33 Cal. 96 = 8 I. C. 119 = 15 C. W. N. 171.

The distinction is clearly brought out by Wigmore in his well-known work on Evidence, S. 2060, the following passage :

When the witness has made himself an agent for the prosecution before associating with the wrongdoers or before the actual perpetration of the offence, he is not an accomplice; but he may be, if he extends no aid to the prosecution until after the offence is committed. A mere detective or decoy is therefore not an accomplice; nor an original confederate who betrays before the crime is committed, yet an accessory after the fact would be if he had before betrayal rendered himself liable as such.

In other words it has to be seen whether the witness had entered into the conspiracy for the sole purpose of detecting and betraying it or whether he is a person who concurred fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joined in the execution of those designs till either out of fear or for some other reason he turned on his former associates and gave information to the police. If at the time when he joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book, but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice, and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police. The test laid down by Wigmore is also in accord with the observations of Maule, J., in his charge to the jury in the celebrated case Reg v. Mullins (3) and of Erle, J., in Reg v. Dowling (4).

It should be borne in mind that in this case the appellants were being tried for an offence under S. 399, I. P. C., viz., making preparations for the commission of a dacoity, and it is admitted by the appellants' learned counsel that if the facts as alleged by the prosecution be accepted as correct this offence was complete long before the witness Muhammad Jan (P. W. 1) gave information to the police. According to his own statement he was present at the house of Mir Zaman at 12 noon when the plans for committing the dacoity were hatched and had agreed to go to the meeting place in the evening armed with a revolver. He returned to his master's house soon after and remained there for more than six hours, but during this period he took no steps whatever either to inform the police or his master that a dacoity was contemplated. He then actually proceeded to a spot near the house where the dacoity was to be committed and took part in the preparations for committing the offence. It was only after it had been decided to postpone the dacoity till the moon had gone down and he had been sent to the town to bring food for two of the offenders that he for the first time disclosed the whole affair to his master who took him to the police where he made the report Ex. P A.

I have no doubt that in view of these facts Muhammad Jan cannot but be regarded as an accomplice and his evidence needs corroboration in material particulars against each appellant. (The judgment then discussed the evidence as to corroboration which was found to exist, and proceeded). Both Mr. Muhammad Tufail for Karim Bakhsh and Mr. Aziz Ahmad for Fazl Karim have contended that the evidence for the prosecution even if accepted, discloses an offence under S. 402 and not one under S. 399. I am, however, of opinion that this contention is devoid of all force. As held in Karmun v. Crown (5) the mere "assemblage" to commit dacoity does not amount to "preparation" within the meaning of S. 399, Penal Code, but where (as here) the members of the gang had taken into their possession instruments of housebreaking and arms for the purpose of offence and defence and had actually proceeded to a place near the scene of the contemplated dacoity they are guilty of an offence under S. 399.

I hold, therefore, that all the five appellants have been rightly convicted under S. 399, I. P. C. The sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment is by no means severe, in view of the fact that the appellants were armed with revolvers, spears and lathis, and, had not the police arrived on the spot on information given by Muhammad Jan the consequences would have been very serious indeed. I therefore, dismiss appeals Nos. 737, 856, 857, 945 and 1080 of 1927.

It now remains to deal with appeal No. 738 of 1927, preferred by Karim Bakhsh against his conviction under S. 20, Arms Act. Mr. Muhammad Tufail for the appellant has made a faint-hearted attempt to argue that it has not been proved that the revolver in question was recovered from the possession of the appellant and that it was he, who had concealed it. Having regard, however, to the evidence given by Karim Bakhsh's brother-in-law Hayat Bakhsh and of the police officers before whom the revolver was recovered, I have no doubt whatsoever that the learned Judge of the Court below came to a correct conclusion that after Karim Bakhsh had escaped from the place where he and his fellow conspirators were in the depression near the fort, he put the revolver in a box and left it with his brother-in-law for safe custody. The possession in this case was, therefore, that of the appellant.

(3) [1849] 3 Cox's Cr. Cas. 526.
(4) [1849] 3 Cox's Cr. Cas. 509.

The next question to be considered is whether the offence falls under S. 19 or S. 20, Arms Act. Mr. Tufail has relied on the decision of Kensington, J., in Ibrahim v. Crown (6), where it was held that S. 20, Arms Act, applied only to cases where the import or export is attempted, and also on a remark of Scott Smith, J., in Chandan Singh v. Crown (7), where the former ruling seems to have been approved. The decisions as to the applicability of S. 20 are not uniform but the balance of authority is against the view taken by Kensington, J., in the ruling above cited. The question has been considered in a number of cases; Khem Singh v. Crown (8), Sher Ali v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 79), Ali Mohammad v. Crown (A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 434), and recently by Addison, J., in Chet Singh v. Crown (9), in which Mr. Justice Kensington's view was definitely dissented from. I venture to think that the law has been correctly laid down by Addison, J., in the case last mentioned, where he held that > each case of concealment of arms must be decided on its own facts as to whether it falls under S. 19 or S. 20, Arms Act, but for S. 20 to apply there must be some special indication of an intention to conceal the possession of the arms from a public servant, railway official or public career.

Applying this test to the present case I have no doubt whatsoever that the intention of the appellant in putting the revolver in the trunk, and keeping it in the house of his brother-in-law Hayat Bakhsh, was clearly to conceal the revolver from the police. I hold, therefore, that his offence fell under S. 20 and he has been rightly convicted.

I am of opinion, however, that the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment imposed on Karim Bakhsh appellant under S. 20, Arms Act, is too severe. I think the ends of justice will be met by reducing it to one of rigorous imprisonment for three years which will begin after the expiry of the sentence of seven years passed against him under S. 399, I. P. C. With this modification in the sentence the appeal is dismissed.

First Appeal No. 2105 of 1922, Decided on 13th May 1927, from decree of 1st Cl. Sub-J., Ludhiana, D/- 6th June 1922.

(a) Contract Act, Ss. 211 and 215—Agent joining secret combination to make personal profit—Agent is guilty of breach of duty.

An agent, while acting on behalf of the principal joining a combination of speculators and artificially inflating the rate and then settling on the basis of these rates, acts in flagrant breach of his duty to his principal : 41 All. 635 ; 34 Bom. 292 and A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 497, Foll. [P 200 C 1]

It is a necessary incident of the contract of agency that the agent stands in a fiduciary relation towards his principal. His position is one involving confidence, and in the discharge of his duties, he must act with the most perfect good faith towards his principal, and should not in any way abuse the confidence reposed in him. He is bound to use his best endeavours to promote the interests of the person who has employed him. He will not be permitted to enter into any transaction in which his personal interest conflicts with his duty towards his principal, except with the consent of the latter, given after all the material circumstances and the exact nature and extent of the interest of the agent have been fully disclosed to him. In law as well as in equity an agent for the sale of goods belonging to the principal cannot, while actually selling the property or making settlements for damages on foot of such transactions, make any secret profit for himself or for persons with whom he is associated. [P 199 C 1, 2]

(b) Contract Act, S. 223 — Agent settling with others against principal's order and even before due date—Agent cannot be reimbursed for settlement if made.

An agent, when ordered by his principal not to make any settlemsnt on his behalf makes settlements and that too even before the due date and behind the back of the principal, they cannot be binding on the principal and so the agent cannot be said to have been entitled to claim anything on account of any money that might have been paid by him to the purchasers making the settlements. Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Amar Nath Chona—for Appellant.

Gokal Chand Narang and Des Raj Narang—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are a firm of commission agents working at Ludhiana under the name and style of Mathra Das Jagan Nath and the defendants are the firm of Jiwan Mal Gian Chand of Gujranwala City. Early in 1919, the plaintiffs, acting under instructions from the defendants, entered into the following transactions with third parties for the sale of salt :

(a) Two wagons to be delivered in January 1919.

(b) Five wagons to be delivered in March 1919.

(c) Ten wagons to be delivered in April 1919 (Exs. P. 12, 21.)

(d) eight wagons to be delivered in May 1919 (Exs. P. 22, 29). Delivery was in each case to be made at Ludhiana.

As regards transactions (a) and (b) : a profit of Rs. 495-6-0 accrued to the defendants, which the plaintiffs admit is due by them and there is now no dispute between the parties as to this item. With regard to (c) and (d) : the plaintiffs allege that the defendants failed to make delivery on the due dates (30th April and 31st May respectively) and the plaintiffs, as the defendant's commission agents, were compelled to settle with the purchasers and had to pay Rs. 4,003-8-9 as losses in respect of (c) and Rs 1,351-15-0 in respect of (d). In addition to this, a sum of Rs. 51-2-9 was claimed as expenses incurred on telegrams, correspondence, etc., and Rs. 245-7-3 as plaintiffs' commission, making up a total of Rs. 5,652-1-9. Adding to this, the sum of Rs. 370-14-9, which, it was alleged, the defendants owed to the plaintiffs on certain prior transactions, which are not now in dispute, and deducting Rs. 495-6-0 on account of profits due to the defendants on (a) and (b) mentioned above, the plaintiffs claimed Rs. 5,527-10-6 as principal and Rs. 100-14-3 as interest due thereon, or a total of Rs. 5,628-8-9.

The defendants, while admitting that they had authorized the plaintiffs to enter into the transactions in question on their behalf, denied their liability for the sum claimed on various grounds, which it is not necessary to give here in detail. The main pleas taken were that the April and May delivery contracts had become impossible of performance as salt could not be sent from Khewra from April to June 1919 on account of the disturbances and the declaration of martial Law, that they had never instructed the plaintiffs to fix or pay any damages on account of these consignments, that the plaintiffs had not in fact paid anything to any of the purchasers, and that, in any case, the plaintiffs in setting up these transactions had acted dishonestly and to the detriment of the defendants and were not entitled to be reimbursed for any sums that they might have paid. The rates at which the plaintiffs had calculated the damages were not admitted as correct and it was alleged that really nothing was due to the plaintiffs, but that Rs. 162-10-3 was payable by the plaintiffs to them.

The trial Court found that salt was being received at Ludhiana in April and May 1919, and, therefore, the defendants' plea that the contracts had become incapable of performance could not be sustained. On the main question in dispute, it held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had made any settlements with regard to nine out of the ten wagons of April delivery and five out of eight of May delivery, but that the settlements with regard to the remaining four wagons (P. 15,. P. 22, P. 24 and P. 27) were genuine. After making allowance for certain minor items and going into the accounts the Court held that Rs. 562-15-3 was due to the plaintiffs, and for this sum a decree was passed in their favour against the defendants.

Against this judgment and decree the plaintiffs have preferred a first appeal to this Court praying that the decretal amount be enhanced to Rs. 5,628-8-9 as originally claimed ; and the defendants have filed cross-objections contending that the plaintiffs' suit should have been dismissed in its entirety.

Dr. Narang for the defendants-respondents has very properly conceded that he is unable to support the plea that the contract had become incapable of performance because of the declaration of martial Law and the consequent restrictions on transport of goods by the railway. The dispute, therefore, now centres round the statements alleged to have bean made by the plaintiffs with the purchasers and we have heard lengthy arguments on this point.

The main fact relating to the contracts of April delivery are these: The plaintiffs, acting as agents of the defendants, entered into agreements with third parties for supply of ten wagons of salt (Exs. P. 12-21). It is common ground that, the due date of delivery of these consignments was 30th April 1919. The contract rates for these wagons varied from Rs. 2-10-3 per maund to Rs. 2-15-6 per maund. The plaintiffs allege that on the defendants' failure to supply salt, they made settlements with the purchasers of these wagons or their respective assignees at rates varying from Rs. 3-7-0 to Rs. 4 per maund. They contend that the market rate prevailing on the due date was Rs. 4 per maund and that in most cases they settled at much lower rates, thus securing an advantage to the defendants. The defendants' case, on the other hand, is that the so-called settlements were bogus transactions, that, in any case, they were made not at the market rate at which salt was being actually sold at Ludhiana on the 30th April, but at a rate which had been artificially inflated by a ring of speculators one of whom was Jagan Nath, who is a member of the plaintiffs' firm, and that even if it be proved that any settlements were actually made the defendants are not liable to reimburse the plaintiffs for moneys so paid by them.

Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal, who has argued the case for the appellants with considerable ability, admits that the measure of damages at which the purchasers were entitled to recover their profits with regard to the April transactions is the difference between the contract rates and the rate prevailing in the Ludhiana market on the 30th April. The evidence on the record as to the market rate on this date is of a two-fold character. On the one hand we have it from the witnesses of both parties, e. g., P. W. 16 Babu Ram, P. W. 19 Ramji Das and D. W. 12 Sant Lal and D. W. 13 Madan Lal, whose statements are supported by entries in the respective account books, that actual transactions in salt took place on the 30th April at Rs. 2-12-0 per maund. On the other hand there is a large volume of evidence on the record, which shows that settlements between dealers in salt in respect of consignments which were to be delivered on that date were made at rates ranging from Rs. 3-7-0 to Rs. 4 per maund. Mr. Jagan Nath contends that it is the latter rate and not the rate at which actual sales took place, which ought to be taken into consideration in assessing the loss on the transaction in question.

In order to come to a correct conclusion on this point it is necessary to ascertain the real nature of the settlements which are alleged to have been made on or about the 30th April. There is ample evidence on the record to establish that the plaintiffs and a number of other persons had formed themselves into a ring for the purpose of speculating in salt. These persons had sold to each other a number of wagons of salt under written contracts, called tips and had by paper transactions amongst themselves worked up the rates artificially to a high figure, at which they made settlements on the due date without making actual delivery. These rates were known in the Ludhiana market by the technical name of "khiala." The real nature of these transactions is thus described by the plaintiffs' own witnesses. P.W. 12, Ramji Dass, states :

> We seven or eight men had effected a combination. We purchased good many tips (contracts) and then forced settlement at the best possible rates. With some we settled at Rs. 4 also. Hans Raj Lakhu, Sant Lal, Bichhya, Jagan Nath, plaintiff, Hari Ram, myself, Harcharan Dass, Nighai Ram had effected a combination. We collected some 90 tips. We received 50 railway receipts and got profits for the rest. Settlement was made at the rate agreed upon. The rate of salt was not considered as the contract did not relate to salt but to biltis.

P. W. 9, Bansi Lal, stated that the settlements were not made at the market rate, but at the fictitious rates forced up by the purchasers and the rate of 30th April was forced up by Rs. 1-4-0 per maund the rate next day being Rs. 2-12-0 per maund. One or many continue together ; they purchase tips and then force up the rates. This is technically called khiala. Similarly P. W. 11 Bhagat Ram admitted that these settlements were "effected at the rate fixed by the beoparis and not at the market rate.

It is quite clear that the rate forced up by these speculators in this manner cannot possibly be taken as the genuine "market rate" which means the price at which an ordinary customer could have purchased salt in the Ludhiana market on the due date. The idea which underlies the rule of law, that on breach of contract damages are to be assessed at the market rate is, that the party complaining should, so far as it can be done by money, be placed in the position in which he would have been, if the contract had been actually performed. It is, therefore, quite clear that the purchasers were entitled to damages according to the rate, which was actually prevailing in the market for genuine transactions of salt and which was, as shown already, Rs. 2-12-0 per maund, and not the fictitious khiala rate described above, at which the plaintiffs say they had made settlements with their purchasers. Therefore, even if the plaintiffs had authority to settle the transactions with the purchasers, they should have settled at the actual market rate and not at a fictitious rate, which was admittedly Re. 1-4-0 per maund higher.

Even if the appellants' contention be accepted that the rate at which the settlements were made was the market rate for tips I am of opinion that the plaintiffs could not legally settle with the purchasers at that rate. It must be remembered that in these transactions the plaintiffs were acting as agents on behalf of the defendants (who were not residing at Ludhiana) and as such it was their duty to act in a manner that was most beneficial to their principals. The plaintiffs, however, instead of protecting the interests of the latter, entered into a secret compact with most of the purchasers and other speculators and artificially forced up the rates with a view to benefit themselves at the expense of the sellers. I have no doubt whatever that in acting in this manner they were guilty of a flagrant disregard of their duties as agents. It is a necessary incident of the contract of agency that the agent stands in a fiduciary relation towards his principal. His position is one involving confidence, and in the discharge of his duties he must act with the most perfect good faith towards his principal, and should not in any way abuse the confidence resposed in him. He is bound to use his best endeavours to promote the interests of the person who has employed him. He will not be permitted to enter into any transaction in which his personal interest conflicts with his duty towards his principal, except with the consent of the latter, given after all the material circumstances and the exact nature and extent of the interest of the agent have been fully disclosed to him. In law as well as in equity an agent for the sale of goods belonging to the principal cannot, while actually selling the property or making settlements for damages on foot of such transactions, make any secret profit for himself or for persons with whom he is associated. The proposition is too elementary to require an elaborate discussion, but it seems to me necessary to emphasize it, as the real nature of the obligations of the agent is often lost sight of by the mercantile community in this province. It is well settled that a person, who stands in a relation of trust or confidence to another shall not be permitted in pursuit of his private advantage to place himself in a situation which gives him a bias against the due discharge of that trust or confidence: Burton v. Wookey (1).

Similarly in Bentley v. Craven (2). Romilly, M. R., observed:

Two principles with relation to the doctrine of principal and agent have been recognized from the earliest times. One is that an agent employed to purchase cannot legally buy his own goods for his principal. Neither can an agent, employed to sell, himself purchase the goods of his principal. If he should do so, and thereby make a profit, his principal may either repudiate the trasaction altogether or, adopting it, may claim for himself the benefit made by his agent. It is founded on this principle that an agent will not be allowed to place himself in a situation which, under ordinary circumstances, would tempt a man to do that which is not the best for his principal and it is the plain duty of every agent to do the best he can for his principal.

The rigour with which the English Courts enforce the rule is clear from the following remarks of Sir George Jessel M. R., in Dunne v. English (3):

it is not enough for an agent to tell the principal that he is going to have an interest in the purchase, or to have a part in the purchase. He must tell him all the material facts. He must make a full disclosure. If in a transaction between principal and agent it appears that there has been any underhand dealing by the agent, e. g, that he has purchased the estate of the principal in the name of another person instead of his own, however fair the transaction may be in other respects, it has no validity in a Court of equity.

(2) 104 R. R. 378.
(3) [1874] 18 Equity 524.

Similarly Rigby, L. J., in Lagnus Nitrate Co; v. Lagnus Syndicate (4) laid down:

It is an equitable rule, which has always been guarded and enforced with the utmost jealousy, that no fiduciary agent shall, under pain of consequences thoroughly well known, intentionally place himself in a position in which his interest may conflict with his duty. The rule is not a mere arbitrary or technical rule of equity, but is based upon high ground of morality, and Courts of equity have always held any departure from it to be a very serious wrongdoing. The equitable rule referred to does not in any way depend upon fraud or any presumption of advantage actually taken. Indeed, it applies equally, even though it be shown that no advantage has been taken. The rule is made general in order to prevent the danger arising from the difficulty of disproving in particular cases that duty has given way to interest.

The principle underlying these decisions of the Courts in England is not peculiar to the laws of that country, but is a necessary consequence of the relationship of principal and agent. In India it has been recognised by the legislature in S. 215, Contract Act, and has been applied in various cases by the High Courts: see Puran Lal v. Ford & Macdonald Co., Ltd. (5). Joachinson & Co. v. Meghjee (6), Achutha Naidu v. Oakley Bowden (7). It is, therefore, clear that the plaintiffs, in joining a combination of speculators and artificially inflating the rate and then settling on the basis of these rates, acted in flagrant breach of their duty to their principals (defendants), and even if they actually made payment on such statements, the defendants cannot be made liable to reimburse them.

That the plaintiffs, in making these settlements acted dishonestly and in direct contravention of the express directions of their principals, is further clear from the correspondance that passed between them. On 29th April 1919 the plaintiffs sent the following telegram to the defendants (Ex, P. 40):

Your April biltis not received yet. If not received up to to-morrow, will be settled bazar rate. You will be responsible for loss.

The defendants replied the same day (Ex. D. W. 25/2):

Regret delay due unforeseen causes. Request fortnight's respite for delivery without projudice; otherwise settlement your risk.

The plaintiffs seem to have made no efforts whatever to ask the purchasers to give a "fortnight's respite as requested." Not only did they not do so, but on 30th they actually made settlements with the purchasers (some of whom were their partners and others were members of the ring) not at the real market rate, but at rates which were much highter than those prevailing in the bazar.

The due date for the May consignments (Exs. P. 22, P. 29) was the 31st of that month. On 22nd May the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants (Ex. P. 41):

You have not, to this day, the 22nd May, sent any railway receipt relating to the eight wagons of salt of May which had been sold for you on receipt of your letter, and telegrams. Please despatch the railway receipts otherwise you will have to pay the loss which the buyer will demand at the close of May. You are hereby informed of this. Please make efforts to send the railway receipts. To day the rate of railway receipt of ready goods(salt) at this place is Rs. 3-2-0. If you have a desire to make purchase, please send the reply by wire or by letter or you may come personally. Please send the railway receipts.

The defendants sent a reply by wire on 31st May 1919 (Ex. D. W. 25-1):

I can't come; dont decide for May and don't pay money or you will be responsible.

The plaintiffs, however, without waiting for this reply, had settled with all the purchasers several days before the due date. It is quite clear that the defendants cannot possibly be bound by such payments.

Now let us see if any settlements have been proved to have been actually made. As to the April consignments, the settlement relating to Exs. P. 12 to P. 14, are alleged to have been made with one Ramji Das. This Ramji Das was admittedly a partner of the plaintiffs in several salt transactions. He was a member of the "combination" which had arbitratily raised the rate of salt. He has not produced his account books and as remarked by the lower Court, appears to be an underling of the plaintiffs. Payments alleged to have been made to such a man are obviously fictitious and cannot be binding on the defendants.

The lower Court has held the settlement relating to Ex. P. 15 to be genuine, but if the transaction is scrutinized closely it will appear that it was wholly fictitious. The settlement with Jagat

Ram, the ultimate holder of this tip is stated to have been made on the 25th April, i. e., five days before the date. It is not explained why this was done, nor is it shown how on the 25th the plaintiffs could possibly have anticipated the rate that would be prevailing in the market on the 30th. I, therefore, feel constrained to disagree with the finding of the lower Court on this point and hold that the alleged payment, even if it was ever made, is invalid.

The lower Court has examined in detail the evidence relating to the other consignments of April delivery and has found the alleged payments to be unproved. As I agree generally with the remarks of the lower Court, I do not think it necessary to repeat its reasons. It will be sufficient here to say that with regard to Ex. P. 18 plaintiffs themselves were the ultimate holders of the tip and they seem to have paid themselves the profit at the khiala rate and debited the amount to the defendants. The holders of Ex. P. 1, and Ex. P. 20 were the members of the "ring" above mentioned. Payments with regard to Ex. P. 16, Ex. P. 17, and Ex. P. 21 are alleged to have been made respectively to Sawan Mal, Jahawar Mal and Bhagat Ram on the 4th May 1919, but in the plaintiffs' account books the money in respect of these has been shown to have been paid on the 30th April to Ramji Das, who has been shown above to be an associate and dependant of the plaintiffs.

Out of the May consignments the lower Court has upheld the settlements alleged to have been made in respect of Ex. P. 22, Ex. P. 24 and Ex. P. 27, but it has overlooked the fact that while the due date was the 31st May, the plaintiffs in each case made the settlement before that date. The plaintiff's own case is that Ex. P. 22 was settled on the 30th May, that Ex. P. 24 was settled on the 25th and payment made in that account on the 29th and that Ex. P. 27 was also settled on the 30th May. It is obvious that such settlements made before the due date and behind the back of the defendants cannot possibly be binding on them. The lower Court has rightly rejected the alleged settlements relating to P. 23, P. 25, P. 26, P. 28 and P. 29, and it is not necessary to repeat here the grounds for this conclusion.

For the foregoing reasons it must be held that the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim anything on account of the money alleged to have been paid by them to any of the purchasers of April and May consignments. As to the other items, which are admitted by both parties, there is a credit balance in favour of the defendants. Nothing is, therefore, due to the plaintiffs. I would accordingly dismiss the plaintiffs' appeal and accept the cross-objections, and modifying the decree of the lower Court would dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Fforde, J.—I agree. The plaintiff has brought this suit for reimbursement for sums which he alleges he has expended as agent on behalf of his principal in compromising a number of threatened suits brought against the principal for damages for breach of contract in connexion with the sale of certain consignments of salt. To succeed in his suit the plaintiff must prove that in compromising this threatened litigation he was acting within the scope of his authority, that is to say, that he was authorized by the defendant to take the steps he did, either by the express terms of the contract of agency or by necessary implication from the defendant's conduct.

In Mayne on Damages (9th edn., p. 542) an agent's right to indemnity is expressed as follows :

> The rule is that if an agent has incurred losses or damages in the course of transacting the business of his agency or in following the instructions of his principal, he will be entitled to full compensation therefor. But in order to entitle an agent to recover from his principal under such circumstances he must show: firstly that the loss arose from the fact of his agency ; secondly, that he was acting within the scope of his authority ; and thirdly, that the loss was not attributable to any fault or laches on his part.

In Pettman v. Keble (8) it was held that where an agent, exercising his best judgment, compromised an action brought against him in respect of a contract entered into on behalf of his principal, who had notice of the action and had not given any instructions as to the course to be pursued, the agent was entitled to be indemnified, even though the plaintiff could not under the circumstances have succeeded in the action.

If the purchasers of the consignments of salt had in fact threatened to bring actions for damages for non-delivery, it was the duty of the agent to immediately communicate this fact to his principal and take his instructions. It is true that he communicated to his principal the fact that he intended to make settlements with the purchasers, but, far from authorizing him to make any settlement on his behalf, the defendant expressly forbade his doing so. In the face of this repudiation there was no justification whatsoever for the agent taking the matter into his own hands. Far from acting within the scope of his authority he in fact acted against the express instructions of his principal. On these grounds alone the suit must fail.

Under the Act of 1920 it is a condition precedent to the presentation of an insolvency petition by a debtor that he must show that he is unable to pay his debts, and if he fails to satisfy the Court of his inability to pay his debts his petition must under S. 25 (2) be dismissed. At this stage the Court is not required to make a detailed or lengthy enquiry into the alleged inability of the appellant to pay his debts. It is not intended that there should be a regular trial of this matter at the very outset. But at the same time it is necessary that the debtor must make out a prima facie case to the satisfaction of the Court as to his inability to pay his debts. The onus of proof of all the essential conditions required under S. 10 lies on him, otherwise he has no locus standi to apply and his application must be dismissed : A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 66 and *A. Amar Nath Chona—for Appellants.

Mukand Lal Puri—for Respondents.

Judgment.— Ashaq Hussain Shah, respondent 1, applied to the District Judge, Sargodha, under S. 7, Provincial Insolvency Act, to be adjudicated an insolvent. In his application he estimated his total liabilities at Rs. 13,640 and his assets at Rs. 48,263-12-0, consisting of agricultural land which he himself valued at Rs. 45,000, a house worth Rs. 110 and moveable property and outstandings valued at Rs. 3,153-12-0. The immediate cause for his making the application was stated to be that two of his creditors had applied for his arrest in execution of decrees, which had been obtained against him for an aggregated sum of Rs. 1,575 only and which he alleged be was unable to pay. A list of 22 creditors, to whom Rs. 13,640 was said to be due, was filed with the application. Of the creditors seven appeared and supported the debtor's application while four contested it, alleging that on his own showing the debtor's assets far exceeded his alleged liabilities and thas he was obviously able to pay his debts. The other creditors did not appear.

The learned District Judge, in a brief judgment, relying on: (a) the applicant's statement on oath that he was unable to discharge his liabilities; (b) the admission of seven of the creditors who had supported the application; and (c) the fact that the two creditors had actually applied for his arrest in execution of their decrees, came to the conclusion that the applicant was unable to pay his debts. He accordingly passed an order adjudging the debtor an insolvent, and appointed one Nazar Hussain Shah receiver of the estate.

Against this order of adjudication the appellants, who are some of the creditors, have preferred this appeal which is opposed by the debtor Ashaq Hussain Shah only. The other respondents, though served, have not appeared.

A preliminary objection has been raised by the learned counsel for the contesting respondent that the appeal cannot proceed as Nazar Hussain Shah, who had been appointed receiver of the estate by the lower Court, has not been impleaded as a party respondent. It is pointed out that in the memorandum of appeal as originally presented the only persons arrayed as respondents were the insolvent and seven of the creditors, though subsequently on the appellants' application the Official Receiver of Sargodha was brought on the record. But this was (it is urged) a meaningless proceeding as the Official Receiver of Sargodha had nothing to do with this insolvency, the person actually appointed as receiver being Nazar Hussain Shah, who had not been impleaded up to the date of the hearing, even though several opportunities had been given to the appellants to amend the memorandum of appeal; counsel for appellant admits that the Official Receiver of Sargodha was impleaded by mistake and that Nazar Hussain Shah's name has not yet been placed on the record as a party. He, however, contends that the appeal being one against the order adjudicating respondent 1 as an insolvent, the receiver appointed by the lower Court was not a person interested in the appeal and was not a necessary party to it. It is argued that the omission to implead him is not fatal to the hearing of the appeal. For the contesting respondent it is urged that from the moment of Nazar Hussain Shah's appointment as receiver the estate of the insolvent vested in him and thenceforward he represented the entire body of creditors and, therefore, his presence on the record was essential for the proper decision of the appeal. It has, however, been conceded by the respondents' learned counsel that there is no specific provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act requiring a receiver to be made a party to an appeal in which the very order of adjudication (as a consequence of which the receiver was appointed), is in question. So far as I am aware, the uniform practice of the Punjab Chief Court and of this Court has been that a receiver is not considered a necessary party to appeals against orders of adjudication. Recently the point was specifically raised in Civil Appeal No. 2640 of 1925, Firm of Deviditta Mal v. Harbhagwan, before Jai Lal, J., and the learned Judge held that the appeal could proceed in the absence of the receiver from the appellate record. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, however, suggests that this practice is not legal and he relies on certain English and Indian authorities, which he says, support his contention and which are also cited at p. 281 of Mr. Rustomji's valuable commentary on the Provincial Insolvency Act, to support the remark that "in an appeal against an adjudication order the receiver is a necessary party."

The first of these is In the matter of Haroon Mahomed (1), in which on the application of the petitioning creditors, a certain firm trading under the name and style of Haji Mitha Cassum, having nine persons as its partners was adjudged insolvent under S. 9, Insolvent Debtors Act (11 and 12 Vict. c. 21). Shortly after the passing of the order of adjudication, one Haroon Mahomed applied to the Court stating that he was not and had never been a partner in the insolvent firm, and that it be declared that the adjudication order did not affect him. A rule nisi was issued by the Commissioner in Insolvency, calling upon the petitioning creditors and all other creditors of the said insolvent to show cause why the order of adjudication should not be revoked or set aside so far as the applicant was concerned. After inquiry the rule was discharged and the order of adjudication confirmed. Against these orders Haroon Mahomed preferred an appeal to the appellate Bench of the High Court impleading the petitioning creditors only as respondents. Before the hearing of the appeal, however, he bought off these petitioning creditors and consequently the latter withdrew their opposition. On this a number of persons from amongst the other scheduled creditors came forward and applied to be made parties to the appeal. This application was opposed by the appellants, but was supported by the Official Assignee. The learned Judges held that in these circumstances the other creditors were entitled to be placed on the record and heard in support of the lower Court's order. The question whether the Official Assignee was a necessary party was not discussed and decided, nor is it clear from the report at what stage and at whose instance was he impleaded. All that is mentioned is that at the close of the hearing the Official Assignee asked for his costs on the ground "that he was interested in the appeal and was bound to appear," and the Court granted him costs. The point now before us does not seem to have been directly raised, nor is there any discussion or definite decision on it. Moreover, the facts of the case were very peculiar. As already pointed out, a firm consisting of nine partners had been adjudicated insolvent, and the person who was contesting the order of adjudication was one of them. The other eight partners do not appear to have been impleaded. For these reasons the case does not seem to be of much assistance to us.

The next ruling referred to is Karsandas v. Magan Lal (2), which also is a case under the Insolvent Debtors Act. There, on the application of some of the creditors the appellant had been adjudicated an insolvent by a Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court. Against this order the insolvent had preferred an appeal to the appellate Bench and at the hearing of the appeal a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the petitioning creditors that the appeal could not proceed as the Official Assignee had not been impleaded as a party. The objection was, however, overruled by Jenkins, C. J., and the appeal allowed to be heard. Here, again, there is no discussion on the point but the decision, so far as it goes, supports the appellants rather than the respondent.

The third case cited is Jhabba Lal v. Shib Charan Das (3). That was an appeal by the petitioning creditors against an order of the insolvency Court rejecting their application for attachment of certain property which they alleged belonged to the insolvent, but which the Court had, on objections by the sons of the insolvent, declared to be the personal property of the latter. It was held that the petitioning creditors had no locus standi to file an appeal against this order. This case has obviously no bearing on the point before us.

Mr. Mukand Lal, however, places much reliance on In re Webber Ex parte Webber (4), where it was held by the Court of appeal that notice of an appeal against a receiving order must in every case be served on the Official Receiver within the time limited by the rules for service on the petitioning creditor. It is, however, clear from a perusal of the judgment of Cave, J., who had upheld the preliminary objection in the Divisional Court, as well as the judgments delivered on appeal by Lord Esher, M. R., and by Lindley and Lopes, L. JJ., that the decision proceeded on the peculiar provisions of O. 58, R. 2, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, and on the rule of practice which had been laid down by the Divisional Court in England for such cases. O. 58, R. 2, provides that the > notice of appeal shall be served upon all parties directly affected by the appeal and it shall not be necessary to serve parties not so affected; but the Court of appeal may direct notice of the appeal to be served on all or any parties to the action or other proceeding or upon any person not a party.

Both the Master of the Rolls and Lindley, L. J., observed that it was doubtful whether a receiver in bankruptcy could be held to be party directly affected within the meaning of the aforesaid rule, but they decided that under R. 2 the Divisional Court was empowered to direct notice of the appeal to be served even on a person who was not a party to the proceedings. They further held that the Divisional Court was entitled to make its own rules for the impleading of parties and it could not be said that in that particular case the rule framed by that Court, on which Cave, J., had relied, was in any way unreasonable or improper. It is thus clear that this ruling is no guide for the Indian Courts in hearing appeals against the orders of adjudication passed under the Provincial Insolvency Act. In the Civil Procedure Code there exists no rule corresponding to R. 2, O. 58, rules of the Supreme Court, nor am I aware of any rule to this effect having been framed by the Lahore High Court under its rule-making power. In practice the receiver has never been, as already stated, considered a necessary party to appeals before the High Court or the late Chief Court.

Mr. Mukand Lal's main argument, however, is based on S. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, which lays down that > on the making of an order of adjudication, the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a receiver as hereinafter provided, and shall become available among the creditors.

It is argued that as under this section the whole of the property of the insolvent vests in the receiver and he represents not only the insolvent but also the entire body of creditors, he is the person most interested in the result of the appeal and is, therefore, a necessary party to it. I have given much careful thought and anxious consideration to this argument and have reached the conclusion that the provisions of this section, instead of supporting the contention of the learned counsel, are really against it. In order to examine the soundness of this argument it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act. S. 27 lays down that if the Court does not dismiss the petition, it shall make an order of adjudication. In S. 28 (2) it is provided that on the making of an order of adjudication the whole of the property of the insolvent shall vest in the Court or in a receiver as hereinafter provided. S. 56 empowers the Court to appoint a receiver for the property of the insolvent either at the time of the order of adjudication or at any time afterwards, and it is stated that "such property shall thereupon vest in such receiver." This is followed by S. 58 which lays down that where no receiver is appointed, the Court shall have all the rights of, and may exercise all the powers conferred on, a receiver under this Act. An examination of these sections of the Act makes it clear that on adjudication the property of the insolvent vest in the Court and the Court may or may not, as it thinks fit, appoint a receiver to take charge of the estate of the insolvent. It may administer the estate itself or it may decide to exercise these functions through a receiver. If and when the Court chooses to delegate its functions relating to the administra- of the estate to a receiver, then, and not till then, does the estate vest in the receiver. The receiver has no independent status of his own. He is merely an official of the Court, the hand through which the Court chooses to act. The property primarily vests in the Court, and it is only by virtue of the delegation of its powers by the Court to him that the receiver is vested with the estate: see in this connexion the remarks of LeRossignol, J., in Prithi Nath v. Bashes-har Nath (5) and also the decision of the Madras High Court in Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chet-tiar (6). If this is the correct legal position then it cannot be argued simply because under certain circumstances the property of the insolvent vests in the receiver for certain purposes, he is a person interested in the result of the appeal and is a necessary party to it. For otherwise in cases in which the Court does not choose to appoint a receiver or where an appeal against the order of adjudication is preferred before a receiver is appointed under S. 56, it would, by parity of reasoning, be necessary to implead the Court as a party to the appeal. This position, however, is absurd on the face of it. Nobody would be heard to argue that in such a case the appeal cannot proceed because the Court, which passed the order of adjudication and in which the property vests had not been impleaded as a party respondent. This point is prominently brought out in the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Jagannath Marwari v. Kala-chand Banerjee (7), the reasoning and conclusion of which have my respectful concurrence.

On general principles, also, the objection is untenable as the ordinary rule is that in an appeal only those persons need be impleaded, who were necessary parties in the Court below and who would be affected by the order passed on appeal. Here the receiver was not and could not have been a party to the proceedings in the trial Court resulting in the order of adjudication. Further, as pointed out already, the very appointment of the receiver is dependent upon the order of adjudication and for this reason also his absence from the record is not a fatal defect to the hearing of this appeal in which the validity of this order itself is under consideration. I would, therefore, overrule this preliminary objection.

Mr. Mukand Lal next argued that there was another defect in the appeal by reason of which the appeal could not proceed. He pointed out that in the memorandum of appeal as originally presented on 20th April 1925, fifteen persons were shown as appellants. On 5th January 1926, when the case came up for hearing before Mr. Justice Broadway, it was objected on behalf of the respondents that Mr. Amar Nath Chona, who had presented the appeal, had been instructed by two creditors only and that he had no right to present the appeal on behalf of the others. Mr. Amar Nath Chona offered the explanation that his clerk had by mistake made the other thirteen creditors as appellants, though really they should have been impleaded as respondents. The case was accordingly adjourned, on payment of costs to the objecting respondent, to allow Mr. Chona an opportunity to amend the appeal. An application was in due course presented, praying that the memorandum of appeal be corrected and these 13 persons added as respondents. After certain intermediate orders which it is not necessary to mention here, this application was granted on 15th July 1926 and the 13 persons were entered as respondents. Mr. Mukand Lal argues that as these persons were actually impleaded as respondents more than six months after the order under an appeal had been passed, the appeal was barred by time against them and being defective by reason of their absence from the record ought to be dismissed. It is clear from the narrative of facts as given above that these persons were shown as appellants by a pure oversight on the part of the appellants' counsel, and on his offering an explanation to this effect the learned Judge directed these persons to be made respondents. Now, it is quite clear that under O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C., a person who was a party to the proceedings in the Court below may be added as a respondent, though the time to appeal against him has expired. The law of limitation does not affect the powers of the Court to implead such persons: see Shahab Din v. Miran Bakhsh (8), Girish Chander v. Sasi Sekhareswar (9) and Deokaran v. Nathu (10). The question has recently been fully discussed by Broadway, J., in Amar Singh v. Kashi (11) and by Campbell, J., in Mt. Sawani v. Jiwan (12). I, therefore, hold that there is no force in this objection also and overrule it.

On the merits of the appeal the sole question for consideration is whether having regard to the provisions of Ss. 10 and 24, Provincial Insolvency Act 5, 1920, the debtor is, on the facts as stated or proved by him, entitled to present a petition for adjudication as an insolvent. In order to properly appreciate the correct legal position in respect of this matter under the existing law, it is necessary to emphasize the very material alteration that has been effected in the law by the Act of 1920.

Section 6 (3) of the former Act (3 of 1907) was as follows:

> The debtor shall not be entitled to present an insolvency petition unless
> (a) his debts amount to 500 Rs.; or (b) he has been arrested or imprisoned in execution of the decree of any Court for the payment of money; or (c) an order of attachment in execution of such a decree has been made and is subsisting against his property.

It will be noticed that under that section it was not necessary for the debtor to allege or prove that he was unable to pay his debts. All that was necessary to give him a right to apply for being adjudicated an insolvent was to establish one or the other of the three conditions mentioned in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) above. If his debts amounted to more than Rs. 500 or he had been arrested or imprisoned in execution of a money decree or his property was under attachment in execution of such a decree, the Court was bound to pass an adjudication order quite irrespective of the fact whether he was able to pay his debts or not : see the Leading Privy Council judgment, Chhatrapat Singh Dugar v. Kharag Singh Lachmiram (13). Experience, however, showed that this provision of the law was not suited for Indian conditions and that dishonest debtors made improper use of the insolvency law with a view to get out of their just liabilities even though they were really able to easily discharge them. In order to set right this defect and with a view to see that the law does not lend itself to the devices of dishonest debtors, S. 6 (2) of Act 3 of 1907 was repealed and in the new Act 5 of 1920, S. 10 was enacted as follows :

> A debtor shall not be entitled to present an insolvency petition unless he is unable to pay his debt and (a) his debts amount to five hundred rupees or (b) he is under arrest or imprisonment in execution of the decree of any Court for the payment of money, or (c) an order of attachment in execution of such a decree has been made, and is subsisting against his property.

It will be noticed that a very material alteration was made to the section by the addition of the " words unless he is unable to pay his debts" Under the present law, it is necessary for the debtor to establish both : (1) that he is unable to pay his debts, and (2) that either his debts amount to Rs. 500, or he has been arrested or his property had been attached in execution of a money decree. It has now been made a condition precedent to the presentation of an insolvency petition by a debtor that he must show that he is unable to pay his debts and if he fails to satisfy the Court of his inability to pay his debts his petition must under S. 25 (2) be dismissed. S. 10 has, however, to be read with the proviso to S. 24 (1) (a), which lays down that for the purpose of proving his inability to pay his debts the debtor is required to furnish only such proof as will satisfy the Court that there are prima facie grounds for believing the same and the Court if and when so satisfied shall not be bound to hear any further evidence thereon. In other words at this stage the Court is not required to make a detailed or lengthy enquiry into the alleged inability of the appellant to pay his debts. It is not intended that there should be a regular trial of this matter at the very outset. But at the same time it is necessary that the debtor must make out a prima facie case to the satisfaction of the Court as to his inability to pay his debts. The onus of proof of all the essential conditions, required under S. 10, lies on him, otherwise he has no locus standi to apply and his application must be dismissed : Gobind Prasad Gir v. Kishun Lal Dhokri (A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 166 ; and Lakshminarayana Aiyar v. C. R. Subramaniya Aiyar (14).

Now can it be said that in this case the respondent has made out a prima facie case of inability to pay his debts ? In my judgment on an examination of the contents of his petition and the other facts on the record, the question can only be answered in the negative. It is no doubt true that the respondent boldly asserts that he is unable to pay his debts and a few of his creditors, who represent only a small fraction of his alleged total indebtedness, support him, but the details of his assets and liabilities as given in his own petition instead of showing his inability to pay his debts lead to exactly the opposite conclusion. He values his property at Rs. 48,000 and states that the debts due by him are Rs. 13,000 odd only. He does not allege that his assets are locked up in investments for which there is no market or that they are otherwise incapable of realization.

Assuming, and at this stage it must be so assumed, that his liabilities are correctly stated in the petition, his property is according to his own valuation worth nearly four times of what he states he owes to his creditors. The rule of law applicable to such a case is thus stated by Singhal at p. 73 of his treatise on the Law of Insolvency in British India :

> Under Ss. 10 and 24, Provincial Act, the debtor should only prove that he is unable to pay his debts. Where a debtor applies to be declared an insolvent and shows that his assets exceed his liabilities, he must show also that by the sale of his interests or after realization of his assets a sum would not be secured which would enable him to pay his debts in full.

As pointed out by Harrison, J., in Dad Khan v. Chandi Ram (15), a case which is very similar to the present one, > where the debtor himself shows the value of his property as five times the total of his debts, it is obvious that he is not unable to pay his debts under S. 10, Provincial Insolvency Act. He could either sell a fraction of his land to an agriculturist or he could charge a larger fraction in order to raise the necessary funds. Counsel contends that it is the duty of Insolvency Court to pass an order of adjudication and then to make arrangements for farming a portion of the land. If the Insolvency Court can arrange to farm a portion of the land, the applicant can equally well arrange a lease of the same portion. The words in the section must I think, be read as meaning what they say and if a man has on his own showing marketable property of an infinitely greater value than his outstanding debts, he is clearly able to pay them.

In that case as here, the debtor was an agriculturist owning large property comprising land of the value of Rs. 44,000 milch and plough, cattle, etc. He had applied to be adjudicated an insolvent on the ground that he was unable to pay his debts amounting to Rs. 9,000. The application was granted by the District Judge, but the order was set aside by the High Court. There is no doubt that in such cases the debtor is able to pay his debts, but he is not desirous of doing so. Such a person is, obviously, not entitled to apply for adjudication as an insolvent under S. 10 of the Act.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, as a last resort, contended that the respondent in this case was a member of an agricultural tribe and that his power to alienate his landed estate was by statute restricted and that the refusal of his application for adjudication as an insolvent would nullify the provisions of that Act. I however, fail to see the force of these contentions. The fact that the debtor's power of alienation is in certain respects restricted is a wholly immaterial circumstance. In Barkat Ali v. Gurditta (16), a similar argument was put forward before Coldstream, J., and rejected. There the debtors alleging that their debts amounted to Rs. 2,100, and that they were unable to pay their debts petitioned to be adjudicated insolvents. It was found that they were occupancy tenants and that their occupancy rights could be mortgaged for Rs. 2,500 which would be sufficient to liquidate their debts. It was, however, argued that under S. 56, Punjab Tenancy Act, the landlords' consent was necessary before the occupancy rights held by the debtors could be sold and as the landlords might have refused consent without assigning any reasons it could not be said that the debtors were able to pay their debts. The learned Judge held that as it had not been shown that the landlord had refused to allow alienation of the occupancy rights it could not be said that the debtors were unable to pay their debts and he accordingly dismissed the application.

The principle underlying this decision fully applies to the present case and is a complete answer to the first part of Mr. Mukand Lal's argument. Nor am I pressed by the suggestion that the rejection of the petition of an agriculturist debtor in the circumstances stated above would defeat the object of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. That Act merely restricts and in some case prohibits the transfer of agricultural land by members of notified agricultural tribes to persons belonging to non-agricultural tribes. It was not intended, nor does it purport to assist well-to-do agriculturist debtors who can easily discharge their liabilities, but who are unwilling to do so, in escaping from their just obligations by getting themselves adjudicated insolvent. Nor is there anything in the Act, which is intended to prevent money-lenders from recovering sums justly due to them by any legal means in their power : see remarks of Robertson and Shah Din, JJ., in Jahan Khan v. Dala Ram (17), of Broadway, J. in Haidar v. Fatteh Khan (18) and of Chevis, J., in Ladha Singh v. Ahmad Yar (19). I, do not, therefore, see that the Land Alienation Act has any bearing on the decision of the point before me. The real question to be decided is whether the applicant is unable to pay his debts and this he obviously is not on his own showing.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of opinion that the contesting respondent was not entitled to present a petition for adjudication as insolvent and the order passed by the lower Court granting his application cannot be sustained. I would, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the lower Court's order and direct that the petition of respondent 1, for adjudication as an insolvent be dismissed with costs in the trial Court. As the appellants were careless in drawing up their memorandum of appeal I would leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Sardha Ram—for Appellant.

Badri Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants Messrs. Aya Ram Tola Ram instituted a suit against the joint family firm of Rai Het Ram Bodh Raj for recovery of Rs. 1,14,449-8 principal and interest claimed to be due on account of commission agency dealings. It appears that Rai Sahib Dharu Lal, the contesting respondent, was alleged to be a partner in the defendant firm and a decree was claimed against him personally, but he contested his liability. The suit was finally compromised and a decree for Rs. 1,04,000, with future interest at 6 per cent per annum payable by instalments passed in accordance with the compromise by the Judicial Commissioner of Sind. The firm of Rai Het Ram Bodh Raj and one Bodh Raj were made liable for this amount. The following clauses of the written compromise which was incorporated in the decree must be mentioned to understand the present dispute:

(3) In case any two of the instalments are not paid on due date, the whole amount then due shall be recovered at once.

(4) That as security for the due payments of the said decree, the following immovable properties including the right title and interest of R. S. Dharu Lal, son of R. B. Het Ram are declared to be under the mortgage lien of the plaintiff :

(a) Agricuitural land measuring about 15,00 bighas etc.

(b) Agricultural land measuring about 300 bighas etc.

(b) 11/16th annas share in agricultural land measuring about 200 bighas.

Defendants Bodh Raj and R. S. Dharu Lal declare that the above lands are their property and are alienable and that they are unincumbered.

(5) That the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the decretal amount as also any instalment in default from the property of the said firm of Het Ram Bodh Raj, the property hereby mortgaged or from the defendant Bodh Raj personally. In the event of deficiency the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount due to them from the other joint family immovable property of the defendants Bodh Raj and R.S. Dharu Lal Het Ram except the residential house.

(6) That the defendant R. S. Dharu Lal is not a partner of the firm Rai Het Ram Bodh Raj and is not personally liable for the claim in suit but he has joined in this decree as surety in order to secure the due payment of the plaintiff's claim and to render his share to the joint family property liable for the plaintiffs' claim and has signed the application as such surety and for the said purpose.

(7) The suit against the defendant R. S. Dharu Lal is dismissed with no order as to costs but he continues as liable as surety as above provided to the extent of his right, title and interest in the joint family property referred to above.

I have set out in detail the above clauses in the decree because the question involved in this appeal depends upon the correct construction of the same with regard to the liability to sale in execution proceedings of R. S. Dharu Lal's interest in the property mentioned above.

It appears that default having been made in the payments of instalments by the firm of Het Ram Bodh Raj and Bodh Raj, the decree holders took out a certificate of nonsatisfaction to the Dera Ghazi Khan District where the property specified above is situated. When the decree holders sought to attach the interest of R. S. Dharu Lal in the property mentioned in the decree they were met with the various objections including one to the effect that R. S. Dharu Lal being only liable as a surety and merely to the extent of his interest in the property specified in the decree, his liability could not be enforced in execution proceedings but, if at all by a separate suit. This objection has been allowed by the learned Senior Sub-Judge

* A Letters Patent Appeal filed against this judgment was dismissed—Ed.

Dera Ghazi Khan, who declined to proceed against the interest of R. S. Dharu Lal, in execution proceedings. The decree-holder had consequently presented an appeal to this Court. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the executing Court was not competent to go behind the decree and should have executed it in accordance with the conditions expressly mentioned therein. His case is that the liability of the respondent R. S. Dharu Lal was that of a surety and therefore he was liable to be proceeded against in execution under S. 145, Civil P. C. The section provides that where any person has become liable as surety for the performance of any decree or any part thereof, the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner provided in the Civil Procedure Code for the execution of decrees and that such person shall for the purpose of appeal be deemed a party within the meaning of S. 47. The contention of the learned counsel apparently is that the respondent made himself personally liable and is therefore liable to be proceeded against under S. 145, Civil P.C.

The learned counsel for the appellant on the other hand contends that the operation of S. 145 is limited merely to the extent of the personal liability of the surety and that it does not permit the sale in execution proceedings of any immovable property charged and that the liability as against such property must be enforced in a regular suit. Another contention of the learned counsel was that though the property sought to be attached was comprised in the decree, still it could not be sold as it was not the subject matter of the suit in spite of the fact that the decree was by virtue of a compromise.

It seems to me that even if the contention of the counsel for the respondent is correct that the liability of a surety can be enforced under S. 145, Civil P. C. only in so far as he has made himself personally liable but not against any immovable property that he may have mortgaged to secure such liability. Mahalashmi Bai v. Badan Singh (1) is clearly an authority against this contention, still I consider that the present is not a case to which S. 145 has any application. This section in my opinion applies to cases where the liability of the surety is incurred independently of the decree and is not contained intor declared by the decree itself which is sought to be executed. In the latter case such a person becomes really a judgment-debtor and, therefore, becomes liable as such. I will not, therefore, express any definite opinion whether or not the operation of S. 145, Civil P. C., is limited to the enforcement in execution proceedings of the liability of a surety only to the extent of his personal liability and not against any property that he may have mortgaged as such surety.

The question then is whether under the circumstances mentioned above and having regard to the terms of the decree that I have already quoted, the interest of R. S. Dharu Lal in the properties mentioned in the decree can be attached and sold in execution proceedings or whether it is necessary for the decree-holder to institute a fresh suit under O. 34, Civil P. C., to enforce the lien against such property. As I have already stated I must hold that R. S. Dharu Lal is a judgment-debtor in this case. He was originally a defendant and there is no question that a decree could have been granted against him. It is in my opinion immaterial for the present purpose that under the terms of the decree he was held not to be a partner in the firm, but accepted the liability in another capacity. On the suit as framed the decree is within the four corners of the plaint except as regards the lien on the immovable property, but the lien was created by reason of a compromise. The real question is whether it is merely a declaratory decree so far as the lien on the immovable property is concerned or whether it is a decree which is capable of being executed against such property. That question has to be decided with reference to the intention of the parties to be gathered from the contents of the decree. In Sukumari Debi v. Mangneeran Bhangar & Co. (2) in a money suit a decree was granted on a compromise which provided that a security inter alia, of immovable property was to be furnished for the due performance of the decree and a clause was added in the following terms :

On failure to pay three consecutive instalments the whole amount of the decree to become payable. Decree-holders in such a case may execute the decree irrespective of their rights against the security and may also execute against the security.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 All. 105=45 All. 649.

(2) A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 889.

The security was duly given by the wife of the judgment-debtor hypothecating immovable property. On default having been made in the payment of the instalments, a question arose in the execution proceedings whether the property hypothecated could be sold in such proceedings. The following remark occurs in the judgment of Rankin, J.:

> However, in this case the two parties concerned in this joint bond, viz., the defendant and his wife, charged different interests in the same property which it would be inconvenient and wasteful to realize separately by sales in different Courts and at different times. I see great difficulty in realizing this defendant's interests save by proceedings under S. 47 and as I think that both intended to agree that the matter should bs thrashed out in execution, I think the judgment of the learned Judge should be supported.

The consequence was that the property hypothecated was allowed to be sold in execution proceedings. Similarly in Kashi Chandra v. Priyanath Bakshi (3) in a suit to enforce a mortgage security a consent decree was passed which was to the following effect: The decree-holder would be entitled to receive from the judgment-debtor Rs. 4,000 on account of principal and Rs. 400 on account of costs. The aggregate sum of Rs. 4,400 was to be paid by annual instalments which were specified in the schedule and then the following condition was added:

> The dsfendants will pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 4,400 on account of the claim and costs as per instalments mentioned below. If default is made in payment of any one instalment the plaintiffs will then be entitled to realize the whole amount due for all instalments at one and the same time by taking out execution. The properties mortgaged shall remain dragged under the mortgage until the amount due for the last instalment has been paid.

Default having been made in the payment of the instalment the decree-holder ought to execute his decree by selling the property mortgaged, but was resisted by the judgment-debtor on the ground that R. 14, O. 34, Civil P. C., disentitled the decree-holder to enforce the liability in execution proceedings, it being contended that such liability could be enforced only by a regular suit to enforce the consent decree. This objection of the judgment-debtor was disallowed. It was held that as the decree provided that the decree-holder could realize the whole amount by taking out execution, therefore, he could sell the property mortgaged in execution proceedings and that O. 34, R. 14 was not applicable to the case. The reason for this conclusion was that it was the intention of the parties that if default were made by the judgment-debtor the decree-holder could be at liberty to take out execution against the mortgage properties which were to remain charged until the amount due for the last instalment had been paid, and, therefore, the authority of the decree-holder to take out execution extended both to the taking out of execution of the decree as a money decree and also against the hypothecated property The facts of that case are identical with those of this case, the only difference being that in the reported case the suit originally was to enforce mortgage security, while in the present case the suit was for a money-decree. The difference in my opinion is not material. It is to be observed that there also, as in this case, no decree in the form laid down in O. 34, had been granted and there was no express provision that the mortgaged property shall be sold in execution proceedings on a default by the judgment-debtor. It may be mentioned that R. 14, O. 34, does not apply to this Province.

Similarly in Indramani Dasi v. Surendranath Mondal (4), it was held that the holder of a decree for future maintenance in whose favour a charge on immovable property for the payment of the allowance settled is created by the decree is entitled to recover in execution without further suit, the allowance as it accrues due, and that it is not obligatory upon the decree-holder to have recourse to a suit to enforce the charge created by the decree. It was further held that R. 14, O. 34, Civil P. C., does not apply unless the decree obtained by the holder of the mortgage or charge falls within the description of a decree for payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage or charge, and further that where a compromise decree provided that the decree-holder would be entitled to realize the amount by sale of the properties mentioned therein it is not open to the judgment-debtor to resile in execution proceedings and contend that notwithstanding the express provision of the decree the decree-holder must be driven to a separate suit.

(3) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 645.

(4) A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 35.

I hold that the above authorities fully support the contention raised on behalf of the decree-holder that it was the intention of the parties to enforce the laibility of the property charged in execution proceedings, and that the executing Court should have proceeded with the execution of the decree as prayed by the decree-holder. I accept this appeal with costs throughout, set aside the order of the Senior Sub-Judge and remit the case to him to proceed with it in accordance with law.

Judgment. — The plaintiff in this case, being the married daughter of a deceased Arora, sued her father's brothers and the unmarried daughters of her father for a declaration that she was a proprietor and possessor of 1/5th share of the immovable and moveable property left by her father according to Hindu law, by which the parties were governed. The plaintiff asserted that her father's brothers had no right to the property at all but were denying the plaintiff's right in the property. Hence the suit. The unmarried daughters, who are minors supported the plaintiff's case. The real contesting defendants are the plaintiff's father's brothers who contested that the parties were governed by custom and that though the family originally belonged to Mauza Hasan Khan in District Jhang yet the grandfather of the defendants had left Jhang and taken up his permanent abode in Dera Ismail Khan where the defendants and their brother, the plaintiff's father, had been born and married and had acquired property. Therefore, the defendants were governed by the custom of Dera Ismail Khan. They further contended that even according to the custom of the Jhang District they were entitled to succeed to the whole of the property, moveable, and immovable ancestral, on non-ancestral left by the plaintiff's father and that the plaintiff, a married daughter, had no kind of claim on the property. There was also a plea that certain money of which the plaintiff's father had died possessed really belonged to one of the defendants, his brothers. This plea was found unproved by the trial Court, and has not been raised before us.

The trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit as regards the nonancestral property and dismissed it as regards the ancestral property holding that the defendants had proved a custom of the Jhang District by which collateral excluded married daughters in the succession to ancestral property but that there was no sufficient proof that they excluded married daughters with respect to nonancestral property. Defendants have appealed and the plaintiff has filed cross-objections.

The defendants, the plaintiff's father's brothers have contended that they have proved that the Aroras of Dera Ismail Khan are governed by custom by which a married daughter is excluded from all property left by her deceased father in the presence of near collaterals and an unmarried daughter will only hold possession of the property until she is married or until her death. In the alternative they contend that at any rate even according to the Jhang custom the same result would follow. They rely on the riwaj-i-ams both of Dera Ismail Khan and of Jhang Districts and have further produced a good deal of oral evidence with respect to both districts supported in some cases by instances in which daughters were excluded by collaterals. On the other hand counsel for the plaintiff contends that the riwaj-i-ams are badly compiled, that they are far too vague and that they are unsupported by any instances and that, therefore, according to Wazira v. Maryan (1) and other rulings the value of such riwaj-i-ams is very small and that the oral evidence for the defendants is insufficient to prove custom both so far as ancestral and particularly so far as nonancestral properties are concerned.

The first question to be decided in this appeal is whether the parties are to be held governed by the custom of the Jhang District or of Dera Ismail Khan. The ordinary presumption of law is that when a person leaves one district and goes into another where a different custom prevails he carries his personal law with him and unless there is something to show that he had abandoned his personal law and had adopted the law of his district he will continue to be governed by the personal law of his old district. On the evidence led in this case there is no difference between the personal law of the Aroras of Jhang District and of Dera Ismail Khan District but we are unable to hold that it has been shown conclusively that the present family abandoned its personal law for that of the Aroras of Dera Ismail Khan. We, therefore, hold that the parties are governed by the law governing Aroras of the Jhang District.

The next question is whether the Aroras of Jhang District are governed by Hindu law or by custom. In our opinion the evidence clearly shows that they are governed by custom and not by Hindu law in certain matters regarding succession. As regards this point there is the oral evidence which is supported in the case of ancestral property by several instances. There is also the ruling reported as Diyan v. Hira Nand (2) and there is a statement in the riwaj-i-am that the Aroras follow custom and not Hindu law. There is hardly any rebuttal of all this evidence and we consider, therefore, that it is proved that the Aroras of Jhang District are governed by custom in the matter of succession of daughters to their father's property.

The next point that arises for decision is what is the custom with regard to the right of daughters to inherit their father's property and whether near collaterals exclude daughters. The riwaj-i-am of the district is in favour of the collaterals excluding married daughters both as to ancestral and nonancestral property. No doubt in certain rulings of this Court it has been held that a riwaj-i-am, when contrary to the general custom and not supported by instances has very little value. We are however clearly of opinion that the Privy Council rulings reported as Beg v. Allah Ditta (3) and Balgobind v. Badri Prasad (4) have now definitely laid down that a riwaj-i-am whether supported or unsupported by instances is a piece of evidence which if unrebutted is sufficient to decide the case. In the present case we have not only the riwaj-i-am but we also have a considerable amount of oral evidence to the effect that this is the custom of the Aroras and this oral evidence mentions certain instances. Standing by itself we would not have held that this oral evidence was sufficient to establish the case but coupled with the riwaj-i-am we consider that it is proved that among the Aroras of Jhang District near collaterals, as the present defendants are, exclude married daughters entirely from succession to their deceased father's ancestral and nonancestral property. It is unnecessary to discuss the various rulings which were cited as to the rights of females and the value of oral evidence of males with respect to females' rights of succession. It is sufficient to state that in this case the riwaj-i-am and the oral evidence unrebutted are sufficient to prove the defendants' case. We, therefore, accept the appeal of the defendants and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. In the circum-

Mere conveyance of land without expressly including an interest in the shamilat does not convey such an interest to purchaser of a land in a village.

But where the purchasers of some plot of land in a village, proved his title to such an interest by a copy of the deed of sale of 1849 and a fragment of the original deed, by a table of the proprietors of the village in question and by an entry in the record prepared at the Settlement of 1850 showing that the proprietors of the plots admittedly sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants in 1849 had attached to them a proportionate interest in the shamilat, Held: the purchasers overwhelmingly proved that the sale to them in 1849 of the plots in question carried with it a proportionate share in the shamilat land: *A. Fforde, J.—The plaintiffs, who are proprietors of land in the village Nagar, Tahsil Phillaur, brought this suit for a declaration that a sale by them to the contesting defendants (who are also proprietors of the same village) of certain plots of land, did not carry with it the proportionate share of shamilat appurtenant to those plots. The learned trial Judge has held that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their contention, and that the defendants have affirmatively proved that in the conveyance of the plots in question a proportionate share of shamilat passed.

The onus of proving that no share in the shamilat was included in the original sale which took place in the year 1849, was placed upon the plaintiffs. The sole evidence which they produced to support their case consisted of an order dated the 12th October 1849 made by the Deputy Collector. In that order the Deputy Collector recited that the plots of land in question had in fact been sold to the defendants, but the order omits any mention of shamilat land having been conveyed with the respective plots. It is upon this omission that the plaintiffs rely to establish their contention. It has been argued for the plaintiffs that the mere conveyance of land without expressly including an interest in the shamilat does not convey such an interest. This no doubt is the law. The defendants, however, have taken upon themselves the onus of showing that in fact an interest in shamilat was expressly conveyed with the plots in question. To support their case they have produced three documents. Firstly, a copy of the deed of 1849 and a fragment of the original deed. The copy bears date 1866. It has been produced from proper custody, namely from the custody of the successor in-interest of the original vendees, and being more than 30 years old does not require proof of execution. Moreover, it appears to have been admitted in certain litigation in 1875, as it bears an endorsement to that effect. The defendants have not been able to produce any record of this document ever having been registered. It is possible that either the document was not registered or, if registered, the record of such registration has been lost. It may be remarked that the provisions in regard to registration of documents only came into force a few months prior to the date of the execution of the document in question. The copy was attested in accordance with the law which existed at that date and bears a proper certificate of attestation in accordance with the then existing procedure. I have no doubt whatsoever that this copy is a genuine copy of the original deed by which the plots of land were conveyed. In this document the shamilat is conveyed with the plots in question.

The next document relied upon by the defendants is a table of the proprietors of the village in question. This pedigree-table is stated to be a copy of the settlement of 1885. It has been contended by the plaintiffs that this document has been proved to be a copy of the revenue records of that date, but this objection was not made during the trial. It was tendered in evidence as being such a copy, it was accepted by the Judge who decided this case as a genuine copy, and it is too late at this stage to contend that it has not been properly proved. I may mention in passing that the documentary evidence on both sides has not been proved in accordance with the proper procedure for proving documentary evidence. But neither party objected to the mode in which this evidence was tendered, and they cannot now raise any objection of this nature. This pedigree-table bears on it the following statement:

The tenure of the village being bhayachara ghair nukammal, sons of Tahl Singh, caste Jat Gila, got the property by means of sale, together with shamilat, from Gahl Singh, Daswanda Singh and Nihai Singh, father of the proprietors entered at khata Nos. 76, 80, 82 and 89.

The shamilat there referred to is the shamilat now in dispute. Mr. Nawal Kishore urges that the entry in this pedigree-table referring to the ownership of the property therein described is not admissible in evidence as it is extraneous to the matters which are required to be recorded in a pedigree-table, and he relies upon some dicta of Broadway, J., in Wali Muhammad v. Muhammad Bakhsh (1). It is apparent, however, on reading the case cited that the learned Judge did not decide that reference in a pedigree-table to the ownership of land was not admissible in evidence. What was decided was that such evidence, if admissible, could be attacked in any way in which an entry in a public document may be impeached. It cannot be disputed that a pedigree-table is properly a part of the revenue records and constitutes an entry in a public document which is prima facie evidence of the truth of its contents. If it can be shown that the law requires that entries dealing with ownership of land should be included in such pedigree-tables, then it is obvious that the facts stated in the entry are prima facie proved by the production of the document. Mr. Badri Das has pointed out that the rules for compiling these revenue records introduced by Mr. Princep some time between 1863 and 1885 provide for notes being added to pedigree-tables showing the area of land held and the tenure of such land. In Appendix 8 to the Edn. 3 of Douie's Settlement Manual the rules for the preparation of genealogical trees include a provision that in cases where an owner has lost his land whether by sale or by diluvion, but claims a share in the shamilat, this should be noted under his name in the genealogical tree. This rule follows the procedure laid down by Mr. Princep under the authority of S. 31, Punjab Land Revenue Act. I have no doubt that the entry in the present case which shows that the defendants are entitled to the shamilat attached to the plots sold was made in accordance with the regulations that existed at the time when this pedigree table was compiled.

The third document upon which the defendants rely is an entry in the record prepared at the settlement of 1850 showing that the proprietors of the plots admittedly sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants in 1849, had attached to them a proportionate interest in the shamilat. It seems to me that upon this documentary evidence the defendants have overwhelmingly proved that the sale to them in 1849 of the plots in question carried with it a proportionats share in the shamilat land. Agreeing as I do in the conclusion arrived at by the Court below I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—In a decree awarding possession of immovable property to the decree-holder a warrant of possession was issued by the Court. The Bailiff was obstructed by certain persons in his attempt to give possession to the decree-holder and a report was made to the Court describing the circumstances under which the possession could not be given to the decree-holder. The Court thereupon sent a notice to the alleged obstructors to show cause why they should not be prosecuted, and, after recording some evidence, held apparently under O. 21, Rr. 97 and 98, Civil P. C., that the decree-holder was entitled to possession and that the obstructors should be restrained from offering any obstruction to the grant of possession to the decree-holder. This is a petition for revision of that order. It is contended that no application such as contemplated by O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C, was made by the decree-holder and, secondly, that the Court never gave notice to the petitioners that it would investigate the matter as required by Rr. 97 and 98, O. 21, Civil P. C. There is force in this contention. The lower Court under the circumstances had no jurisdiction to proceed with the enquiry which resulted in an order under O. 21, R. 98, that the decree-holder be put in possession,

I accept this petition, set aside the order complained against and leave the parties to take what further steps they may be advised to take in the matter. The petitioners will have their costs against the respondent.

Govt. Advocate—for Petitioner.

Order.—By Notification No. 1669 G., dated 28th April 1921, the Government acquired 3 kanals 10 marlas of land situated in Amritsar. The persons interested in the land were : (a) Kanshi Ram to the extent of 1/6th ; (b) Roshan Lal to the extent of 1/6th and (c) Vatta Mal and Kidar Nath, sons of Chandar Bhan, to the extent of 2/3rds, who filed three separate objections to the amount of compensation allowed by the land acquisition officer. Three references were accordingly made to the District Judge of Amritsar which were registered as Suits Nos. 2, 3 and 4 of 1923 respectively.

On 10th July 1924, the leaned District Judge made his award, materially enhancing the amount payable by Government. This award was recorded in Suit No. 2 of 1923 (relating to Kanshi Ram's objections), and the following order was written in the other two suits ;

"See judgment in Suit No. 2 of 1923 decided to-day."

On 20th October 1924, three separate appeals were filed on behalf of Government which were registered as :

Civil Appeal No.	2640 of 1924	Secretary of State v. Kanshi Ram
" "	" 2641 of 1924	" " v. Roshan Lal
" "	" 2642 of 1924	" " v. Vatta Mal and Kidar Nath

A copy of the award was attached to the memorandum of appeal in Civil Appeal No. 2640 of 1924 alone, a note being appended to the memorandum of appeals in the other two as follows :

Copy of the detailed judgment of the District Judge is with the connected appeal, the Secretary of State v. Kanshi Ram, filed to-day.

No objections were raised in the office and all three appeals were admitted to a hearing on 24th November 1924.

By Notification No. 3626-G dated 21st Dec. 1921, the Government acquired 28·13 acres of land in mauza Gujranwala and 52·98 acres of land in mouza Dhulla.

The persons interested in this land raised objections to the amount of compensation awarded by the land acquisition officer and ten separate references were accordingly made to the District Judge of Gujranwala. These references were separately registered as follows :

Land acquisition case No.	1 of 1924	Jahangiri Mal	v. Secy. of State for India in Council
" " "	2	" Ch. Mul Raj	v. " " " "
" " "	3	" Shrimiti Vidya Vati and S. B. S. Narain Singh	v. " " " "
" " "	5	" B. Bhagwan Dass	v. " " " "
" " "	6	" Ghulam Muhammad etc.	v. " " " "
" " "	7	" Pir Bakhsh, etc.	v. " " " "
" " "	8	" S. Balwant Singh. etc.	v. " " " "
" " "	9	" Shrimati Vidya Vati	v. " " " "
" " "	10	" Tirath Ram and Ganesh Dass	v. " " " "

Issues were settled separetely in each of these cases but, by consent of parties, all the evidence was recorded in L. A. Case No.1 of 1924 (Jahagiri v. Secy. of State).

The learned District Judge made his award on 1st July 1924, recording it in Land Acquisition Case No. 1 of 1924. In it, after dealing with the matters common to all the references, he dealt specifically with each. On the same date he recorded brief order on the record of other references to the following effect :

For reasons given in Land Acquisition Case No. 1 of 1924, decided to-day, I order, etc., etc.

On 8th October 1924 seven separate appeals were filed on behalf of the Government which were registered as :

Civil Appeal No.	2584 of 1924	Secretary of State	v. Shrimati Vidya Vati and another
" "	2594 "	" "	v. Tirath Ram Ganesh Das
" "	2595 "	" "	v. Bhagwan Das
" "	2596 "	" "	v. Shrimati Vidya Vati
" "	2597 "	" "	v. S. Rajwant Singh. etc.
" "	2598 "	" "	v. Ghulam Mohd, etc.
" "	2599 "	" "	v. Ch. Mul Raj

A copy of the award was attached to the memorandum of appeal in Civil Appeal No. 2584 of 1924. (The Secretary of State v. Shrimati Vidya Vati and another) and the following note appended to the memorandum of appeal in each of the six other appeals :

Copy of the detailed award of the District Judge is with the connected appeal "The Secretary of State for India v. Shrimati Vidya Vati and another " filed to-day.

No objection was taken to this course by the office and these six appeals, along with Civil Appeal No. 2584 of 1924, were admitted to a hearing on 14th November 1924.

On 18th May 1926, an application was made on behalf of Government in each of these eight appeals in which it was pointed out that the course adopted was in consonance with the past practice of the Court in such cases and that it had not been "generally appreciated by legal practitioners" that the effect of the amending Act (19 of 1921), S. 2, combined with O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., was to render the filing of a copy of the award obligatory in the case of each of the separate appeals.

A copy of the relevant award was attached to each application and it was prayed that the delay in filing the same might be condoned under S. 5, Lim. Act, on the ground that the reasons set out for the delay amounted to "sufficient cause."

The question for decision is whether the reasons given for the delay amount to such "sufficient cause" as would justify the application of S. 5, Lim. Act. Now the reasons set out in each application for the delay are : (1) that the mistake was due to the past practice of the Court in such cases ; and (2) that the effect of the amending Act (19 of 1921) was not fully appreciated by the Bar.

There can be no doubt that in the past the practice of this Court was as alleged and in each of these cases no objection was raised by the office as to the procedure adopted. There is also authority for the proposition that "a mistake of law made in good faith" would justify the application of S. 5, Lim. Act, and in a similar application made in Civil Appeal No. 2585 of 1924 my learned brother Zafar Ali, J., and I exercised our discretion in favour of the appellant. Each case has, however, to be decided on its own circumstances, and the point now raised by the learned counsel for the various respondents was not raised or argued before us in that case.

It appears that the effect of the amendment made in S. 26, Land Acquisition Act (1 of 1894) by the amending Act (19 of 1921) was clearly set out by a Division Bench of this Court in Mubarak Ali Shah v. Secretary of State (1) as far back as 19th February 1925, on an objection taken by the learned Government advocate on behalf of the Secretary of State. Similar objections were taken on behalf of the Secretary of State in Civil Appeal No. 2096 of 1923 and Civil Appeal No. 113 of 1923.

Again, in Nur Din v. Secretary of State (2) this matter was considered on an objection taken for the Secretary of State who was then the respondent. It is thus evident that the Secretary of State must be credited with the knowledge of the alteration made in the law by the amending Act (19 of 1921), and it was very strongly urged by the counsel for the respondents that, while it might be permissible to regard a "mistake of law" as amounting to "sufficient cause" within the meaning of S. 5, Lim. Act, in certain circumstances, i. e., when the mistake of law was made in good faith it could not be so regarded in the present cases owing to the fact that the circumstances showed that the Secretary of State through its law officers was aware of the alteration in question as far back as 19th February 1925. It was further urged that the failure to move this Court under S. 5, Lim. Act, till over fourteen months had elapsed since the delivery of the judgment in Mubarak Ali Shah v. Secretary of State (1) showed such a complete want of "due care and attention" as amounted to negligence. In my judgment there is considerable force in this contention, for there can be no doubt that the Secretary of State through his law officers had discovered the result of the amendment made in Act 1 of 1894 by Act 19 of 1921, by 19th February 1925, for, as already stated, it was on an objection made by the Secretary of State setting out the said alteration that Mubarak Ali Shah v. Secretary of State (1) was decided. Even, therefore, if it would be permissible to condone a short delay on the grounds set out in these applications, it seems to me impossible to overlook a delay of over fourteen months after 19th February 1925.

It was urged that the personnel of the law officers of the Crown changed during this interval and that it would not be reasonable to expect one law officer to examine at once all appeals instituted by his predecessors on behalf of the Secretary of State prior to 19th February 1925, but the reaply to this contention is that the same rule must be applied to the Secretary of State as a litigant as would be applied to any other member of the public, and, as the Secretary of State as litigant clearly had knowledge of the alteration made by the amending Act 19 of 1921, he cannot escape the consequences by pleading a change in his legal advisers. Admitting that it might as a matter of fact take a little time for the law officers to move in the matter, it seems to be that the period of fourteen months cannot be but regarded as excessive. As already stated, this aspect of the case was not urged at the time of the hearing of the application in Civil Appeal No. 2585 of 1924, and while I would be prepared to condone the delay on the grounds advanced up to a certain point, I do not think that the delay in these cases of over fourteen months can be ignored,

It is to be borne in mind that the respondents have acquired valuable rights and, though S. 5, Lim. Act, undoubtedly gives the Court a discretion, it is a discretion which is to be exercised in a judicial manner. I think the words "sufficient cause" should receive a liberal construction so as to advance substantial justice when no negligence, nor inaction nor want of bona fides is imputable to the appellant : Emperor v. Shiva Adars (3).

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 438=6 Lah. 218.
(2) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 49=7 Lah. 539.

But, as pointed out in City of Moscow Gas Co. v. International Financial Society (4), the mere fact that an appellant has misconstrued one of the rules, and by reason of such mistake has omitted to bring his appeal in time is not a sufficient ground for enlarging the time for appeal.

And again In re Coles and Ravenshear (5)

where through a mistake of course as to the effect of O. 58, R. 15 an appeal was not brought until after the expiration of the time thereby allowed for appealing, there was no sufficient ground for granting special leave to appeal.

In the present cases, while it may, with some show of reason be urged that the appellant was misled by the practice of the Court and that mistake of law was made in good faith up to 19th February 1925, I am unable to see that it can properly be urged that so long a period as fourteen months after the appellant had become aware of the mistake can be properly condoned. In these circumstances in my judgment these eight applications must be dismissed with costs.

Bhide, J.—Civil Miscellaneous (reference) No. 549, and Civil Miscellaneous (reference) No. 550 of 1926 being connected will be disposed of together.

On a memorandum issued by this Court, the Income-tax Commissioner has referred the following question of law for decision, viz., whether, in the circumstances stated below, the income-tax officer legally proceeded to assess the petitioners under S. 23 (4), and, therefore, no appeal lay to the Assistant Commissioner.

The petitioners are commission agents, admittedly carrying on three different businesses in Jullundur and Amritsar. Certain information received from Bombay led the income-tax officer, Jullundur, to believe that there was a fourth business of this firm carried on at Jullundur under the name "Karam Chand-Dina Nath." A notice under S. 22 (4), Income-tax Act, was issued to the firm to produce accounts of this business, but the petitioners failed to do so and stated that no such business existed during the year for which the assessments in the two references were made, viz., 1924-1925, and 1925-1926. The income-tax officer thereupon proceeded to make an assessment to the best of his judgment under S. 23 (4) on the ground that the petitioners had failed to comply with the terms of the notices issued under S. 22 (4). Appeals were filed and were rejected by the Assistant Commissioner on the ground that no appeal lay, the assessments being under S. 23 (4).

Two points have been urged on behalf of the petitioners, viz. (1), that the income-tax officer had no power to issue a notice under S. 22 (4) when inquiry had already started under S. 23 (3), and that the assessment should have been under

S. 23 (3), and not under S. 23 (4); (2) that as the accounts of the business asked for did not exist it cannot be said that there was any failure to comply with the terms of the notices issued under S. 22 (4). The petitioners appeared and stated that the accounts called for did not exist and it was impossible for the petitioners to do anything more to comply with the terms of the notices issued under S. 22 (4).

There is an important point of distinction between the facts of the two references which must be noted at the outset. The assessment for the year 1924-1925 was a supplementary one under S. 34, Income-tax Act, while that for the year 1925-1926 was an original assessment under S. 23 of that Act. For the purposes of the supplementary assessment, the income-tax officer had certainly power to issue a fresh notice under S. 22 (4) read with S. 34. As regards the assessment for the year 1925-1926, it was not disputed on behalf of the respondent that the notice under S. 22(4) was issued during the course of an inquiry under S. 23 (3), but it was contended that the powers conferred by S. 22 (4) are very wide and it was open to the income-tax officer to issue notice under that sub-section at any time during the course of the assessment. Radha Krishan & Sons v. Income-tax Commissioner, Punjab (1) was cited as an authority ; but that ruling only deals with the question whether an income-tax officer can call for accounts for the branch of a firm situated in a Native State. No authority directly in point has been cited ; but, on a careful consideration of the provisions of Ss. 22 and 23, the contention of the applicants, that a notice under S. 22 (4) could not be issued after the commencement of an inquiry under S. 23 (3), appears to us to be sound. S. 22 deals with "Return of Income," while S. 23 deals with "assessment." Under S. 22, the income-tax officer is authorized to call for a "Return of Income" and sub-S. (4) gives him power to call "such documents and accounts" as he may require. This is apparently intended to help the income-tax officer in deciding whether he will accept the return or proceed to make an inquiry under S. 23. If this were not so, there was no point in including the provision in a sub-section of S. 23. If the power could be exercised at any time, the provisions might have been expected to be embodied in a separate section (cf. e g., the provisions of S. 37). The wording of sub-S. (4), S. 23, also supports the same conclusion. That sub-section specifies three kinds of defaults, which authorize an income-tax officer to make a summary assessment, viz (1) ; failure to make a return under sub-S. (1) or (2), S. 22 (2) ; failure to comply with the terms of a notice issued under sub-S. 4, S. 22 ; and (3) failure to comply with all the terms of a notice issued under sub-S. (2), S. 23 after "having made a return." The words "having made a return" and the order in which the defaults are enumerated in S. 23 (4) indicate that a notice under S. 22 (4) precedes the notice and inquiry under S. 23. It is significant that sub-S. (4), S. 23 does not authorize a summary assessment in the case of a default under S. 23 (3). The natural inference is that the legislature did not intend that when a man has submitted a return, has complied with the terms of a notice (if any) issued under S. 22 (4) at that stage, and has further complied with the terms of a notice issued under S. 23 (2), he should be subjected for any subsequent default to the drastic penalty of a summary assessment which carries with it the further penalty of the loss of right to appeal. If it were held that an income-tax officer could issue a notice under S. 22 (4) even during the course of an inquiry under S. 23 (3), it would be easy enough in many cases for the income-tax officer to convert which is really a default under S. 23 (3) into a default under S. 22 (4) and proceed to assess summarily.

The income-tax officer has, of course, wide powers to call for any account books or other documentary evidence he may require under S. 23 (3) read with S. 37. But he does not appear to be entitled to make a summary assessment for failure to produce accounts at this stage. It is true that the wording of S. 22 (4) is somewhat wide, but it must be construed with reference to the context. It is also a well-established rule of the interpretation of fiscal enactments that, in case of doubt, an interpretation which is more favourable to the subject is to be preferred. On this principle also we think that the interpretation we have put on S. 23 (4) is justified.

(1) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 5.

We accordingly hold that the income-tax officer did not act legally in issuing a notice under S. 22 (4) for the purposes of assessment for the year 1925-1926, and the notice issued being invalid, default in complying with its terms did not justify a summary assessment under S 23 (4). As regards the supplementary assessment for 1924-1925, the notice under S. 22 (4) was valid as pointed out already.

The applicants have contended that even if the notice was valid, there was no "failure" to comply with it within the meaning of sub-S. (4), S. 23 as the account books called for did not exist. But this contention involves a finding of fact The orders of the income-tax officer show that they were fully satisfied after inquiry that business on an extensive scale was carried on under the name Karam Chand, Dina Nath and that there was definite proof of the existence of accounts relating to that business: vide Exs. A and B attached to the reference. In view of this clear finding on the point, we do not feel justified in allowing this question to be reopened.

We answer the question of law referred to us in the affirmative with respect to the supplementary assessment for the year 1924-1925, and in the negative with respect to the assessment for the year 1925-1926. Applicants will get half the costs.

Second Appeal No. 1485 of 1927, Decided on 7th November 1927, against order of Dist. Judge, Mianwali, D/- 8th February 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 11 — Insufficiently stamped document — Opportunity should be given to pay the proper stamp — Proceedings following admission of insufficiently stamped document are not void — Court-fees Act, Ss. 12 (2) and 28.

Provision of O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C., read with S. 28, Court-fees Act, clearly implies that opportunity has to be given to the party concerned to pay the proper stamp, and it is on his failure to do so that the Court is entitled to decline to look at the document. If the Court accepts an insufficiently stamped plaint the proceedings which follow thereon are not void. Cl. (2), S. 12, Court-fees Act, also supports the view. [P 223 C 1, 2]

(b) Hindu Law — Alienation by a female holding customary life interest — Suit by the reversioner to set aside the sale — Reversioner need not prove that the land was ancestral—All he should prove is that he is next heir.

In a suit by the next heir to set aside an alienation by a female holder who has the customary life-interest in the estate, it is not ordinarily necessary for the plaintiff to aver or to prove that the land was ancestral. All that he has to prove, in order to establish his locus standi to maintain such a suit, is that he is the next heir to the estate; in other words, that if the female holder, the alienor, had not existed, he would have inherited the property. He would, under the circumstances, be entitled to sue to set aside an alienation even of land which is the self-acquired property of last male owner and, therefore, it is not necessary for the success of the suit that such property should have been held by the common ancestor of the plaintiff and last male owner. [P 223 C 2]

(c) Punjab Court-fees Act, Sch. 2, Art. 22—"Ancestral land" means land held by common ancestor of claimant and the last male holder.

The term "ancestral land," in Art. 22, Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, means land in respect of which, in order to enable the plaintiff to succeed, it is necessary for him to prove that the land was ancestral; in other words, that it was held by the common ancestor of himself and the last male owner. [P 223 C 2]

(d) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 22—Respondent can attack any decree passed against him by filing cross-objection.

Order 41, R. 22 gives a right to a respondent to attack any decree which is passed against him by the lower Court by filing a cross-objection. [P 224 C 1]

S. R. Laul—for Appellants.

Judgment. — The respondents instituted a suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mianwali, for a declaration that a sale by Mt. Jantan of land inherited by her from Muhammada, her son, was without consideration and necessity and, therefore, void against the rights of the plaintiffs who alleged that they were the heirs of Muhammada after the expiry of the life-interest of Mt. Jantan. An objection was raised by the defendants that proper Court-fee on the plaint had not been paid and it was pleaded that the sale was for consideration and necessity. On the merits the Senior Subordinate Judge held in favour of the plaintiffs, but on the question of Court-fee he was of opinion that a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 paid by the plaintiffs was insufficient and that the proper Court-fee was Rs. 20 under Art. 22, Sch. 2

Court-fees Act, which provides that a plaint or memorandum of appeal in a suit by a reversioner under the customary law for a declaration in respect of an alienation of ancestral land shall bear a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 20. The plaintiffs' contention was that their suit was not for a declaration in respect of an alienation of ancestral land and, therefore, under Art. 17 (3), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, stamp payable was as in an ordinary suit for declaration. The learned Judge, decided all the issues framed in the case together and passed the following decree on 5th October 1927 :

I accordingly come to the conclusion that the alienation was without necessity and I grant the plaintiffs a decree with costs against the defendants declaring that the sale in dispute shall not affect the rights of the plaintiffs after the death of Mt. Jantan. The decree shall not take effect until the Court-fee has been made good. The requisite Court-fee should be put in on or before 20th October 1926.

This order was pronounced in the presence of the counsel for both parties. The deficiency in the Court-fee, as determined by the Senior Subordinate Judge not having been made good by the 20th October, the following note was made by the learned Judge below the decree :

Note.—Court-fee not paid as ordered. Decree shall not take effect.

Against the decree of 5th October the plaintiffs filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge who held that an appeal lay to this Court because the order under appeal amounted to an order rejecting the plaint and that in either case an appeal lay to him. He held that the proper stamp on the plaint was Rs. 10 which amount having been already paid the order of the trial Court directing payment of additional Court-fee was illegal. He, therefore, accepted the appeal :

set aside the order of 20th October, " and ordered" that proper decree-sheet be prepared in accordance with law.

It appears, however, that the respondents before him had filed cross-objections. These the learned Judge declined to consider on the ground that the stage for filing cross-objections had not yet reached, that they (respondents) can appeal against the order when a proper decree-sheet is prepared.

The defendants have filed this second appeal, but the plaintiffs did not appear before me, nor were they represented by counsel, and consequently I had to hear the appeal ex parte against them.

The first contention of the learned counsel, who appeared on behalf of the appellants, is that no appeal lay to the Court of the learned District Judge from the order dated 5th October 1926, and that the plaintiffs not having appealed from the order of 20th October were precluded from appealing against the previous order which had in effect been superseded by the later order. I may note that the plaintiffs' appeal was expressly against the order of 5th October, but the learned District Judge has set aside the order of 20th October. Still I do not see any force in the contention of the appellants. The decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge was conditional-that is the way in which the learned Judge himself interpreted it-and the condition not having been performed as directed, the decree ipso facto became inoperative. There was really no fresh order made on 20th October, but merely a note was made of the fact that the condition had not been performed, and the further note that the decree shall not come into operation under the circumstances was merely a surplusage. It was not, therefore, necessary for the plaintiffs to appeal against any order of the 20th October, because the note made by the Judge on that date ceased to have any effect when the District Judge accepted the plaintiffs' appeal and set aside the order of the 5th October 1926. Though the learned Judge has not expressly set aside that order, the whole of the judgment is to the effect that the finding of the Senior Subordinate Judge, that the Court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient, was erroneous.

The learned counsel then relied on S. 12, Court-fees Act, in support of his argument that no appeal lay to the District Judge. The section provides that every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under this chapter on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint or memorandum, as the case may be, is filed and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit. But a proviso is added that where such question has been wrongly decided to the detriment of the revenue, a superior Court before whom such suit may come on appeal, reference or revision shall require the party concerned to pay the additional fee. In my opinion S. 12 does not apply to the present case. My view is that that section merely bars an appeal where the dispute is about the proper valuation of the subject-matter of the suit and not where the question is which of the several articles of the Court-fees Act, applies to the facts stated in the plaint. In the first case it is more or less a question of fact that has to be determined by the Court and the legislature has laid it down that the decision of the Court in such matters shall be final. In the second case different considerations arise and the matter being purely one of law is capable of being examined by superior Courts at the instance of either party.

There is another aspect of this question. The order directing the payment of the additional Court-fee was incorporated in the decree. It was, therefore, an essential part of the decree and admittedly the decree was appealable to the District Judge. In other words, the decree being conditional on the performance of certain acts by the plaintiffs on the non-performance whereof it was to become void and the direction relating to the performance of such acts being illegal as held by the District Judge, the learned Judge had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the legality or otherwise of the condition imposed.

At this stage it will be convenient to dispose of another argument that was put forward on behalf of the appellants. It was based on S. 28, Court-fees Act, which provides that no document which ought to bear a stamp under that Act shall be of any validity, unless and until it is properly stamped. The contention of the learned counsel was that the plaint being insufficiently stamped the decree passed thereon was void and consequently no appeal lay at the instance of the plaintiff. I confess I am unable to follow the argument. O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C., clearly provides that if the plaint is written on paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a fixed time, fails to do so then the Court shall reject the plaint. This provision of the law read with S. 28, Court-fees Act, clearly implies that opportunity has to be given to the party concerned to pay the proper stamp and it is on his failure to do so that the Court is entitled to decline to look at the document. But I am unable to see that if the Court accepts an insufficiently stamped plaint the proceedings which follow thereon are void. Cl. (2), S. 12, Court-fees Act, also supports the view.

The real question that is to be considered in this appeal is whether the suit in this case was in respect of an alienation of ancestral land or whether it was one in which a mere declaration under Art. 17 (3), Court-fees Act, was prayed for. The question presents some difficulty, but after careful consideration I have arrived at the conclusion that the view of the learned District Judge is correct. In a suit by the next heir to set aside an alienation by a female holder who has the customary life-interest in the estate it is not ordinarily necessary for the plaintiff to aver or to prove that the land was ancestral. All that he has to prove in order to establish his locus standi to maintain such a suit, is that he is the next heir to the estate; in other words, that if the female holder, the alienor, had not existed, he would have inherited the property. He would, under the circumstances, be entitled to sue to set aside an alienation even of land which is the self-acquired property of last male owner and, therefore, it is not necessary for the success of the suit that such property should have been held by the common ancestor of the plaintiff and last male owner. In this sense the present suit is not to set aside the sale of ancestral land.

The trial Court, and before me the learned counsel for the appellants, laid great stress on the fact that the plaintiffs' counsel, when examined in Court, stated that the land in suit was ancestral. I have examined that statement and find that the learned counsel was careful to add that it was immaterial whether the land was ancestral or not. The term "ancestral land," therefore, in Art. 22, Sch. 2, Court-fees Act, means land in respect of which, in order to enable the plaintiff to succeed, it is necessary for him to prove that the land was ancestral; in other words, that it was held by the common ancestor of himself and the last male owner. This was not necessary in the present cases and I must hold, therefore, that the present suit is not in respect of the alienation of ancestral land.

The consequence is that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the view of the Senior Subordinate Judge, that proper Court-fee on the plaint had not been paid, was erroneous. It may be mentioned that great inconvenience and confusion has been caused in this case owing to the fact that the Senior Subordinate Judge did not follow the usual practice of deciding the issue relating to the sufficiency or otherwise of the Court-fee before proceeding with the trial of the suit on its merits. I have grave doubts if he could pass a conditional decree under the circumstances.

In view of what I have stated it is not necessary for me to consider whether the plaintiffs had, as alleged by them, reasonable excuse for not paying the Court-fee within the time fixed by the trial Court. At the same time I consider that it was not necessary for the District Judge to order that a proper decree be prepared and that he could not decline to entertain the cross-objections of the respondents. O. 41, R. 22 Civil P. C., gives a right to a respondent to attack any decree which is passed against him by the lower Court by filing a cross-objection, and the learned District Judge could not take away such rights in the manner he has done. In his judgment the view of the trial Court with regard to the Court-fee was erroneous and, therefore, the order directing payment of the additional Court-fee became inoperative. There was, under the circumstances, no occasion to remand the case for the preparation of a proper decree. The plaintiffs were entitled to claim that, subject to the decision of the cross-objections, their suit should be decreed unconditionally and the respondents were entitled to an adjudication of their cross-objections.

I accept this appeal to this extent: that I remand the case to the District Judge with a direction to hear the cross-objections and then to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs or the defendants, as the case may be, after due consideration of the grounds taken by the respondents in their cross-objections. As the appellants have failed in the main grounds of appeal and the respondents have not appeared before me there will be no order as to costs of this appeal.

First Appeal No. 2509 of 1923, Decided on 15th November 1927, from decree of First Class Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 27th June 1923.

(a) Hindu Law—Joint family—Presumption is that every Hindu family is joint—Onus is on the person alleging to prove that it is otherwise—Purchase of property in the name of one or other member of family is immaterial.

The presumption of Hindu law is that every Hindu family is joint in food, worship and estate, and that a party who desires to establish the contrary must prove it: [22 Cal. 85 (P. C.), Foll.] If once the family is proved to be joint it is a matter of absolute indifference whether the name of one or the other member of the family appears in a particular document by which some property is purchased by the joint family. [P 226 C 1 & 2]

(b) Hindu Law—Joint family property—Property earned by members of family working jointly is joint family property even if there is no nucleus of ancestral property.

In the case of a joint Hindu family even if there is no nucleus of ancestral property but if two members of the family are joint in worship and live in commensality and carry on a business jointly and are treating that business as that and acquiring property with the proceeds of that business, that property would be deemed to be the joint family property: 32 Bom. 479; 10 *Bom. (c) Contract Act, S. 16—To prove undne influence position to dominate the will must be proved even though the bargain is shown to be unconscionable.

In order to prove undue influence by the dominating party on the other party it must, in the first place, be proved by the latter that the relations between the parties to each other are such that the other party is in a position to dominate its will. After this has been established, then the issue arises whether the contract has been induced by undue influence and when this issue has been determined the question of the onus probandi emerges, for if the transaction appears to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that the contract was not induced by undue influence lies upon the person who was in a position to dominate the will of the other. Even if the bargain is unconscionable the remedy under S. 16, Contract Act, does not come into view, until the initial fact of a position to dominate the will has been established: *A. I. Agha Haidar, J.—This is an appeal from a decree of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge of Delhi dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs. For the purpose of understanding this case it is necessary to give below a short pedigree :

Sita Ram (died 1893)

Nanak Chand (died 1904)	Gauri Mal (died 1888)
Sanwal Das (plaintiff)	Kure Mal (defendant)

The plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that, when his father, Nanak Chand, died, he was left an orphan aged five years only, his mother having died during the lifetime of his father ; that he was brought up by the wife of Bhana Mal, the son of his father's sister, and that he lived with her up to 1907, in which year the defendant brought him to his own house. Para. 4 of the plaint contains clear allegations that no ancestral property had been left by the grandfather Sita Ram ; that his father was separate from Kure Mal ; and that the property in dispute was the exclusive property of the plaintiff's father in which the defendant had no share or interest. The plaint goes on to say that in the year 1918, as a result of deception and misrepresentation by the defendant, the plaintiff was led to believe that the property in dispute was the joint family property of the parties and consequently the plaintiff was induced to execute the deed of partition dated 27th July 1918. The plaintiff's case is that the said deed of partition was obtained by the defendant when he was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff and held out threats to him that, unless the plaintiff executed the deed, he would be turned out of the family house penniless. There is also an allegation of fraud, and it is finally prayed that > it may be declared that immovable property, ornaments, cash and household goods entered in list A attached to the plaint entirely belong to the plaintiff and that the deed of partition, dated 27th July 1918, is ineffectual and null and void as against the plaintiff.

There is also a further prayer about the rendition of account of moveable property including cash and ornaments, but the claim as to this relief was subsequently withdrawn under an order of the Court dated 6th April 1921, with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

The written statement is a lengthy rambling document, but substantially it comes to this : that the family of Nanak Chand and Gauri Mal was a joint Hindu family ; that they carried on joint business ; and that the property in suit was the joint family property, having been acquired with the help of joint family funds. It is also pleaded that the deed of partition, dated 27th July 1918, is a genuine document in that it was executed at the instance of the plaintiff and with the mutual free consent of the parties. The allegations of the plaintiff as regards fraud, misrepresentation, deception and undue influence are specifically controverted and it is further pleaded that the deed of partition was effected by the plaintiff after due deliberation and that it had actually been acted upon by the parties.

In appeal the learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant, Mr. Sardha Ram, tried to shift his ground a little. While trying to establish the clear allegations contained in para. 4 of the plaint that the plaintiff's father was separate from Kure Mal and that no ancestral property was left by Sita Ram, the grandfather of the parties, the learned counsel attempted to put forward an alternative claim to the effect that, even if the family was a joint Hindu family, the property standing in the name of Nanak Chand was his separate and self-acquired property to which the rest of the family was not entitled. This line of argument was not open to the learned counsel, as it was an entirely new case which was not even foreshadowed either in the pleadings of the parties, or in the judgment of the Court below, or even in the grounds of appeal in this Court. However, the attempt in the very early stage of the arguments broke down and the appeal was argued on the pleadings of the parties and the issues framed thereupon.

Sanwal Das, the plaintiff, attained the age of majority, that is to say, 18 years, some time in the year 1915 and the partition did not take place until about three years afterwards. Kure Mal was undoubtedly looking after the property in suit on behalf of the plaintiff as well as on his own behalf according to the defendant's case, but after the death of his father it cannot be said that the plaintiff remained entirely under the tutelage and guardianship of Kure Mal.

The plaintiff himself admits that up to the year 1907, i. e., three years after his father's death, he lived in Bhana Mal's house ; but there is ample evidence on the record that the plaintiff in his younger days was a truant and used to fight with the defendant and would occasionally run away from Delhi to Meerut where his sister lived, so that it cannot be said that Kure Mal was the only person under whose guidance and protection the plaintiff lived. Kure Mal brought about the marriage of the plaintiff and after this marriage the plaintiff's father-in-law was also in a position to look after the plaintiff and safeguard his interests. The present suit was brought on 30th August 1920, that is to say, more than two years after the execution of the deed of partition. It is true that the plaintiff had a period of three years under the law within which he could bring a suit for the cancellation of the deed of partition, but this interval of more than two years is significant and throws some doubt at least upon the bona fides of the claim.

Now the crux of the case is whether the family of Nanak Chand was joint or separate. If it turns out that the family was joint then it would be open to the plaintiff to get the deed of partition set aside only if it could be shown that he was deprived of what was his own by fraud, deception or undue influence practised upon him by the defendant. The prdigree, as noted above, is a very simple affair. The presumption of Hindu law is that every Hindu family is joint in food, worship and estate, and that a party who desires to establish the contrary must prove it.

A number of documents are relied upon by the plaintiff in order to show that Nanak Chand acquired separate property and was, therefore, separate from the family. There are seven sale-deeds beginning from 1863 down to 1886. Five of these are in the name of Nanak Chand alone, while in two the name of Gauri Mal, the father of the defendant, also appears. Then there is a receipt dated 5th February 1886, executed by one Sagwa in favour of Nanak Chand, and there is further a deed of release, dated 26th July 1888, executed by one Mathra Das in favour of Nanak Chand. To this may be added a sale-certificate dated 2nd March 1903, also in the name Nanak Chand who was a decree-holder in the suit. These documents are not of much help to the plaintiff because, if once the family is proved to have been a joint Hindu family then it is a matter of absolute indifference whether the name name of one or the other member of the family appears in a particular document. We notice that in two of the documents at least, dated respectively 28th April 1873 and 1st March 1886, the name of Gauri Mal appears along with that of Nanak Chand. It may be mentioned here that in 1902, that is to say, while Nanak Chand was alive, four shops were purchased in the joint names of the plaintiff and the defendants, and again in 1908, after the death of Nanak Chand, three properties were purchased in the joint names of Kure Mal and the plaintiff. This is very significant and shows that, even in the lifetime of Nanak Chand, Kure Mal's name appeared as a purchaser along with the plaintiff, the only son of Nanak Chand, although, according to the plaintiff, Kure Mal was a man of no substance and was hardly likely to purchase any property. It need hardly be mentioned that all these properties, that is to say, the four shops purchased during the lifetime of Nanak Chand and the three properties purchased after the death of Nanak Chand, are included in the deed of partition.

Before discussing the oral evidence, which has been adduced on behalf of the parties, it may be mentioned that Nanak Chand was undoubtedly a man of considerable business capacity seeing that, according to both the parties, he was principally instrumental in immensely augmenting the family fortunes from very humble beginnings. He was a native of Delhi where the standard of an ordinary citizen's intelligence is fairly high and where plenty of legal talent was available for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. If Nanak Chand, who, according to the plaintiff himself, was a man of seventy at the time of his birth and died at the age of seventy-five, was really separate from the rest of the family and the sole owner of his fairly extensive property, then it does not stand to reason that he should not have consulted some lawyer and executed a will or a deed of gift giving away the whole of his property to his only son, the child of his old age. The mother of the plaintiff had died about four years before the death of Nanak Chand. Nanak Chand must have known that the child, after his death, would be left an orphan with no one to protect him and his patrimony. Ordinary prudence required that he should have taken suitable steps to assure the future of his only son and his property. But he did nothing of the kind, for the simple reason that he treated the family as joint and the whole property as the ancestral joint family property.

A large number of witnesses were produced on behalf of the plaintiff in order to prove that Nanak Chand was separate from the family and carried on a separate business and that the property in dispute was his self-acquired property. But unfortunately for the plaintiff the evidence of some of his own witnesses goes a long way to prove the defendant's case. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) Having regard to all the evidence, both oral and documentary, and to the circumstances of the case, it appears that Sita Ram originally started the family business in a small way and that his son Nanak Chand, as a member of the joint Hindu family, considerably extended it.

On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant a number of authorities were cited in order to show that the burden lay upon the defendant in the circumstances of the case to prove that there was a nucleus of the family property in the hands of Nanak Chand and that the property, as we now see it, is traceable to that source. Mr. Sardha Ram relied on Ram Kishen Das v. Tunda Mal (1), Kannammal v. Ramathilakammal (2), and a number of other cases, e. g., Birdichand Lalchand v. Popatlal (3) and Narayana v. Sesshamma (4). It is necessary only to examine the case reported in Ram Kishen Das v. Tunda Mal (1), because the other three cases follow the law as laid down in that case. This case does not lay down anything new or original. It merely says, what is well known to every student of Hindu law, that there is no presumption that a joint Hindu family has any property, and that property found in the possession of any one member of the family cannot be presumed to be joint family property unless it is shown that the family as such possessed at least some property by means of which the property in suit could have been acquired.

Now, as already stated, there is ample evidence on the record which goes to show that the property, as we now see it, had its origin in the small gudar shop which Sita Ram, the grandfather of the parties, was carrying on and which prospered later on under the wise management of Nanak Chand, the father of the plaintiff. I may also observe, with due respect to the learned Judge who delivered the judgment in Ram Kishen Das v. Tunda Mal (1), that even if there is no nucleus of ancestral property, but we find two members of the family who are joint in worship and live in commensality and carry on a business jointly and treating that business as that and acquiring property with the proceeds of that business, that such property would be deemed to be the joint Hindu family property. In my humble judgment this proposition is in consonance with the genius and habits of mind of the vast majority of Hindus governed by the law of Mitakshara. I am supported in this view by the High authority of Mr. Justice Beaman, a very distinguished and learned Judge of the Bombay High Court, who, in Karsondas Dharamsey v. Gangabai (5), laid down that there was nothing either in practice or theory which excluded the possibility of members of the same family starting a family fortune holding it as members of a joint Hindu family, and thereby clothing it with all the legal qualities and incidents of joint family property. In Laldas Naraindas v. Motibai (6), it was held that, where a father and his sons acquire their property by their joint labours and are besides joint in food and worship, they must be regarded as having constituted a joint Hindu family even though there may have been no nucleus of property which has come down to the father from his father or grandfather or great-grandfather. For the formation of a coparcenary in Hindu law, such a nucleus is not absolutely necessary, provided the persons constituting it stand in the relation of father and son or other relation requisite for a coparcenary system, and those persons, by living, messing and worshipping together, and throwing all the property acquired jointly into one common stock, manifest their intention to deal with one another and with outsiders as members of a coparcenary system under the Hindu law.

These two cases are cited with approval in a Division Bench case reported in Haridas Narayandas v. Dev Kuvarbai (7). In the present case we find that Nanak Chand purchased property in the joint names of himself and his cousin Gauri Mal in 1873 and 1886 and that Gauri Mal worked at the same shop with Nanak Chand. And when Nank Chand was getting old, property was purchased in the name of his only son and his nephew, the defendant Kure Mal who used also to work with him at his shop, and that, after the death of Nanak Chand, more property was purchased in the joint names of the parties. Thus we see that until the deed of partition was executed the whole family life of Sita Ram and his descendants was the life of a normal joint Hindu family in every respect. The plaintiff has given no evidence whatsoever to prove when and under what circumstances his father separated from the rest of the family. In the absence of such evidence the presumption continues that the joint family continued to exist up to the year 1918: vide Prit Koer v. Mahadeo Pershad Singh (8).

This being so, it was open to the plaintiff to have the family property partitioned. Now, the plaintiff's allegation, which he made for the first time in the witness-box, is as follows:

> Property of small value has been allotted to me and its value has been shown excessively in the deed. The defendant himself has taken superior property and of high value, though it has been shown in the deed as not valued much. The shops that have been shown as falling to my share are recorded to have two rooms, whereas in fact they have one room each.

He prefaced these observations by the statement that the partition-deed was obtained from him by undue influence and that he was forced to give his consent to the deed of partition by the threat that, unless he did so he would be turned out penniless. Apart from this eleventh-hour plea of the plaintiff there is no evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff was in any way cheated of defrauded when the shares were allotted under the deed of partition. The property was joint family property liable to partition at the instance of any one of the coparceners. The deed of partition was not a secret or mysterious affair. It was executed on 27th July 1918, and registered on 14th September 1918. It was attested by no less than ten marginal witnesses. Hashmat Ullah (P. W. 14), the scribe of the document, states:

> I wrote the partition deed. Drafts of this deed were made six months before. The parties got the drafts made. Sanwal Das's two relations of Meerut approved of the drafts and then the deed was drawn up. I got it registered also. No objection was preferred by either party at registration.

No serious attempt was made during the cross-examination of this witness to show that what he had stated as regards the careful preparation of the deed was not true. The three other marginal witnesses namely, Brij Lal (P. W. 8), Muhammad Inam Ullah (P. W. 11) and Ram Gopal (P. W. 10), have been examined on behalf of the plaintiff and no questions have been put to them on his behalf to suggest that the plaintiff was not a free agent at the time when he executed this document and had it registered. In this connexion I may as well deal with the plea of fraud, undue influence and misrepresentation, etc. As regards "fraud" beyond the mention of the word 'fraud' in one of the concluding paragraphs of the plaint there is no evidence on the record to show that any fraud whatsoever was practised upon the plaintiff. The partition seems to be fair and square and, at any rate, nothing has been shown that the division of the property in suit was in any way unfair or unjust. Reliance was placed upon S. 16, Contract Act, on behalf on the plaintiff, and it was argued that the plaintiff having been for some time under the guardianship of the defendant it may be taken that the latter was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff and, therefore, it lay upon the defendant to prove that the document represented an honest transaction and that in default of such proof it may be taken that the deed of partition was obtained by the exercise of undue influence. As already stated the plaintiff had attained his majority about three years before the deed of partition. It is true that he lived with the defendant; but off and on he used to go to Gurgaon and Meerut and lived with his relations. For several years, at least, he had been brought up in the house of Bhana Mal, the son of the plaintiff's father's sister, and after his marriage he had his wife's relations whose presence is deposed to by some of the witnesses at the time of the execution of the deed of partition. We may thus take it that the plaintiff at the time of the deed in suit was dealing with the defendant at arm's length. No such relationship is proved to have existed between the defendant and the plaintiff which would show that the defendant was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff. The argument of the learned counsel for the defendant was unsound when he contended that, when once it is proved that a party was in a position to dominate the will of another, then the burden of proof lies upon that party to prove that the transaction was not the result of undue influence. Whatever may have been the state of the law on the subject before, we have the weighty pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in two recent cases reported respectively in Poosathurai v. Kannappa Chettiar (9) and Raghunath Prasad v. Sarju Prasad (10). In the former case Lord Shaw observed that > undue influence is not established by proof of the relations of the parties having been such that the one naturally relied upon the other for advice and the other was in a position to dominate the will of the first in giving it. Up to that point "influence" alone has been made out. Such influence may be used wisely, judiciously and helpfully. But, whether by the law of India or the law of England, more than mere influence must be proved so as to render influence in the language of the law "undue." It must be established that the person in a position of domination has used that position to obtain unfair advantage for himself, and so to cause injury to the person relying upon his authority or aid. And where the relation of influence, as above set forth, has been established, and the second thing is also made clear, viz: that the bargain is with the "influencer" and in itself unconscionable, then the person in a position to use his dominating power has the burden thrown upon him, and it is a heavy burden, of establishing affirmatively that no domination was practised so as to bring about the transaction, but that the grantor of the deed was scrupulously advised in the independence of a free agent.

In Reghunath Prasad v. Sarju Prasad (10) the same noble and learned Lord observed that by S. 16, Contract Act (as amended by Act 6 of 1899), three matters are dealt with. In the first place the relations between the parties to each other must be such that one is in a position to dominate the will of the other. After this has been established then the issue arises whether the contract has been induced by undue influence and that when this issue has been determined the question of the onus probandi emerges; for, if the transaction appears to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that the contract was not induced by undue influence lies upon the person who was in a position to dominate the will of the other. Even though the bargain is unconscionable the remedy under S. 16, Contract Act, does not come into view, until the initial fact of a position to dominate the will has been established.

In the light of these authoritative pronouncements of law no difficulty arises as regards the interpretation of S. 16, Contract Act. In the present case it was for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant was in a position to dominate the will. He had further to prove that the contract was obtained by undue influence and that it was on the face of it an unconcionable transaction. After proving these various matters, the burden of proving which lay upon the plaintiff, it would have been for the defendant to prove that no undue influence was exercised. The evidence in the case was discussed at very considerable length by the learned counsel on behalf of the parties and it cannot be said that any foundation whatsoever has been laid by the plaintiff for the application of the doctrine of undue influence to the transaction in suit. Therefore, the deed of partition cannot be challenged on the ground of undue influence as set forth by the plaintiff. Thus, from whatever point of view the case may be looked at, the plaintiff has failed to establish his claim. I would accordingly dismiss the plaintiff's appeal with costs throughout.

Barkat Ali—for Respondent.

Broadway, J.—On 28th August 1926, Sir Alexander Muddiman gave a garden party at his house, Peterhoff, Simla, at which Their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Irwin were to be present. As is usual on these occasions the Superintendent of Police made arrangements for the control of traffic along the road and within the precincts of Peterhoff itself. The gate leading into Peterhoff appears to have been a narrow one through which only one rickshaw could pass at a time, Sergeant Devine, a head constable and four constables had been detailed to supservise and carry out the arrangements necessary for the proper control of the traffic and to see that everything was done peaceably and in order. Having regard to the narrowness of the entrance of the gate Sergeant Devine ascertained from Sir Alexander Muddiman whether the rickshaws should be parked in the grounds of Peterhoff or outside, and was informed that there was not sufficient accommodation for the parking arrangements in Peterhoff and that it would be necessary to have them parked outside. Accordingly it was arranged by Sergeant Devine that, after a certain number of rickshaws had passed through the gate and their occupants had alighted, they should be passed out as quickly as possible.

In accordance with these arrangements, when a certain number of rickshaws had emptied, a constable was sent by Sergeant Devine to direct the coolies to take them out and park them as arranged on the roadside. The constable returned and reported that the mate in charge of one of the rickshaws refused to take his rickshaw out and had been insolent and had abused him. Thereupon Sergeant Devine went to the spot and placing his hand on the shoulder of the mate in question directed him to take his rickshaw out. The mate, instead of doing so, snatched the light cane that Sergeant Devine had under his left arm and with it struck the Sergeant, at the same time asking him whether he could not see who he was. Sergeant Devine promptly had him turned out with the aid of the other policemen. The mate struggled and in the struggle kicked at and struck Sergeant Devine. He was ultimately turned out and the rickshaw placed in its proper position outside. He refused to give his name, saying that the name of the Commander-in-Chief would be sufficient. It later transpired that this man was the mate in charge of the rickshaw belonging to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief. Proceedings were instituted against this man, whose name is Gian Singh, and he was convicted of an offence under S. 353, I. P. C., and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. He appealed to the learned Sessions Judge of Ambala who came to the conclusion that, inasmuch as Peterhoff was not a place of public resort, the obstruction to Sergeant Devine was not an offence, and holding that S. 353 was inapplicable convicted Gian Singh under S. 352, I. P. C., and sentenced him to the term of imprisonment he had then undergone, about 15 days, and to the payment of a fine of Rs. 25.

Against the decision of the learned Sessions Judge the Crown has preferred an appeal under S. 417, Criminal P C., urging that the offence committed by Gian Singh fell within the purview of S. 353, I. P. C., and asking that it should be so recorded and the sentence imposed by the trial Magistrate restored. At the hearing the learned Government Advocate pointed out that the intention with which this appeal had been filed was not so much to get the sentence passed on Gian Singh enhanced as to get a definite ruling as to whether the offence committed by him fell within S. 353, I. P. C., or not. It was urged that, having regard to S, 31, Police Act, Peterhoff was, on this particular occasion, a place of public resort and further that, in any event, the control of traffic within the precincts of Peterhoff grounds should be treated as ancillary to the control of traffic along the road inasmuch as the congestion or block of traffic on the road leading from Peterhoff to the main public road would necessarily result in a block on the road itself. It was further contended that, having regard to the provisions of Ss 22 and 23, Police Act, the order of the Superintendent of Police, deputing Sergeant Devine and his subordinates to attend the garden party in their capacity as police officers, was a lawful one, and: any interference with them in the lawful discharge of their duty would fall within the purview of S. 353, I. P. C.

Mr. Barkat Ali, on behalf of Gian Singh raised a preliminary point to the effect that the appeal was incompetent inasmuch as there had been no acquittal under S. 353, and reliance was placed inter alia on Fazal Khan v. Emperor (1). Having regard to that authority I consider that the objection is valid and that the appeal was not competent. At the same time I consider that the learned Government Advocate's request, that the appeal should, in these circumstances, be treated as a petition for revision under S. 439, was fair and proper and we have treated this as a petition for revision.

Next Mr. Barkat Ali contended that, as a revision, he was entitled to examine the record to satisfy us that, on the merits, his client had committed no offence at all. It is not necessary to enter into the details of the evidence. In my judgment there can be no doubt at all that Gian Singh had a very inflated opinion of his own importance as the mate in charge of the rickshaw of a very high official and that the story told by the witnesses for the prosecution is true. Indeed, Mr Barkat Ali did not attempt to refer to the defence evidence which has only to be read to be discarded.

He next urged that the entire trial was vitiated owing to the fact that Gian Singh had not been examined a second time after the conclusion of the prosecution evidence, and he referred to various authorities, as, for instance, Lachhman Singh v. Emperor (2), Girja Nandan Singh v. National Insurance & Banking Co. Ltd. (3) and Emperor v. Fernandez (4), etc There is no doubt that these authorities support Mr. Barkat Ali's contention and the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in this behalf are undoubtedly mandatory. Nevertheless I do not think it necessary to interfere in this case on that ground, although, had it been an appeal that was before us, I might have felt bound to order a retrial from the point at which the Magistrate had failed to carry out the procedure laid down. Being a revision, it seems to me, despite the illegality, I am not bound to interfere. It was pointed out in Jiwani v. Nathu Mal (5), a case cited by Mr. Barkat Ali himself that, sitting as a Court of revision, this Court is not bound to interfere even in the case of an illegality committed by the Court below. That was a decision of a Single Judge. In Allah Diya v. Emperor, a Division Bench, consisting of Sir William Clark, Chief Judge, and Mr. Lal Chand, both of them eminent Judges of the Chief Court, laid down that the controlling power of the Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C., being by its terms entirely discretionary, the Court is not bound on revision to set aside a conviction in every case in which an illegality has been committed, especially where no prejudice is shown to have been caused by such illegality. Mr. Barkat Ali was unable to show that his client was in any way prejudiced by the omission referred to in this case, and

I, therefore, decline to interfere on this ground.

Turning to the question raised by the Crown: I am of opinion that the view contended for by Mr. Carden Noad is correct. I am not prepared to accede to the argument that Peterhoff was on that particular date a place of public resort, but, having regard to the provisions of Ss. 22 and 23, read with S. 31, Police Act, I am of opinion that the Superintendent of Police, in passing the orders he did, deputing Sergeant Devine and his subordinates to Peterhoff on that date, was acting lawfully and that Sergeant Devine, in arranging for the control of traffic not only on the road immediately below Peterhoff, but also along the road leading to Peterhoff and within its precincts, was acting in the lawful discharge of the duty that he was lawfully bound to carry out. There are many duties performed by the police force which are not specifically provided for by the Police Act itself, but the maintenance of law and order and the control of traffic along public roads, as well as roads leading to such public roads, is to my mind an essential part of the functions of the police. I would, therefore, accept this petition for revision and setting aside, the order of the learned Sessions Judge convicting Gian Singh under S. 352, I. P. C., restore that of the learned Magistrate and convict Gian Singh of an offence under S. 353, I. P. C. Having regard to the time that has elapsed, and to the fact that Gian Singh has served a certain amount of imprisonment and has paid the fine imposed by the learned Sessions Judge, I do not think it necessary to enhance the sentence.

In cases governed by S. 345 (2), Criminal P. Order of Reference

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:

This has been entered as an application to me for revision under Ss. 437 and 435, Criminal P. C. It should, however, in my opinion, be under Ss. 435 and 438.

The point at issue before me is one of some little interest. Since the alleged offence for which accused is on his trial is under S. 420, I. P. C., his counsel admits that, even if a compromise has been effected out of Court for due consideration, the Court has a right under S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., to refuse to permit the compromise. But he goes on to argue that, if, as in this instance, it be alleged that during the trial of the case a compromise was made for due consideration and that the complainant has resiled from such compromise, then the Court, if it would have been prepared to permit such compromise, has a right to hold an enquiry and to record evidence as to whether the parties actually came to some such agreement out of Court or not.

This is a position which I cannot accept, but he he has succeeded in convincing the lower Court, as the Magistrate's order shows.

In my opinion that order shows some confusion of thought, and the Magistrate has been misled by quotation of rulings which have bearing only on cases of compromise under S, 345 (1), Criminal P. C., i. e., when the Court has no voice in the matter. In the particular case under consideration, when the charge is under S. 420, I, P. C., and any compromise must be under S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., there can be nothing in the way of compromise which can be held to be legally binding on either party (much less to warrant enquiry and recording of evidence in proof of it) unless or until an application for permission to compromise under S. 345 (2) is made by the parties to the Court. And in any case the Magistrate when he writes in his order > if the circumstances under which compromise was arrived at allow, the Court has no option but to accord sanction and assent to the factum of compromise, is definitely wrong, in so far as a compromise under S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., is concerned. At least that is my view and interpretation of the law which I submit for the consideration of the Hon'ble High Court.

This case has been dragging on since September 1925, in the Courts of two Magistrates, and there have been lamentable delays for one reason or another. I may note that the 1st Magistrate, as the record shows, definitely decided against the allegation of a compromise having been effected, but the defence, arguing that the case is being tried de novo by the 2nd Magistrate, have succeeded in convincing the latter that their allegation merits enquiry.

Accordingly under S. 438, Criminal P. C., I report the case for the orders of the Hon'ble High Court, with my recommendation that the Magistrate's order of November last be reversed and and he be directed to try out this already unduly protracted case without further ado and to bring it to a speedy conclusion.

Order

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The rule laid down in Mohammad Kanni Rowther v. Inayathalla Sahib (1), is to the effect that a composition arrived at between the parties to a compoundable offence mentioned in S. 345 (1), Criminal P. C., is complete as soon as it is made; and that, if one of the parties subsequently resiles from the composition, it is competent to the Court to take evidence as to the factum of the composition and give effect to it if it is found to have been entered into. The question for determination is whether the same rule is applicable to a composition in respect of an offence mentioned in S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., which can be compounded only with the permission of the Court. The learned counsel on both sides have expressed their inability to cite any judgment on this point, and I consider that the matter should be decided authoritatively by a Division Bench.

I accordingly refer the case to a Division Bench and direct that an early date be fixed for hearing.

Order of the High Court

Aga Haidar, J.—A complaint under S. 420, I. P. C., was filed on 20th September 1925, by Naurang Rai (complainant) against Kidar Nath and Shiv Parshad. On 10th December 1925, an application was put in by Kidar Nath and Shiv Parshad asking the Magistrate, in whose Court the complaint was pending that permission to enter into a compromise be accorded and the applicants be discharged, on the basis of a certain alleged compromise which had been arrived at between the parties after the institution of the complaint. The learned Magistrate under his order dated 8th November 1926, directed the applicants (the accused) > to produce complete evidence, oral or documentary in proof of the factum of the compromise.

The order of the Magistrate cannot be called a model of lucidity and parts of it are not easily intelligible.

The complainant applied in revision to the learned District Magistrate who has expressed the opinion that, in view of the fact that the complaint related to an offence under S. 420, I. P. C., there could not be a compromise which would be legally binding upon the parties unless and until an application for permission to compromise under S. 345 (2) was made by the parties to the Court; and that there was, therefore, no warrant for ordering an inquiry into the factum of the compromise. The learned District Magistrate has accordingly reported the case for the orders of this Court with a recommendation that the Magistrate's order dated 8th November 1926, be reversed and that he be directed to try the case on its merits.

The reference came up before one of the members constituting the present Bench who, under an order dated 25th February 1927, referred the case to a Division Bench. The matter has now come before us for disposal.

Section 345, Criminal P. C., is divided into two sub-sections. Sub-S. (1) deals with certain offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code which are specified therein, and it is provided that offences falling under these sections may be compounded by persons mentioned in Col. 3. Sub-S. (2) contains a list of certain other sections of the Indian Penal Code, and its provides that the offences punishable under those sections can be compounded by the persons mentioned in Col. 3 only with the permission of the Court before which a prosecution for any of those offences is pending. S. 420, I. P. C., with which the accused persons were charged in the present case, comes under S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C. It may be taken as settled law that S. 345, Criminal P. C., is exhaustive on the subject of the composition of offences mentioned therein. There is a case reported in Mahomed Kanni Rowther v. Pattani Inayathalla Sahib (1), in which it was laid down that, if the parties to a criminal case pending in a criminal Court arrive at a compromise outside the Court and one of the parties resiles from it, it is competent to the Court to enquire whether or not the parties had settled their dispute, and if it finds that there has been a valid composition, the Court should pass an order of acquittal. In other words, the jurisdiction of the Court to go on with the trial of the case comes to an end when the parties have arrived at a valid compromise, vide Murray v. Queen-Empress (2) and Imperator v. Mulo (3). The reasoning of Mahomed Kanni Rowther v. Pattani Inayathalla Sahib (1), which was a case under S. 345 (1), Criminal P. C., is perfectly clear. Under sub-S. (1), S. 345, Criminal P. C., as soon as the parties have arrived at a compromise, the Magistrate has nothing more to do except to record a judgment of acquittal.

The case of S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C., is different and is not covered by any direct authority. In cases governed by this sub-section the permission of the Court before which a prosecution is pending is essential before the case can be validly compounded. The Magistrate, when the parties have come to a compromise, has to perform the judicial act of deciding whether in the interests of justice the parties should be allowed to compromise the offence with which the accused is charged. In Kumaraswami Chetty v. Kuppuswami Chetty (4), Abdul Rahim, J., who had delivered the principal judgment in Mahomed Kanni Rowther v. Pattani Inayathalla Sahib (1), referring to the cases coming under S. 345 (2), Criminal P. C, observed that the operation of the composition in these cases is necessarily suspended until the Court sanctions it. In other words, no effect can be given to a compromise as a plea in bar of conviction in cases covered by Cl. 2 unless the Court has given its sanction. Without the sanction of the Court, the so-called compromise arrived at between the parties, outside the Court, is of no legal effect and cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court dealing with the offence. The jurisdiction of the Court to try the case on the merits remains unaffected, and there is no rule of law, based either upon the express language of the legislature or deducible from any general principles which would enable the Court in a case falling under sub-S. (2), S. 345, Criminal P. C., to order an enquiry into the factum of compromise alleged by one of the parties and denied by the other.

This being so, we accept the recommendation of the learned District Magistrate and quash the order passed by the learned trying Magistrate dated 8th November 1926, and direct him to dispose of the case pending before him on its merits.

Shamair Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the Official Liquidator of the Indian Merchants Bank Ltd., Amritsar, against an order of the Additional District Judge of Amritsar, refusing to place on the list of contributories the name of Bawa Jogendra Singh, respondent.

The order is based on the finding that Jogindra Singh's application for shares was subject to a condition which was accepted by the Board of Directors but was not fulfilled and that Jogindra Singh had obtained an ex-parte decree against the bank for a refund of the money that he had paid with his application for shares. The alleged condition was that a branch of the bank would be opened at Muktsar for 12 months. A branch was opened but was closed after one month. One of the late directors of the bank appeared in the witness box and deposed that the condition set up by the respondent had been agreed upon. There was no evidence in rebuttal. So the finding that the alleged condition precedent was proved cannot be interfered with. Further there was a decree of a civil Court based upon that condition. The Official Liquidator, however, contends that the civil Court had no jurisdiction in the matter and refers to S 38, Companies Act, in support of his contention. But that section does not exclude from the jurisdiction of ordinary civil Courts a suit of the class in question. In Union Indian Sugar Mills v. Jai Deo (1) it was held on a construction of S. 38, Companies Act 1913, that the District Judge is not obliged to decide a question of title raised in a proceeding before him under this section. This indicates that the jurisdiction of civil Courts to decide questions falling within the purview of S. 8 is not excluded. The decree in question though ex parte is binding on the bank, and the Official Liquidator is not competent to impugn it. This being so the appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Badri Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The defendant petitioner Mt. Ram Rakhi by name, is the widow of the late Rai Sahib Lala Kundan Lal who, on 2nd November 1926, executed the will by which he bequeathed certain property to his son Mohan Lal, pleader, and Rs. 61,000 to his wife Mt Ram Rakhi. Shortly after his death Mt. Ram Rakhi applied for probate of the will. Mohan Lal, who is her stepson, opposed this application and instituted a suit for a declaration that the will was invalid. The dispute between the widow and Mohan Lal ended in a compromise according to which Mt. Ram Rakhi paid him Rs. 25,000 which he pocketed and withdrew his objection to the will. But soon after this settlement the suit (which is still pending) was instituted on behalf of the two infant sons of Mohan Lal to avoid the will as well as the compromise made by him. An application was filed along with the plaint for a temporary injunction under O. 39, R. 1, Civil P. C., to restrain the widow from withdrawing the moneys that were deposited by her husband in the Punjab National Bank and the Sahukara Bank respectively for payment to her. The trial Court refused this application but on appeal the learned District Judge has granted the temporary injunction prayed for.

The widow seeks revision of this order, and her learned counsel, Mr. Shamair Chand contends that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to make that order without recording a finding to the effect that the infant plaintiffs had a prima facie case. He argues that, as held by a Division Bench of this Court in Maya Wanti v. Salig Ram (1) the infant plaintiffs are bound by the compromise made by their father unless it was proved that the latter did not act bona fide in making it. In that case also a compromise was made by a Hindu father and it was contested by his sons. A Division Bench of this High Court observed as follows:

> It has been repeatedly laid down that a settlement of a doubtful claim by the father as the manager of the joint family entered into in good faith is binding upon his sons.

In the present case it is to be decided whether the plaintiffs are entitled to contest the compromise made by their father on the ground that it was not made bona fide. In the peculiar circumstances under which the suit has been instituted I am of opinion that the temporary injunction under O. 39, R. 1, Civil P. C., should not have been granted without recording a finding as to whether there is a bona fide contention between the parties and the plaintiffs have a prima facie case. The moneys in the two banks amount to Rs. 40,000 and not to Rs. 61,000 as stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge. There is nothing to indicate that the widow will waste this large amount or would be able to withold them if the plaintiffs should succeed in their suit. I, therefore, accept this petition for revision and set aside the order of the Court below. The plaintiff will pay the petitioner's costs in this Court.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under the Companies Act of 1913 against an order accepting an objection and relieving the objector of all liabilities as a share-holder of a bank. The objector was Lala Anup Chand, Advocate of Montgomery who had made an application for 100 shares of the Indian Merchants Bank Limited, but the bank went into liquidation before any shares had been allotted to him. He asserted that if he was given by the managing agent of the bank an assurance that a branch of the bank would be opend at Montgomery or Pakpattan and that he would be appointed a director thereof he would buy 100 shares and that his application for 100 shares was on that assurance. He claimed that he did not become the shareholder because the condition subject to which the application for shares was made was not fulfilled. He was corroborated on this point by the managing agent and two witnesses before whom the agreement had been made. No attempt was made to rebut that evidence The law is clear that if an application for shares is subject to a condition precedent the applicant incurs no liabilities if the condition remains unfulfilled. In this connexion the following may be cited : Peara Singh v. Peshawar Bank Ltd. (1) :

> I admit the correctness of the proposition of law and there is ample authority in English law in support of it that if a condition is precedent and has not been performed and its performance has not been waived the applicant for shares will not be a contributory. The finding in this case that there was a condition precedent is based on good evidence and cannot be interfered with.

The argument that no oral evidence was admissible in proof of the alleged condition because it was stated that it had been reduced to writing and the writing was not called for nor produced, is also untenable. The writing was in possession of the adverse party and from the nature of the case that party must have known that it will be required to produce it. As the said party denied the very existence of the condition it could not be expected that it would have produced the writing if, called upon to do so. The appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 10—The fact of insolvent's father being rich is not sufficient to prove his ability to pay—Full inquiry into the capacity or otherwise must be held.

What insolvent has to show is that prima facie his debts are more than Rs. 500 and that he is unable to pay the same. The fact that his father is a rich man, or that his father allows him to cultivate certain land is not sufficient to show that he can pay the debts alleged to be due by him. Insolvency Court must make a full enquiry and take evidence as to the existence of the debts, and as to the capacity of the insolvent to pay or not to pay these debts. [P 237 C 2]

Bodh Raj Sahni—for Appellant.

Judgment.—Thakar Singh, appellant, applied to be declared insolvent and the learned District Judge rejected his application holding that he was capable of paying his debts. There is absolutely no evidence on the record either of the existence of the debts or of his ability to pay or not to pay. The appellant, however, put in a list in which he asserted that his debts amounted in all to Rs. 1,635 and his assets were only Rs. 15. Four creditors contested this application alleging that two of the so-called creditors, namely, Nos. 5 and 7, were relatives of the debtor and were not really creditors at all. They did not, however, challenge the assertion about their own debts and these debts are by themselves sufficient to justify a petition in insolvency, as they amount to Rs. 955 in all. The assets of the petitioner are the Rs. 15 worth of articles that he states in his petition plus the fact that he is cultivating 7 ghumaons which evidently have been given to him by his father for this purpose. There is no evidence to show that the income of the 7 ghumaons is in one year sufficient to pay off all these debts.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and remand the case back to the District Judge for decision after a full enquiry and evidence taken as to the existence of the debts, and as to the capacity of the appellant to pay or not to pay these debts. It must be borne in mind that if the appellant is concealing any property, that may be taken into account when the question of his discharge comes up and if he has any property the income from which can be realized by him that income can be attached and the Court can see whether that is sufficient to pay off the debts. All that the would-be insolvent has to show is that prima facie his debts are more than Rs. 500 and that he is unable to pay the same. The fact that his father is a rich man, or that his father allows him to cultivate 7 ghumaons of land is not sufficient to show that he can pay the debts alleged due by him, or even the unchallenged debts without further evidence.

Judgment.—Tara Chand, minor, acting through his mother Mt. Gujri, moved the District Judge of Amritsar under Ss. 61/49, Trusts Act 2, 1882, asking that Sardar Harnam Singh, a trustee, should be ordered to deposit certain trust money in the Imperial Bank of Amritsar or otherwise to invest it in some approved securities. The learned District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the trustee except on a properly instituted suit and the petition was dismissed.

Against this order of dismissal the minor, through his mother, has come to this Court in revision, and it has been urged that the District Judge had jurisdiction. It was pointed out that under S. 49, Trusts Act, the District Judge, as the principal civil Court of original jurisdiction in Amritsar, was empowered to control the discretionary powers conferred on a trustee on suitable occasions arising and that the District Judge could function on a petition. In this view I am unable to agree. S. 49 appears in Ch. V and deals with disabilities of trustees. This section gives the District Judge power to control the actions of a trustee when it becomes necessary to do so. In the following Ch VI provision is made for the rights and the liabilities of beneficiaries and under S. 61 it has been enacted that a beneficiary has a right to compel a trustee to perform any particular act or to restrain him from committing any contemplated or probable breach of trust. The learned counsel who appeared for the petitioner admitted that the beneficiary could not move the Court under S. 61 in a summary manner. In my judgment the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct and is in consonance with Civil Revision No. 864 of 1926, decided by Mr Justice Coldstream on the 30th November 1926.

I, therefore, dismiss this petition with costs.

Second Appeal No. 389 of 1923, Decided on 7th January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 23rd January 1923.

Civil P. C., O. 2, R. 2—Different causes of action—Mortgaged land owned by different cosharers—All cosharers except one selling the whole land—Suit to pre-empt the whole land by the remaining cosharer but excluding his share—Subsequent suit for redemption in respect of that share is not barred.

The provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., only require that a suit shall include the whole of the claim with respect to one and the same cause of action and not that every suit shall include every claim of every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant at the time.

Certain land which was subject to a mortgage was jointly mutated in favour of the plaintiff and defendants as the reversioners of A. Subsequently defendants sold the whole of the land including the plaintiff's share to another person. The plaintiff instituted a pre-emption suit with respect to the share of the cosharers, but excluded his own share from the suit on the specific allegation that tho cosharers had no authority to transfer his share and the sale with respect to his share was, therefore, void. The pre-emption suit succeeded. Then plaintiff sued for redemption of the land.

Held: that the suit was not barred under O. 2, R. 2: 8 Mad. 520 and 41 I. A. 142 (P. C.). Foll.; 37 All. 529, Dist. [P 239 C 1]

Mool Chand—for Appellant.

Gokal Chand Narang—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of mortgage which has been dismissed by the lower Courts as barred by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. The land in dispute formed a portion of a holding of about 221 kanals of land which belonged to one Jawala Singh and was mortgaged by him to Sardarni Basant Kaur by a registered deed dated 19th May 1888.

On the death of Jawala Singh the land was jointly mutated in favour of the plaintiff and defendants 2—5 as the reversioners of Jawala Singh. Subsequently defendants 2—5 sold the whole of the land including the plaintiff's share to defendant 1. The plaintiff instituted a pre-emption suit with respect to the share of the cosharers, namely, defendants 2—5, but excluded his own share from the suit on the specific allegation that the cosharers had no authority to transfer his share, and the sale with respect to his share was, therefore, void, the pre-emption suit succeeded. The present suit for redemption was instituted on the 23rd February 1920. The confention of defendant 1 in the present suit was that the suit was barred by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., inasmuch as at the time when the plaintiffs instituted the pre-emption suit he had a right to sue for cancellation of the sale with respect to his own share and sue for redemption of the mortgage. This contention appears to us to be wholly erroneous. The sale of the plaintiff's share by defendants 2 to 5 being unauthorized (a fact which was not disputed in the pre-emption suit) we do not see why it was necessary at all for the plaintiff to sue for cancellation of the sale of his own share at that time. The cause of action, moreover, on which the present suit is based, is distinct from that in the pre-emption suit. "Cause of action" has been defined as a bundle of essential facts which a plaintiff has to prove in order to establish his claim : Musayakeb v. Mani Lal (1). Now, the essential facts which a plaintiff had to prove in a pre-emption suit are obviously different to those which he has to establish in a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., only require that a suit shall include the whole of the claim with respect to one and the same cause of action and not that every suit shall include every claim or every cause of action which the plaintiff may have against the defendant at the time : (see Pittapur Raja v. Surya Row (2) and Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (3).

(3) [1914] 41 I. A. 142=26 I. C. 228=18 C. W. N. 617 (P. C.).

The learned counsel for the respondents has cited Sahodra Bibi v. Bageshri (4) and attempted to support the decision of the lower Courts on the ground that the plaintiff was bound to sue for pre-emption of the whole of the property sold, although he alleged that the sale with respect to his own share was void. The present case is distinguishable from the ruling cited as it was not disputed by the defendants in the previous suit that the sale of the plaintiffs' share was unauthorized and, therefore, void ; but, even apart from this the contention seems to have no bearing on the issue now before us. The plea that, the plaintiff ought to have sued for pre-emption of the whole of the land sold, might have been at best a good defence to the pre-emption suit, but it cannot bar the present suit for redemption of a mortgage which, as pointed out above, is based on a different cause of action.

We accordingly accept the appeal and, setting aside the orders of the lower Courts, remand the case for decision of the remaining issues. The stamp on appeal will be refunded. Costs will follow the final decision.

Arms Act (9 of 1918), Ss. 27 and 19—Swordstick is not a kirpan.

A swordstick is a weapon different from a kirpan. The two expressions cannot be regarded as synonymous, and so the possession of a swordstick by a Sikh is not exempted by S. 27 of the Arms Act: A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 600, Ref. [P 240 C 1]

Niamat Rai—for Petitioner.

Anant Ram Khosla—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The petitioner, Randhir Singh, has been convicted under S. 19, Arms Act (11 of 1878), and has been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months. It is common ground that, on 23rd February 1927, Randhir Singh was found in possession of a large swordstick, but it is contended that he was protected by the notification issued by the Governor-General in Council under S. 27, Arms Act, which excludes kirpans possessed or carried by Sikhs from the operation of the prohibitions and directions contained in that Act.

The petitioner is undoubtedly a Sikh, but the question for determination is whether a swordstick, which he was admittedly carrying on 23rd February 1927, can be held to be a kirpan within the meaning of the notification. To this question our answer is in the negative. We are aware of the ruling in Hari Singh v. Crown (1), where a Division Bench of this Court held that the word "kirpan" means a sword, but we cannot accede to the contention that it is wide enough to include a swordstick. A swordstick is a weapon different from a kirpan, and the two expressions cannot be regarded as synonymous.

It is significant that in the Court of trial Magistrate no such contention was put forward on behalf of the accused, and that before the learned Sessions Judge it was admitted that the conviction under S. 19 was justified, but it was urged that the sentence be reduced. This prayer was accepted by the learned Sessions Judge, and the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment imposed by the trial Court was reduced to that of six months imprisonment.

We are of opinion that the petitioner has been rightly convicted; but, considering that he was released on bail by the learned Judge who admitted the case, we accept the application for revision so far as to reduce the period of imprisonment to that already undergone.

Misc. First Appeal No. 727 of 1927, Decided on 6th December 1927, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 15th December 1926.

(a) Companies Act (7 of 1913), S. 55—Member cannot surrender his share and company cannot accept the surrender except as forfeiture.

The principle applicable to cases of surrender is that a surrender is good if it amounts to a forfeiture. It is not open to shareholder to surrender at will his share and it is not open to a company to accept surrender of shares unless the act of the company can be brought within the rules relating to forfeiture of shares. To hold that a company can by a resolution of its directors accept surrender of shares would be to allow a company to reduce its capital at its pleasure : A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 703 and Bellerby v. Rowland Marwood's Steamship Co. Ld. (1902) 2 Ch. 14, Foll. In re Natal Investment Co.(1870) 5 Ch. App. 22, Dist. [P 241 C 2]

(b) Company—Shareholder whose shares are forfeited ceases to be member but not one surrendering shares.

A share-holder whose shares are forfeited ceases to be a member but a share-holder who surrenders his share does not cease to be a member. [P 241 C 2]

Badri Dass—for Appellant.

Ram Lal Anand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The Official Liquidator of the "Indian Merchants Bank, Limited Amritsar, having placed on the list of contributories the name of Mangal Sen, Chumandi Lal Natha Singh and Jas Ram, every one of them filed objections to the effect that he had ceased to be a member of the company and was not liable to contribute as he had surrendered his shares and the Board of Directors had accepted the surrender which it was competent to do under R. 43 of the Articles of Association. The Court below overruled this objection on the general ground that the "surrenders (acceptance of the "surrenders ?) of the objectors' partly paid-up shares (shares ?) and for (?) forfeiture of their allotment money (moneys ?) by the Head Board of Directors was (were) unnecessary and ultra vires as it was in substance a reduction by the company of the shares at the price (?) of discharging the shareholders from further liability to calls.' The objectors have appealed against the above order separately.

The law on the subject is thus reviewed and discussed by Devadoss, J. in Mirza Ahmad In re (1).

Granting for argument's sake that the resolution is according to the rules, I am unable to accept the contention that the surrender of shares is permitted by law so as to enable the Directors of the Company to reduce its capital.

Rule 118 (5) gives powers to the directors to accept surrender of shares by shareholders; but this power which is an unusual power, granting that it is valid, is subject to restrictions; Table A of the Companies Act does not contain any clauses empowering any company to accept surrender of shares. The Companies Act permits forfeiture of shares on certain grounds; but to give an unlimited or wide power to a company to accept surrender of share is, I think, opposed to the principle that a company cannot buy its own shares and to the principle that a company can reduce its capital only with the permission of the Court and on such terms and conditions as it may impose. The power given by R. 118 (5) is very wide. It is in these terms:

> to accept from any member on such terms and conditions as shall be agreed a surrender of his shares or stock or part thereof.

Whatever might have been the view as regards the power of a company to accept surrender of shares, I think it is well settled now that a company cannot exercise wide powers of accepting a surrender. It can only accept a surrender under conditions and limitations under which shares can be forfeited. Reliance is placed upon Snell's case In re Natal Investment Co. (2). In that case Sir G. M. Griffard, Lord Justice, held that the surrender of shares by Snell was valid. The main reason for the learned Lord Justice holding that Snell's surrender was valid was that his name was not entered on the register of shareholders and that no specific shares were allotted to him though for purposes of the Act he was a shareholder. He found that the substance of the transaction was that both parties were offering to sever their connexion with each other and that the Articles of Association contained a power to cancel shares and that there was nothing in the form preventing the parties from carrying out their intention. Snell's case (2) cannot be considered to be good law in view of the decision of the Court of appeal in Bellerby v. Rowland and Marwood's Steamship Co. Ltd. (3) at p. 32. Cozens Hardy, L. J., lays down the law thus :

> Every surrender of shares, whether fully paid or not, involves a reduction of capital, which is unlawful, except when sanctioned by the Court under the Companies Act of 1867 and 1877. Forfeiture is statutory exception, and is the only exception. For I regard a surrender under circumstances which would justify a forfeiture, as merely equivalent to a forfeiture.

Collins, M. R. quotes with approval the following observation of the learned Master of the Rolls in In re Dronfield Silkstone Coal Co. (4).

> There is no reference in the Act to surrenders of shares ; but these have been admitted by the Courts, upon the principle, as I understand it that they have practically the same effect as forfeiture, the main difference being that the one is a proceeding in invitum, and the other a proceeding taken with the assent of the shareholders who is unable to retain and pay future calls on the shares.

The principle, therefore, applicable to cases of surrender is that a surrender is good if it amounts to a forfeiture. It is not open to shareholder to surrender at will his share, especially when he has to meet future calls and it is not open to a company to accept surrender of shares unless the act of the company can be brought within the rules relating to forfeitures of shares. To hold that a company can by a resolution of its directors accept surrender of shares would be to allow a company to reduce its capital at its pleasure.

In the present case also there was a rule empowering the directors to accept surrenders of shares but according to the general principles: (1) that a surrender of shares involves a reduction of the capital; and (2) that the capital of a company cannot be reduced but by leave of the Court, no surrender can be lawfully accepted but under circumstances which would justify a forfeiture. There is nothing to indicate that the surrenders of shares by the objectors were accepted under such circumstances. According to the Companies Act a shareholder ceases to be a member whose shares are forfeited. It is nowhere laid down that a shareholder who surrenders his share ceases to be a member. It cannot, therefore, be said that the objectors ceased to be members as contemplated by S. 156, Contract Act. I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Amir Chand—for Appellants.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Jai Gopal Sethu—for Respondents.

Judgment.—One Kishan Chand, a Khatri of Amritsar,died sonless many years ago, leaving him surviving two widows Mt. Bishen Devi and Mt. Har Kaur (defendant 1) and two daughters by Bishan Devi mamed Mt. Bal Kaur (plaintiff 1) and Mt. Ram Kaur (plaintiff 3). One of the properties left by the deceased was a shop which was jointly taken possession of by both the widows Mt. Bishan Devi and Mt. Har Kaur. On 19th April 1912 Mt. Bishan Devi made a gift of her half-share in the shop to her daughters Mt. Bal Kuar and Mt. Ram Kaur and their sons Om Parkash (plaintiff 2) and Gopal Das (plaintiff 4), Mt. Bishan Devi, died soon after on 9th June 1912.

The other widow, Mt. Har Kaur, sold the whole of the shop to Ghulam Jilani, defendant 2, on 16th December 1916. There have been subsequent alienations of this shop and it now stands in the name of Kishan Chand defendant 5. On 8th October 1925 the present suit was instituted by the two daughters of Mt. Bishen Devi and the two sons of these daughters claiming (a) possession of one half of the shop which had been gifted to the plaintiffs by Mt. Bishan Devi on 19th April 1912; and (b) a declaration that the sale of the other half by Mt. Har Kaur dated 16th December 1916 shall not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs after her death. The suit was decreed by the trial Court but has been dismissed by the learned District Judge.

On second appeal, the first point urged by Mr. Amin Chand for the appellants is that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession of one-half of the shop which had been gifted to them by Mt. Bishen Devi. He contends, and in my opinion rightly, that the finding of the learned District Judge, that possession of the gifted portion of the shop did not pass to the donees in 1912, is a very confused one and has not been arrived at after a discussion of the oral and documentary evidence on the record. If the decision of this part of the case had turned on this point alone, it would have been necessary for this Court to set aside the finding and to order a remand or to go into the evidence itself and record an independent finding. But the plaintiffs' claim for possession of this portion of the shop must fail on the short ground that Mt. Bishan Devi had no power to make a valid gift of it to the appellants. On Kishan Chand's death the shop was taken possession of by the two widows jointly as co-heirs. The proposition of Hindu Law is firmly established that when two co-widows succeed as co-heirs to the estate of their husband they take it as joint tenants with rights of survivorship and of equal beneficial enjoyment, and an alienation made by one of such co-widows has no legal effect after her death. Even if it was a fact that the donees had got possession of Mt. Bishan Devi's half-share in 1912, that fact alone would not make the gift valid, especially when they, according to their learned counsel, lost possession in 1916 at the latest. The gift was, therefore, invalid and the plaintiffs' claim for immediate possession on the basis of this gift fails. It follows from what has been stated above that on Mt. Bishan Devi's death in 1912 Mt. Har Kaur entered into possession of the whole of the shop on the usual widow's estate. It is not denied for the respondents that her rights in the shop were limited and she could sell it only for legal necessity. The reversioners would, therefore, be entitled to claim a declaration that the sale of 1916 was ineffectual against their interests. The learned District Judge has, however, declined to grant the plaintiffs a declaration holding:

(a) that plaintiffs 1 and 3, being the step-daughters of Mt. Har Kaur, had no locus standi to sue; and

(b) that plaintiffs 2 and 4, not being the immediate reversioners, had six years to sue for a declaration under Art. 120, and not having sued within that period their claim was time barred.

As to (a): Mr. Mehr Chand, for the respondents admits that he is unable to support the view of the learned District Judge that the daughters could not maintain a declaratory suit regarding an alienation effected by their stepmother. He frankly concedes that on the death of Mt. Har Kaur the property would descend to the heirs of her husband Kishan Chand and that Mt. Bal Kaur and Mt. Ram Kaur being his daughters are under Hindu law entitled to succeed to it. They are, therefore, his reversioners and have got a locus standi to contest the alienation made by their stepmother Mt. Har Kaur. The finding of the District Judge on this point must be reversed, but before the plaintiffs can get a decree it must be found that the alienation was not for necessity. As the learned District Judge has not given any finding on this issue, the case must go back to him for this purpose.

As regards the claim of the daughter's sons (plaintiffs 2 and 4) the learned District Judge has held that it was barred by time under Art. 120. Mr. Amin Chand for the appellants contends that the claim of these plaintiffs is also within time under Art. 125. But that article applies only to a suit for a declaration by the immediate reversioners of the female alienor; see Mt. Thakri v. Mt. Ganeshi (1). The daughters' sons are under Hindu law not entitled to succeed in the lifetime of their mothers (plaintiffs 1 and 3) and, therefore, are not the immediate reversioners of the alienor. Their suit for declaration is governed by Art. 120, and in clearly time barred.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal of plaintiff 2 (Om Parkash) and plaintiff 4 (Gopal Das), but accept that of plaintiff 1 (Mt. Bal Kaur) and plaintiff 3 (Mt. Ram Kaur) holding that they can maintain a suit for declaration that the sale of the whole of the shop by Mt. Har Kaur shall not affect their reversionary rights after her death, and setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court, so far as these appellants are concerned, remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, for decision in accordance with law. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case the parties shall bear their own costs of the litigation hitherto incurred.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1717 of 1927, Decided on 13th January 1928, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Muzaffargarh, D/- 2nd September 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 107—Mere enmity between parties is not sufficient—It must be proved that a breach of the peace is imminent.

Mere existence of enmity between the persons of factions is no ground for instituting proceedings under S. 107 against one or both the parties. In order to bring a case within that section it must be established that a breach of the peace is imminent. [P 244 C 1, 2]

Nand Lal—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner Parman Ram has been bound down under S. 107, Criminal P. C., and ordered to execute a bond in the sum of Rs. 1,000 to keep the peace for one year, or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for the same period. His appeal has been dismissed by the learned District Magistrate, Muzaffargarh, and he has come up to this Court on the revision side.

The allegations against the petitioner are that he has been carrying on a liaison with one Mt. Bhirawan, the wife of Fazal who is a tenant of his; that Fazal had been conniving at the conduct of his wife; that lately Mt. Bhirawan had formed an intrigue with one Sardara and that the petitioner, in order to keep Sardara away from the woman had instigated Ramzan chowkidar, to make a false complaint to the police that Sardara and his cousins were men of bad character and ought to be proceeded against under S. 110, Criminal P. C. The complaint made by Ramzan was found to be baseless by the police who reported that it had been made at the instance of the petitioner with a view to keep Sardara away from the woman. On this suspicion proceedings under S. 107, Criminal P. C., were started against the petitioner.

It is obvious that the above allegations, even if true, are wholly insufficient to justify action being taken against the petitioner under S. 107. The trial Magistrate has stated that if security be not taken from the petitioner there is a danger of his administering poison to Sardara and his cousin Fazil. I have gone through the record and cannot find any suggestion by any of the prosecution witnesses that there is apprehension of poison being administered to Sardara. The evidence, in fact, wholly falls short of showing that there was any likelihood of a breach of the peace. The learned District Magistrate has relied on the evidence of Ahmad Yar Khan, Sub-Inspector (P. W. 1), Raushan Ali, lambardar (P. W. 2), and Ghulam Yasin (P. W. 3). But none of them deposes to any incident from which it might be inferred that there was danger of a breach of the peace. The fourth witness, Amir Shah, instead of supporting the case for the prosecution has given evidence in favour of the defence.

The mere fact that the petitioner's intrigue with the wife of his tenant had been interrupted by her transferring her affection to Sardara and that the petitioner had instigated the chowkidar to institute a false complaint against the said Sardara cannot justify the petitioner being put on security. It has been pointed out over and over again by this and the other Courts that the mere existence of enmity between the persons or factions is no ground for instituting proceedings under S. 107 against one or both the parties. In order to bring a case within that section it must be established that a breach of the peace is imminent On the present record I can find nothing to warrant such an apprehension.

The procedure adopted by the trial Court is defective in several particulars, but I do not think it necessary to advert to it as the petition must succeed on the merits. I, accordingly, accept the petition, set aside the order of the Courts below and discharge the petitioner from his bond.

Din Dayal Kapur—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a petition for revision of an order dismissing an application under Ss. 152 and 151, Civil P. C., for amendment of certain alleged clerical and arithmetical mistakes in the judgment and decree passed in favour of the plaintiff in 1922 on foot of a mortgage.

For the respondents two preliminary objections are raised. Firstly, it is contended that this petition for revision had not been properly instituted as Sobhi Charan Singh, Advocate, who filed the petition as the mukhtar khas of the petitioner had not been authorized in the mukhtarnama to institute a petition for revision. I have referred to the mukhtarnama which is on the record and find that it authorized the mukhtar to prefer an appeal to this Court. Technically speaking the power to prefer a revision is not specifically given in the mukhtarnama but, in my opinion, the power to prefer an appeal to this Court must be liberally interpreted and it must be held that Sodhi Charan Singh was competent to lodge a petition for revision. I, therefore, overrule this objection.

Secondly, it is objected that an application for correction of the alleged clerical and arithmetical mistakes was presented by the petitioner on 18th November 1924, and after notice to the respondent was dismissed on the merits on 11th December 1924. In these circumstances it is contended that another application for substantially the same relief is not competent. I have heard the learned counsel for both parties in respect of the alleged arithmetical mistakes which are stated to have accidentally crept in the judgment and have also examined the application for amendment, dated 18th November 1924, above referred to. In my opinion the two applications are substantially the same and in view of the decision of the previous application and the long delay in presenting the present application the lower Court was justified in dismissing it. As laid down in Langat Singh v. Janki Koer (1), a Court is competent to entertain successive applications for amendment of clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments or decrees and a decision on a prior application of this kind does not operate as res judicata in subsequent applications, but if an application for amendment has been heard and disposed of on the merits, the Court will not, except in exceptional circumstances, entertain a subsequent application for substantially the same relief. In my opinion no such exceptional circumstances are made out in this case.

I, therefore, hold that the order of the lower Court was correct and dismiss the petition for revision. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, however, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs in both the Courts.

Criminal Case No. 5 of 1927, Decided on 20th March 1928, for setting aside order of Governor-in-Council D/- 2nd May 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 99-A—Crown must prove possibility of conviction under S. 153-A, I. P. C.

In order to justify forfeiture under S. 99-A it is necessary for the Government to satisfy the Court that on the evidence produced by the prosecution a conviction could have been had under S. 153-A, I. P. C. [P 246 C 2]

Ram Lal Anand—for Petitioner

Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—This is an application by Lala Lajpat Rai, proprietor of Messrs. Lajpat Rai & Sons, Book-sellers, Lohari Gate, Lahore, under the provisions of S. 99-B, Criminal P. C., asking that an order of the Governor-in-Council dated 2nd May 1927, whereby a certain book entitled "Khun-i-Darvesh Urf Shahid Sanyasi" was forfeited, be set aside and that the copies forfeited be directed to be returned to the petitioner. The learned Government Advocate on the one side, and the petitioner's counsel on the other, were given time within which to produce evidence in the form of affidavits to show on the one hand the wrongful intent of the petitioner in publishing this book, and on the other hand to rebut such intent.

On behalf of the Crown a certain number of persons have put their signatures to typed documents, which are in a common form, in which they purport to state that they have read the book in question and that it is such as would create hatred, contempt and enmity between Hindus and Muslims. Although these affidavits are in English some of the signatures of the alleged deponents are in vernacular, and I may say at once that evidence in this shape is of no value whatsoever. The learned Government Advocate has frankly and quite properly admitted that the evidence of malicious intent is to be found, if anywhere, in the book itself.

Mr. Ram Lal Anand has put in an affidavit sworn to by the son of the deceased petitioner in which he states that 2,000 copies of the book in question were printed on 1st March 1927, for the Urdu Edition and 2,000 for the Hindi edition and that with the exception of 500 copies all have been sold out. He states that the publication elicited no protest whatever from any quarter, nor was any article written against it in any newspaper, nor was it condemned at any meeting. This statement has not been controverted, and there is no allegation in the affidavits filed on behalf of the Crown that the book in question was the subject of any demonstration or that it excited any communal feeling whatsoever.

The question for us to decide is whether there is inherent evidence in the work itself of an intent in the mind of the writer to promote, or attempt to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between Hindus and Musalmans. It is alleged by Mr. Ram Lal that the object of the writer was to write a life of the late Swami Shradha Nand, and in doing so to preach love of country and promote Hindu-Muslim unity. He says that the book throughout shows this intent and that nowhere is the Muslim religion, or the leader of that faith, criticized in intemperate language, or indeed at all. He says that any criticizms in the book directed against persons of the Muslim faith are against those who do not act up to the true faith of Islam. The book is written in a lofty and dignified style and contains many passages of literary excellence and, indeed, beauty, which even the bald official translation has not quite destroyed, and there is nothing in the language of the work of an objectionable nature except in one or two sentences. In these passages the language is certainly bitter and scathing, but Mr. Ram Lal argues that it is directed against some Muhammadan Journals which are alleged in the play to be attacking the Shudhi work of Swami Shradha Nand, and he points out that the Muslim community as a whole is nowhere attacked. In fact the Muslim religion is praised throughout the work and the murderer of the Swami is alleged to have been incited to his act by the devil.

Having been taken through this work by Mr. Ram Lal and having listened to his extremely able argument, I am unable to hold that from the nature of the work itself it has been established that the intention of the writer was to promote, or attempt to promote, feelings of enmity or hatred between the two communities. I do not think there is any need to refer to the law on the subject. In order to justify forfeiture under S. 99-A, Criminal P. C., it is necessary for the Government Advocate to satisfy the Court that on the evidence produced by the prosecution a conviction could have been had under S. 153-A, I. P. C. In my judgment the evidence produced, which in effect consists of the book itself, would not be sufficient to justify such a conviction.

We have been referred to Chakravarti v. Emperor (1), which has been followed by this Court in the "Vartman" case* with approval, and I need only say that the principles laid down by Rankin, J., (now Chief Justice) appear to me to be entirely sound. Having come to the conclusion that the Crown has failed to establish that the writer of this work had been actuated by that malicious intent which it is necessary to prove by extrinsic evidence, or to infer from the nature of the work itself, I would accept the application of the petitioner and set aside the order of forfeiture. I would give applicant his costs. Counsel's fees will be measured at Rs. 250.

Addison, J.—I concur.

Coldstream, J.—After carefully considering this case I do not find it certainly established by the evidence that the intention of the applicant in writing the book under consideration or any part of it was to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects. For that reason I concur in the order which it is proposed to pass.

Judgment. — According to the bond sued one Charagh Din was the principal debtor and Nur Ilahi and Allah Ditta were his sureties. One of the sureties died and the obligee brought a suit against the principal debtor and the surety who was alive, and the sons of the other, to recover his bond debt. The principal debtor also died during the pendency of the suit but his death was not brought to the notice of the trial Court and that Court eventually passed a decree against all the defendants. On appeal by one of them it was argued that the decree against the principal debtor was a nullity, having been passed after his death without bringing his legal representatives on the record that as the suit has abated against the principal debtor by the omission of the plaintiff the sureties were discharged. The learned Additional District Judge, who heard the appeal accepted this contention and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has come up to this Court in second appeal and it is argued on his behalf that though the suit had abated as against the principal debtor the sureties were not discharged. The principle of law applicable to the case is embodied in S. 134, Contract Act (9 of 1872). The relevant portion of the section runs thus :

The surety is discharged * * by any act or omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor.

Now the legal consequence of the omission on the part of the creditor to bring the legal representatives of the principal debtor on the record was that he (the creditor) had no remedy left against his representatives, that is to say, they were discharged. The section is so clear that no other interpretation can be placed upon it.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Custom (Punjab)—Chelas and Sials of village Chela—A sonless proprietor can alienate only for necessity.

Chelas and Sials of village Chela are governed by the ordinary custom prevailing in the province that a sonless proprietor can only alienate his property for necessity. [P 248 C 2]

Muhammad Munir, Anant. Ram and Shiv Charan Das for Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Appellants.

Broadway, J.—One Naman a Chela of mauza Chela in the district of Jhang on 11th March 1921, mortgaged 114 kanals 7 marlas of land to Khan Bahadur Nawab Maula Dad Khan, Honorary Magistrate, and one Hidayat. The mortgage was not to be redeemed for 30 years and the charge on the property was to the extent of Rs. 1,000.

On 30th March 1921, Naman executed a sale-deed by which he sold the same land, that had been mortgaged, to Lohla, Walli, Pathana and Ghulam Hussain for Rs. 3,500. The vendees undertook to redeem the mortgage when it became redeemable, that is, after 30 years. On 2nd May 1922, one Fatta, a first cousin of Naman, instituted a suit against the mortgagees and vendees challenging both the mortgage and the sale on the ground that the property mortgaged and sold was ancestral, that both the sale and mortgage had been without consideration and for no necessity and praying for a declaration to the effect that the sale and mortgage would not affect his reversionary rights on the death of Nawan. The alienees joined in contesting the suit. They denied that the property was ancestral, pleaded full consideration and valid necessity and also urged that inasmuch as the tribal bond in this village had been broken Naman had an unrestricted right to alienate his property.

The trial Court held that the property was ancestral, that the tribal bond had indeed been broken, nevertheless, on the evidence Naman was governed by custom and that he being a sonless proprietor his right to alienate was restricted. On the question of consideration it was found that only Rs. 600 of the mortgage consideration appeared to have passed and there was no necessity for that or any other amount. The plaintiff was accordingly granted a decree.

Against this decree the mortgagees and vendees have preferred this joint appeal and Mr. Muhammad Munir has taken us through the relevant portions of the record with meticulous care. It has been urged that the evidence on the record did not warrant the conclusion that the property was ancestral; further that inasmuch as it had been found that the tribal bond had been broken, the unrestricted right to alienate should have been recognized. Finally, it was urged that at least Rs. 600 out of the Rs. 1,000 which formed the consideration for the mortgage should have been allowed as being for necessity on the ground that it, at any rate, was a previous debt.

Now the evidence with regard to the ancestral nature of the property appears to me to be conclusive. The history of the village shows that it was founded by one Chela and that the village was called after his name. It is true that the case was not very well handled in the Court below by the various counsel concerned with the result that it became necessary to examine the kanungo more than once. Taking his evidence as a whole, as Mr. Muhammad Munir says we ought to do, the impression left on my mind is that according to the revenue-papers Chela is undoubtedly the ancestor of the plaintiff Fatta and the alienor Naman and as Chela owned the entire village. I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the Senior Subordinate Judge that the property in suit is ancestral qua the plaintiff.

Next it was urged that as the tribal bond had been broken the presumption of a restricted right to alienate had been rebutted. That appears to have been fully recognized by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge who has clearly come to his conclusion in this part of the case on the evidence led by the plaintiff. A large number of sales and mortgages nearly 300 in all appear to have been effected within the last 35 years and it is these sales and mortgages which account to a large extent for the heterogenous state of the village. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge points out in his judgment that none of these sales and mortgages were shown to have been effected by sonless proprietors in the presence of any collaterals. I have asked Mr. Muhammad Munir to select out of the long list of alienations one which could be said to have been effected by a sonless proprietor but Mr. Muhammad Munir very frankly and very properly admitted that it was impossible for him to do so. On the other hand, the plaintiff has led oral evidence consisting of members of the same tribe, and, in some instances, family, who agree in asserting that they, Chelas and Sials, in this village are governed by the ordinary custom prevailing in the province and that a sonless proprietor can only alienate his property for necessity. After an examination of this evidence which includes two instances proved up to this Court in 1900 and 1917 I find myself in agreement with the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and hold that these Chela and Sials are not allowed to alienate their ancestral propeary except for necessity. It should, of course, be understood that I am confining my finding to sonless proprietors.

As to the question of the allowance of Rs. 600 it appears that Rs. 600 were claimed by Lohla to whom this amount was to be paid by the Nawab Sahib when he executed the mortgage. Curiously enough, it is this very Lohla who is one of the vendees when the sale-deed was executed 20 days later. Having regard to all these circumstances, I am afraid I must agree with the learned Senior Subordinate Judge in thinking that the whole of this transaction, mortgage and sale included, is a highly suspicious one. Lohla's debt, in my opinion, cannot be traced as a just antecedent debt, and as it has not been proved to be separately for necessity, I do not think we can interfere with the decision of the Court below. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal, but, as there has been no representation on the other side, without costs.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

The sale, however, was continued till the morning of the 26th at the request of the judgment-debtor. That day the last bid was of Rs. 4,450, but when the property was going to be knocked down to the purchaser, he refused to sign his bid and said he withdrew from it. Judgment.—The decree-holder appellant attached certain immovable property of his judgment-debtors and the auction sale was fixed for 23rd August 1926. On that day no bid was obtained and the sale was continued to the 24th when certain bids were obtained. It was again continued to the 25th when the last bid was one of Rs. 4,200 made by the decree-holder. The sale, however, was continued till the morning of the 26th at the request of the judgment-debtor. That day the last bid was of Rs. 4,450, by one Gurbakhsh Singh, a vakil of this Court. When the property was going to be knocked down to him, however, he refused to sign his bid and said he withdrew from it. He also refused to deposit one-fourth of the amount of his bid. The nazir who was auctioning the property did not close the sale, but reported the matter to the executing Court for orders. The Court, instead of ordering a resale forthwith at the risk of Gurbakhsh Singh, commenced the usual dilatory investigation. On the 2nd of October it ordered a resale to take place after a fresh proclamation and the property was sold to the decree-holder for Rs. 4,025 on the 17th November. Before the executing Court Gurbakhsh Singh admitted that he gave the bid but explained that he withdrew it, this of course being no explanation. The executing Court refused to make him pay the difference of price amounting to Rs. 425, on the ground that the auctioneer should not have adjourned the sale till the 26th, and on a further ground that the auctioneer should have proceeded with the sale and should not have concluded the auction. Against this decision the judgment-debtors and decree-holder have appealed.

Both the reasons given by the executing Court are wrong. The sale was not conducted in or within the precincts of the Court-house and the officer conducting it had discretion to adjourn the sale to the 26th under O. 21, R. 69, Civil P. C. Further, the officer conducting the sale did not close the auction, but reported the matter for the orders of the executing Court and it gave no order as it should have done. The order it should have given was that the property be resold forthwith under O. 21, R. 84, Civil P. C. Unfortunately this appeal cannot, however, be accepted as the resale did not take place forthwith within the meaning of O. 21, R. 84. If it had, Gurbakhsh Singh would have been liable for the deficiency on the resale under O. 21, R. 71, Civil P. C.

It was contended that no appeal lay. This is clearly wrong, as it was held in the Full Bench Allahabad case, Sita Ram v. Janki Ram (1), that such an order was appealable. In that case the highest bidder failed to deposit 25 per cent of the purchase money, and in consequence the property was resold next day. It was held that the resale had been held forthwith within the meaning of O. 21, R. 84, Civil P. C., and the first purchaser was liable to make good the deficiency of the purchase money. In the present case the officer conducting the sale could have gone on with the resale, but instead of doing so he reported the matter to the executing Court which also could have passed the necessary order for resale forthwith. Had this been done Gurbakhsh Singh could have been held liable. He seems to have been trying to raise the bid made by the decree-holder, and when the decree-holder did not give another bid he promptly refused to ratify his own bid by depositing the 25 per cent. Such conduct of a vakil of this Court is most regrettable. For the reasons given, however, I dismiss this appeal but leave parties to bear their own costs.

Moti Sagar and Nanak Chand—for Appellants.

Mukand Lal and Shambu Lal Puri—for Respondents.

Agha Haidar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of land measuring 292½ kanals detailed and described in the plaint. The Court below decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendants-appellants have come up in appeal to this Court.

The fact are briefly these : The plaintiff is the son of one Muhammada. On 21st September 1897, Muhammada had mortgaged with possession 443 kanals of land to one Gurdit Singh for a sum of Rs. 183. On 21st October 1899, Muhammada mortgaged the same land in favour of two persons, namely, Mohar Singh and Sukha Singh, for Rs. 766 out of which Rs. 530 were to bear interest at 1% per mensem. As regards the remaining sum of Rs. 236 the mortgagees were let into possession and the interest on this sum was to be paid by the mortgagees realizing the income of the land. The mortgagees under the terms of the mortgage were to pay the sum of Rs. 290 to Gurdit Singh in satisfaction of the previous mortgage. This mortgage of 21st October 1899 was for a fixed term of 18 years and contains a distinct provision to the effect that the mortgagor shall have no power to redeem the land before the expiry of the fixed term. Muhammada died some time after the execution of this mortgage leaving him surviving his son, Allah Yar, who was an infant of very tender years at the time and his widow, Mt. Bakhtawar. One Raja, son of Allah Dad, was the maternal uncle of the infant, Allah Yar. He professed to be the lawful guardian of Allah Yar, minor, and in that capacity, on 15th April 1908, he executed a sale-deed of the property in suit (292½ kanals) in favour of Ziada, son of Dadu, defendant 1, and Raja who is represented in the present suit by defendants 2 and 3. This sale-deed is Ex. P. 11.

After reciting that the property of the minor was heavily encumbered and was in fact in the possession of Aya Singh, son of Mohar Singh, and Harnam Singh, son of Sukha Singh, mortgagees, it goes on to say that it would be to the interest of the minor if the property in suit were sold so that a portion of the property subject to the prior mortgage may become free from encumbrance and be available for the maintenance of the minor. It is further provided in this document that it shall be the duty of the vendees to redeem the entire mortgaged land measuring 443½ kanals from Aya Singh and Harnam Singh, the previous mortgagees, either privately or through Court and to obtain proprietary possession of the land retaining 292½ kanals for themselves and delivering possession of the remainder, i. e., "151 kanals" to the minor Allah Yar. This sale-deed was for a sum of Rs. 3,000, and the details of the consideration as given at the foot of the document are as follows :

To be paid by the vendees to Aya Singh, etc., sons of Mohar Singh and Harnam Singh, etc., sons of Sukha Singh Sadana, residents of Vijh, previous mortgagees, from whom 443¾ (?) kanals of land (mortgaged) will be redeemed out of the said land 292½ kanals (sold) will come into proprietary possession of the vendees and possession of the remaining redeemed land will be delivered to the said minor.... Rs. 1,300.

To be paid by the vendees to Tara Chand, son of Mutwala Ram Nangpal, resident of Vijh, on account of mortgage money for the mortgaged land attached to Pindiwala well and unsecured debt. (A receipt for the redemption money and the debt discharged due by the father of the minors, will be secured), ... Rs. 575.

Received a rukka from Raja vendee and Umar Bakhsh son of Zaida, vendee, in the name of Zaida, vendee, the money due under the rukka being payable on demand ... ... Rs. 550.

Received on account of registration expenses ... ... Rs. 50

To be received in cash before the Sub-Registrar, Shahpur ... ... Rs. 525

There is a receipt dated 26th October 1908 (Ex. D. 7), which is printed at p. 15 of the record. In this receipt the prior mortgagees, that is to say, the representatives of Mohar Singh and Sukha Singh, after referring to the mortgage of 21st October 1899, state that the total amount due under the said mortgage came to Rs. 2,900. They further say that the money due from Allah Yar, minor, to them on calculation came to Rs. 562 on account of profits of harvests for the remaining nine years and Rs. 572 on account of interest up to date. Out of this total sum of Rs. 1,134 they acknowledge having received Rs. 599 from certain other persons not parties to the suit, and as regards the remaining amount they admit having received Rs. 1,300 from Zaida, etc., vendees of the land in suit, and at the end of the document they state that the mortgaged land has been released.

The present suit was brought by Allah Yar on 8th November 1920 for possession of 292½ kanals of land on the allegation that the sale-deed of 15th April 1908, was executed by Raja, defendant 4, his maternal uncle, in favour of defendant 1, and his brother Raja, the ancestor of defendants 2 and 3, without any legal authority and that the sale was effected without any valid necessity or benefit to the minor. In para. 5 of the plaint the plaintiff alleges that the land in suit, together with other land was under possessory mortgage with Mohar Singh and Sukha Singh for 18 years, i. e., up to 31st October 1917, and that, therefore, the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff after 31st October 1917. There is a further allegation that the plaintiff at the date of the suit was 20½ years old and, therefore, the suit was within time.

A written statement was filed by Zaida, the original vendee, and Amir, the son of the other vendee Raja, the brother of Zaida. First and foremost it is pleaded that the suit was barred by time. There is the further plea that the sale was for the benefit of the minor and for valid necessity and that the land in suit, together with other land, i. e. 443½ kanals, was mortgaged with the sons of Mohar Singh, etc., for a certain period, so that the plaintiff had no right to redeem the said land before 31st October 1917. It was also urged that at the time of the sale the plaintiff had no means of livelihood and that some other land was redeemed from one Tara Chand, mortgagee, and made over to the plaintiff.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff was born in Phagan Sambat 1956 (i. e. 1899), and that the suit having been brought in November 1920 the plaintiff was under 21 years of age at the date of the suit. It further found that, as the mortgage could not be redeemed till 21st October 1917, the plaintiff could not sue for possession till the expiry of the period of 18 years, counted from 21st October 1899, and that, therefore, on this ground also the suit was within limitation. It also held that neither under the Mahomedan law nor under the riwaj-i-am Raja, the maternal uncle of the plaintiff, had any authority to sell the minor's property and that the sale was, therefore, void and of no effect. At the conclusion of his judgment the learned Senior Subordinate Judge observed that the plaintiff was entitled to get a decree for possession of the land in suit, so far as the sale-deed Ex. P-11 was concerned, free from all payment, and finished off his judgment by the cryptic remark that, having regard to the provisions of Ss. 38 and 41, Specific Relief Act, the vendees are entitled to claim that the parties should be relegated to the position which they held on 15th April 1908 before the sale-deed was executed.

This last observation also forms an intergral part of the decree in the suit.

The plaintiff has not sought to challenge these remarks in this Court either by way of appeal or by filing cross-objections. However, in order to avoid future disputes and litigation between the parties I shall give effect in the operative part of this judgment to what appears to me to be the meaning of these remarks of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. The defendants who have come up in appeal to this Court have raised various pleas in their memorandum.

The first point urged by the defendants-appellants was that the finding of the learned Judge as to the age of Allah Yar, the respondent, was erroneous. The learned counsel invited our attention to the various entries in the birth and death registers. These entries briefly show that Muhammada, the father of the plaintiff, had a son born to him on 14th September 1895, and that this son died on 28th November 1895. Then there are two other entries printed at pp. 11 and 12 of the paper-book respectively, which show that one son was born to Muhammada on 1st December 1896, and another son was born to him on 20th February 1898. We have also two more entries recording the birth of a daughter to Muhammada on 29th July 1901, and finally the death of Muhammada on 7th May 1903. The case for the defendants is that Allah Yar is one of those two sons whose births are recorded on 1st December 1896, and 20th February 1898. Mt. Bakhtawar (P. W. 1), the mother of the plaintiff, was examined in the case. Apart from the fact that this lady was particularly interested in the success of her son's suit, her statement, when examined carefully, does not appear to be convincing.

There is other oral evidence of the usual type which does not carry the case for the plaintiff any further. They are two medical witnesses: Dr. L. Francis (P. W. 4) and Dr. R.E. Murray (P. W. 6). The former says that the plaintiff is not more than 23 years and not less than 21 and that most probably the witness would place him between 22 and 23 rather than 21 and 22. Dr. Murray, Civil Surgeon, says that the age of the plaintiff in his opinion was anything between 20 and 22 years. The medical evidence in these cases cannot throw much light because from its very nature it is based on conjectures only and we cannot possibly look to it for the purposes of determining with precision the exact age of a particular person. It is obvious that in cases when limitation is pleaded in defence, a difference of even a single day settles the fate of the case one way or the other, and no doctor, however conscientious and competent he may be, can give the precise age of a person so as to enable the Court to determine the exact date of that person's birth. In support of the extracts from the birth and death registers mentioned above, the defendants have produced Lala Roshan Lal (D. W. 1). His evidence to a certain extent supports the defendants' plea, though the witness had to admit that omissions of births and deaths are generally noticed by him in these registers. The learned counsel for the respondent, criticized the evidence afforded by the extracts from the birth and death registers in the light of the concluding remark in the evidence of D. W. 1, Lala Roshan Lal, contending that this evidence does not determine the age of the plaintiff with any degree of exactitude. But the onus was on him to prove that the suit was within time, and on a consideration of the whole evidence on the record on this point I am of opinion that that burden has not been discharged. This being so, it follows that the plaintiff has not been able to establish that he was under 21 years at the date of the institution of the suit.

Having regard to the Privy Council ruling reported in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1), the term "de facto guardian" which had been introduced in some decisions of the various Courts in this country, loses all its significance and their Lordships have laid down once and for all that a person who is not under the law authorized to transfer a minor's property, cannot give a valid title to the transferee of such property and that the transfer effected by a person who thus arrogates to himself the functions of a lawful guardian is absolutely void and of no legal effect. The sale-deed dated 15th April 1908, executed by Raja, defendant 4, of the property belonging to the plaintiff was, therefore, void, but since the plaintiff did not bring his suit for possession within three years of his attainment of majority, defendants 1 to 3 plead that they had acquired title by adverse possession. Their case is that they redeemed the mortgage some time in the Rabi of 1908, soon after the sale-deed and that as the present suit was brought on 8th November 1920, they had completed 12 years of adverse possession. Now let us examine the evidence on this point a little more closely. The receipt (Ex. D-7) is dated 26th October 1908. As already stated, the concluding portion of that document contains the words that "the mortgage has been released." Therefore, if we were to calculate the period of limitation exactly from 26th October, then there is no doubt that on 26th October 1920 the defendants completed their 12 years adverse possession. But the matter is not so simple. We have the evidence of D. W. 4, Aya Singh, son of Mohar Singh, who was one of the mortgagees under the mortgage dated 21st October 1899. He says that the land in suit was mortgaged with him for Rs.1,300 and that he received the amount from Amir Khan, the father of defendant 2, as per receipt of 30th June 1908. He further says that the possession of the land was made over to the defendants since Sawani 1908 and that he gave up connexion in June 1908.

Now, it is perfectly clear that there is no receipt on the record dated 30th June 1908. The only receipt to which this witness could possibly have been referring is the one dated 26th October 1908, (Ex. D-7) and it must have been with reference to this receipt when he stated that he gave up possession in June 1908. This is undoubtedly a mistake and the witness must have been really referring to the receipt of 26th October 1908 Furthermore, the witness makes a very vague remark that the possession of the land was made over to the defendants since Sawani 1908. Another witness named Jiwan (D. W. 5) also repeats the same remark that the Sawani of 1908, was reaped by the defendants. There is another witness, Jiwan Singh Patwari, who was examined on interrogatories, He also says in his examination-in-chief that the defendants purchased the land in Rabi 1908 and possession was taken in Kharif; in other words the defendants were in possession in Kharif 1908 and harvested the produce for that Fasal. He further repeats in an answer put to him in cross interrogatories that he remembers from his personal knowledge that the defendants harvested the produce for Kharif 1908. Now the expression "Sawani" or "Kharif"1908 is very vague.It might mean any period between October 1908 and January 1909, so that it is impossible to determine with any degree of certainty the exact date on which the possession of defendants 1 to 3 commenced. We further observe as a matter of common experience that it was not to be expected that the prior mortgagees would deliver possession to the vendees (defendants 1 to 3) before receiving from them the amount due under the mortgage in their favour. Furthermore there is only a very short interval of 13 days between 26th October 1908 and 8th November 1908, so that in order to succeed in their plea the defendants must satisfy the Court that their adverse possession did as a matter of fact commence on some date between 26th October 1908, and 8th November 1908. I am not satisfied that the mere statement that the defendants-vendees took possession of the land in suit in Sawani of Kharif 1908 is sufficient to justify the Court in coming to the conclusion that the defendants' possession commenced at any time between the two dates just mentioned.

But even assuming for the sake of argument that the possession of the defendants continued as a matter of fact for the full period of 12 years counting from 26th October 1908, there is a further difficulty in the way of the defendants. As already stated, the mortgage in favour of Mohar Singh and Sukha Singh, dated 21st October 1899 (Ex. P-1) clearly recited that the term of the mortgage had been fixed as 18 years and that the mortgagor shall have no power to redeem the land before the expiry of the fixed term. The defendants themselves in their written statement, apparently unconsciously, try to make capital of this condition in the mortgage-deed by pleading that the plaintiff had no right to redeem the said land before 31st October 1917. Now, if the plaintiff mortgagor could not redeem the mortgage of 1899 before 21st October 1917, can it be said that the defendants who, as a result of mutual understanding between themselves and the successors-in-title of Mohar Singh and Sukha Singh, managed to redeem the mortgage by paying the sum of Rs. 1,300 on 26th October 1908, defeat the plaintiff by raising against him the plea of adverse possession; in other words, is it open to defendants 1 to 3 in the circumstances of the case to raise the plea that they had acquired full proprietary rights in the equity of redemption by 12 years' adverse possession? I must say that the question is not free from difficulty.

The learned counsel for the defendants-appellants relied upon the case of Munia Goundan v. Ramasami Chetty (2). The facts of this case are briefly these: There were two Hindu brothers who mortgaged their lands jointly in 1892. In 1897 one of the brothers sold the entire equity of redemption to D who redeemed the lands and obtained possession in 1898. The other brother sold his interest in the lands in 1910 to the plaintiff who instituted a suit in 1912 to redeem his half-share in the property on payment of half the mortgage-debt. It was pleaded by D that the suit was barred by limitation. Mr. Justice Oldfield applied Art. 126, Lim. Act, and held the suit to be barred. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Ayyar held that the suit was barred under the provisions of Art. 144, Lim. Act, as well. In that case which was a second appeal it had been found by the lower appellate Court that from the date of his purchase defendant 2 had the animus to claim title as the sole owner of the equity of redemption and that he was a charge holder and not a mortgagee after redemption and, therefore, after 12 years his possession matured into ownership. The case was thus decided on the finding of fact that the possession of defendant 2 had been obtained from the very beginning under an assertion of exclusive title. Assuming that this case was correctly decided, as to which I express no opinion, in the present case, having regard to the materials on the record, it cannot be said that the contesting defendants 1 to 3 did, as a matter of fact, assert an exclusive title in themselves and if so, then on what date?

We were also referred to the case of Jiwa Khan v. Lakhmi Chand (3), and I must confess that I do not see how this case has any relevancy to the facts of the present case. If anything, the judgment contains observations against the appellants' contention. It is laid down in that judgment that > where a mortgagee has once got possession of the mortgaged property as mortgagee, he cannot alter the nature of his possession by a mere assertion, or by a wrongful decree, or by getting himself recorded in the register of mutations as owner, nor can the original character of the possession as mortgagee be changed by the assertion of an absolute purchase of the property unless the alleged purchase is valid and binding.

In the present case defendants 1 to 3 had stepped into the shoes of the mortgagees by redeeming the mortgage of 1899 and by claiming proprietary title through purchase from Raja, the so-called de facto guardian of the minor Allah Yar, they could not possibly improve their position.

The case reported as Shamrao Darekar v. Mahamad Amin (4), was also relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellant. In that case there was a difference of opinion between the two learned Judges of the Bombay High Court, namely Hayward and Beaman, JJ. There are certain observations in the judgment of Beaman, J., which go to show that when one of the mortgagors redeemed property and then mortgaged it to a third party, the third party had acquired title by adverse possession against the other co-mortgagor, the mortgage being a possessory one. Hayward, J., did not accept the view of law and held that without the knowledge that adverse title was being claimed against the comortgagor no adverse title could be claimed against him. The case was referred to Scott, C J., and the learned Chief Justice agreed with the view of law expressed by Hayward, J. In the present case the plaintiff was undoubtedly a minor at the date of the sale in favour of the defendants and he could not possibly be fixed with the notice of any adverse possession by defendants 1 to 3.

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent reliance was placed on a case reported as Binanand Sawase v. Thuroo Mahto. (A. I. R. 1923 Pat. 592). In this case it was laid down that where a mortgagee is let into possession, his position is to some extent that of a trustee and that he is bound to protect the interests of the mortgagor and to prevent any invasion of his rights by a stranger. If the mortgagee by neglect or collusion allowed any person to come into possession of the property, there will be no invasion of the rights of the mortgagor, and when the time for redemption comes, he will be entitled to treat the stranger as a trespasser and the stranger's right by adverse possession against the mortgagor will not commence unless and until the mortgagor had sought to exercise his right of redemption and redeemed the property.

(4) [1912] 14 Bom. L. R. 314=15 I. C. 500.

With this proposition of law I entirely agree. The mortgage for 1899 was for a fixed term of 18 years and the contesting defendants themselves admitted that it was not open to the plaintiff mortgagor to seek redemption before the expiry of the fixed term. And if as a result of any mutual understanding between the defendants and the mortgagees the defendants were allowed to redeem prematurely and were let into possession of the mortgaged property, it cannot in any way prejudice the rights of the plaintiffs and no plea of adverse possession can be successfully raised by the defendants against the plaintiffs on the strength of their possession of the mortgaged property. There is a very informing judgment of the Chief Court of the Punjab reported as Azim v. Mahmud (5). In that case a certain field was mortgaged. It was redeemed by a third party, more than 12 years before the suit for possession was brought by the plaintiff, who represented the mortgagor. It was held by Rattigan and Barkley, JJ., (Elsmie. J., dissenting) that the defendant who redeemed the mortgage knew that the land was mortgaged, and having obtained possession by redeeming the mortgage he was in the position of the assignee of the the mortgagee and it was immaterial whether or not the defendant at the time of redeeming the mortgage claimed to be himself the owner of the property. This view of law is substantially the same as that arrived at independently by the learned Judges of the Patna High Court in the case noted above, and is binding upon me. To hold otherwise would open a door of fraud, as it would be possible for an outsider to collude with the mortgagee in possession and after paying the mortgage money to the mortgagee, take possession of the mortgaged property and after the expiry of the period of 12 years to raise the plea of adverse possession against the mortgagor.

I may also quote here the case of Tarabai Ramrao v. Dattaram Govindbhai (6). The learned Chief Justice in that case observed that in the case of a possessory mortgage, when possession has been delivered to the mortgagee, a trespasser obtaining possession may hold adversely to the mortgagee, but not to the mortgagor. And the present defendants 1 to 3 were not in a better position than a mere trespasser at the time when they took possession qua the mortgagor. In the present case, however, I treat the defendants as the assignees of the original mortgagees and since the plaintiff could not redeem the mortgage and obtain possession of the property until the 21st October 1917, it cannot be said that defendants 1 to 3 had acquired by adverse possession under their sale-deed dated 15th April 1908. The adverse possession, if at all, could only commence after the 21st October 1917, and as the present suit was brought on 8th November 1920, it cannot be said that it was barred by 12 years adverse possession.

I may in this connexion refer to the classical judgment of Markby, J., in the case of Bejoy Chunder Banerjee v. Kalli Prosonno Mookerjee (7). There the learned Judge laid down that > by adverse possession is meant possession by a person holding the land, on his own part, of some person other than the true owner, the true owner having a right to immediate possession.

These words, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Batty in the case of Tarabai v. Vankatrao (8), are of capital importance and express a well-known rule which is conveyed in the maxim contra non valentem agere non currit prescriptio, that is to say:

> Prescription does not run against a man during the time when he is not entitled to immediate possession.

This proposition of the law is a direct authority in favour of the plaintiff who was not entitled to immediate possession during the period of 18 years fixed under the mortgage of 1899, and therefore, no act of the defendants, the assignees from the mortgagees, could constitute adverse possession as against the right of the mortgagor, the plaintiff in the present suit. In view of these findings the plea of adverse possession raised on behalf of the defendants fails.

Now, the question remains as to the terms on which the plaintiff is entitled to obtain possession of the land in suit. There cannot be any doubt that as a result of the sale-deed, dated 15th April 1908, the plaintiff had been considerably benefited. He obtained actual possession over 151 kanals free, from encumbrances and has been enjoying the income of that land ever since. The receipt Ex. D-7 conclusively proves the payment of Rs. 1,300 by the vendees-defendants 1 to 3, the representatives of the mortgagees Mohar Singh and Suka Singh. We have also the evidence of Tara Chand, D. W. 3, who admits that some land which he held as a mortgagee was redeemed from him by Raja and Ziada, that is to say, the vendees, and that the plaintiff has ever since been in possession of the land thus redeemed. He also stated that the mortgage-deed was returned to the plaintiff's maternal uncle and mother at the time of redemption. Therefore, the plaintiff is bound to pay this sum of Rs. 575 to defendants 1 to 3 seeing that he has fully benefited by it. The other items of Rs. 550, Rs. 50 and Rs. 525 have not been proved and cannot be allowed to the defendants. There is the further fact that, soon after the sale-deed in dispute, the plaintiff obtained possession of an area of 151 kanals which represents the difference between 443½ kanals and 292½ kanals and has been enjoying the income of the same ever since free from all encumbrance. The plaintiff is bound to pay to the defendants the equivalent of the produce of the land which he has been appropriating and enjoying since he obtained possession as a result of the redemption in Kharif 1908. Muhammad Usaf, Special Kanungo, D. W. 8, has been examined on behalf of the defendants. He has worked out the amount of the profits derived by the plaintiff since Kharif 1908 till Rabi 1922. This sum comes to Rs. 4,239, and no attempt has been made on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent to challenge its correctness. That the plaintiff is liable to make good to the defendants the amount representing the actual benefit that he has derived from the sale is supported by authority: vide Hanamgowda Shidgowda v. Irgowda Shivgowda (9) and Allah Dad v. Budha (10).

Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and bearing in mind the remark of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge in the concluding portion of his judgment where he observes that the parties should be relegated to the position which they held on or before the sale-deed was executed, I order that the plaintiff is entitled to obtain possession of 292½ kanals in suit on payment of Rs. 1,300 plus Rs. 575 plus Rs. 4,239, total Rs. 6,114, to defendants 1 to 3. With these observations I dismiss the appeal. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Appeal No. 593 of 1927, Decided on 10th December 1927, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Sialkot at Lahore, D/- 26th April 1927.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Statement of approver before pardon—Accused can ask for copy.

Statement made by an approver to the police before he is tendered a pardon, is a previous statement of a witness and it can be used either to corroborate him or to contradict him under the ordinary provisions of the Evidence Act and therefore the accused is entitled to have a copy of such statement. [P 257 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 172—Statements of persons are not covered.

Section 172 does not apply in any way to the statements of persons and certainly does not override the provisions of the Evidence Act. [P 258 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Copy of statement wrongly refused—Procedure indicated.

Where the lower Court wrongly refuses to furnish a copy of prior statement of a witness, the proper course in appeal is that counsel should be furnished with a copy of the statement and any contradictions between that statement and those made in Court by the witness should be taken as left unexplained by him. [P 258 C 1]

Each case must be decided on its own facts and the extent of the prejudice to the accused in each case must determine whether the trial should be held altogether vitiated or whether the defect can be remedied by following the procedure indicated above: *A. Iftikhar Ali—for Appellants.

Des Raj Swahney—for the Crown.

Dalip Singh, J.—Ten persons were sent up for trial by the learned Sessions Judge under S. 396, I. P. C. Three, namely, Jammun, Santa Singh and Umar Joyia, have been acquitted. All the others were convicted under S 396 and were sentenced as follows: Kammun, Diwan Singh and Rahim Bakhsh each to transportation for life and Hazara Singh, Labh Singh, Chanan Singh and Imam Din, each to ten years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement. Kammun has not appealed. All the others have appealed and we have heard Mr. Iftikar Ali for Diwan Singh, Hazara Singh, Labh Singh and Rahim Bakhsh, and Mr. Dhanraj Shah for Chanan Singh. Imam Din has appealed through jail.

The prosecution relied on the statement of Saddar Din who was an approver in this case, and have also led evidence to corroborate his statement. The alleged dacoity was committed on the night of the 4th/5th January 1925, in the house of Ram Chand, petition-writer in the village of Kotli Nowshera, Sialkot District. The dacoits when retreating were pursued by the villagers and one of the pursuers named Haveli was shot dead. This dacoity was one of a number committed during the year 1925-26 under the leadership of Kammun, a notorious dacoit who has already been sentenced to death in another case and whose appeal in that case has been dismissed. Saddar Din, approver, is a relation of Kammun and admittedly was great friend with him.

The first point taken by Mr. Iftikhar Ali was that the learned Sessions Judge had refused to allow the accused the statement made by the approver to the police before he was tendered a pardon. The learned Sessions Judge held that this statement was made by the approver as an accused person and not as a witness, and that, therefore S. 162, Criminal P. C., did not apply to the case. In my opinion the case is covered by S. 162, but even if the learned Sessions Judge were correct in holding that this statement was not within S. 162, Criminal P. C., it would be a previous statement of a witness and it could be used either to corroborate him or to contradict him under the ordinary provisions of the Evidence Act. Counsel for the Crown has relied on S. 172, Criminal P. C., as barring this statement. I do not think that S. 172 applies in any way to the statements of persons, and certainly does not override the provisions of the Evidence Act. I, therefore, think that the statement should not have been refused in evidence. In these circumstances we hold that counsel should be furnished with a copy of the statement and any contradictions between this statement and those made in Court by the approver should be taken as left unexplained by the approver. Counsel has contended on the authority of A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 644 and A. I. R. 1927 Nagpur 24 that the trial was vitiated by the learned Sessions Judge's refusal to supply the accused with a copy of the statement and allow cross-examination of the approver with reference to that statement. We consider, however, that each case must be decided on its own facts and the extent of the prejudice to the accused in each case must determine whether the trial should be held altogether vitiated or whether the defect can be remedied by following the procedure that has been indicated above. In this case we are of opinion that the contradictions and differences did not so gravely prejudice the accused as to necessitate the setting aside of the trial. The matter of course might be otherwise, had the trial been a jury trial, but on this point I express no opinion.

A further objection was taken by counsel for the appellants that he was not allowed to cross-examine Ganpat (P. W. 11) with reference to certain omissions in his statement to the police and his statement in Court. It was contended by the authority of Iltaf Khan v. Emperor (1), that all omissions are contradictions. I am not prepared to subscribe, with all respect to the learned Judges, to the proposition that all omissions are contradictions. Here again it must be left to the Court in each particular case to decide whether the omission in question amounts to a contradiction or not. For instance, if a witness has stated that a certain number of persons effected an entry into a house but has not stated the mode in which they effected the entry, such an omission cannot ordinarily be held to be a contradiction. On the other hand, if a witness has stated that three persons were beating another person and later said about the same incident that four persons were beating that person such an addition or omission of the fourth person from the original statement would, in my opinion, be a contradiction. I have of course taken extreme cases to illustrate my meaning. There must be numerous cases falling between the extreme cases described above in which opinions might vary as to whether the case was one of contradiction or merely of omission. In this particular case Ganpat had omitted to state in his first statement to the police that he had joined in the pursuit of the dacoits when they retreated from the village. While I am not prepared to hold that Ganpat has in Court told a lie in stating that he did pursue the retreating dacoits along with other villagers, I consider that, in view of the fact that he did not mention this originally to the police, his statement on the point must be received with caution and his evidence as to indentification of certain persons during the course of this pursuit must similarly be received with the greatest caution. I am, however, of opinion that this error on the part of the learned Sessions Judge is not sufficient to vitiate the trial and here again we decided to allow counsel to follow the same procedure and to compare the statements made to the police and in Court, and take all contradictions, if any, as left unexplained by Ganpat. This is the most favourable way of treating the matter so far as the accused are concerned and I do not see that they have any complaint to make to this course in the circumstances of this case. (The judgment then discussed other matters not material for the report and dismissed the appeals of Imam Din and Chanan Singh and accepted those of other appellants.)

Judgment. — Under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, when a debtor was adjudged an insolvent he ordinarily became immune from arrest. This immunity was taken away by the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 and according to that Act he could be arrested in execution of a decree, unless he should obtain a protection order under S. 31 of that Act. But the question is whether a decree-holder is competent to take out execution against the person of an insolvent judgment-debtor without obtaining leave of the insolvency Court. In the present case it is admitted that the insolvency Court has refused the insolvent's petition for a protection order but the decree-holder has not yet obtained permission to execute his decree by arrest of the insolvent. According to Cl. (2), S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 no creditor shall, during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, commence any suit or other legal proceedings (against the insolvent) except with the leave of the insolvency Court.

An execution proceeding is a legal proceeding and it was the first application for execution that the judgment-creditor made after having obtained the decree that he sought to execute. He thus commenced a legal proceeding but without the leave of the insolvency Court. The language of Cl. (2), S. 28, Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920, is almost the same as that of S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act 1909. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court held in C. A. Easwara Aiyar v. K. Govindarajulu Naidu (1) that in view of the provision of S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act when a person is adjudicated insolvent, creditors seeking any remedy against him must apply to get leave for that purpose. Another case in point is Thakurdeen v. J. Dubay (2), where it was held that the words "other legal proceedings" in S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, include an application for arrest in execution of a decree and that, therefore, no such application can be made against an insolvent after an order of adjudication has been made except with the leave of the insolvency Court.

I, therefore, set aside the order of arrest passed against the insolvent judgment-debtor by the Court below and direct that no proceedings in execution be taken against him unless the judgment-creditor should obtain leave of the insolvency Court to commence such proceedings. The parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Order of Reference

Tek Chand, J.— Muhammada, petitioner, made a report at the police station, Ferozepore, on 26th July 1925 that he w asin the Ferozepore hospital on that night attending on his sister, who was an indoor patient there, when one Nihal Singh came into the compound with a takwa in his hand intending to murder his sister ; that Nihal Singh was accompanied by Raushan Beg and Ahmad Din, who were the expectant heirs of his sister and who had instigated him to commit the crime, and that he was able to catch Nihal Singh alone, his companions having run away. The police after enquiry found that the story as given by Muhammada was false. They took no action against Raushan Beg or Ahmad Din, but challaned Nihal Singh under the Arms Act for being in unlawful possession of the takwa. He was, however, acquitted by the Court.

On 16th January 1926 Raushan Beg lodged a complaint under S. 211, I. P. C., against Muhammada for having made a false charge against him. Muhammada was tried by the Magistrate, 1st Class Ferozepore, and found guilty under S. 211 and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months' and pay a fine of Rs. 100. His appeal to the Sessions Court having been unsuccessful, he has preferred a revision to this Court.

The first point taken on his behalf is that the learned Sessions Judge has not discussed the evidence on the record nor has he written a proper judgment in accordance with law and, therefore, the case should be sent back to him for redecision. There is no doubt that the discussion of the evidence in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is not as full as it might have been. I, however, see no reason to remand the case. I have allowed the petitioner's counsel to address me at length on the merits and to read to me the portions of the evidence on which he wished to rely. After examining the evidence and considering counsel's arguments I am of opinion that the petitioner has been rightly convicted under S. 211, I. P. C. There was no justification for him to make a false charge against Raushan Beg and Ahmad Din and his sole object in making the report seems to have been to intentionally harass and injure these persons who were the expectant heirs of his sister, and with whom they do not appear to have been on good terms.

It was next argued that the proceedings in this case were void ab initio and illegal, inasmuch as they were not initiated on a complaint in writing made by the Court which tried Nihal Singh as required by S 195(b), Criminal P. C. The learned Public Prosecutor replied that S. 195 does not apply as the police challaned Nihal Singh only and not Raushan Beg or Ahmad Din, and the case of the latter was never before any Court and, therefore, it cannot be said that, so far as these persons are concerned the alleged offence was committed in, or in relation to, any proceedings in a Court. There is, however, a Single Bench decision of the Chief Court reported as Emperor v. Gurditta (1) which fully supports the petitioner's contention. In that case the accused had made a report to the police that seven persons had committed dacoity. The police sent up five of those persons for trial but took no action against the other two, namely, Q. S. and A. S. Subsequently proceedings under S. 211, I P. C., were started against the accused for having brought a false charge against Q. S. and A. S. A magisterial inquiry was held against the accused who was committed to the Sessions Court for trial for having made a false charge against Q. S. and A. S.

It was held by Scott-Smith, J., that though Q. S. and A. S. were not proceeded against in Court, S. 195 still applied as the matter had come up before the Court in connexion with the same report made by the accused to the police and thus the offence (if any) was committed in relation to proceedings in a Court. As the prosecution of the accused under S. 211, was not initiated with the sanction or on the complaint of the Court concerned, the commitment was held to be illegal and was accordingly quashed. The learned Judge in his judgment based his decision on a Division Bench ruling of the Allahabad Court: Hardwar Pal v. Emperor (2). This case will be found reported in the authorized reports as I. L. R. 34 All. 522. I have considered both these cases, and as at present advised, I feel grave doubts as to the soundness of the view taken therein. As has already been pointed out, the Court which has tried Nihal Singh was not concerned with the allegations made by the petitioner in his report to the police against Ahmad Din and Raushan Beg. These persons had not been sent up to take their trial before the Court and I fail to see how that Court could initiate proceedings under S. 211, with reference to the alleged false charge against them who were never before it. In taking this view I feel fortified by a later decision by another Division Bench of the Allahabad Court in Kashi Ram v. Emperor (3) where Hardwar Pal v. Emperor (2) was dissented from. The point was raised before the Calcutta High Court in Brown, F. A. v. Ananda Lal Mullick (4), but was not expressly decided, though there are indications in the judgment that the learned Judges were inclined to doubt the soundness of the decision in Hardwar Pal's case. As the question is one of considerable importance and arises frequently, I think it is necessary to have an authoritative pronouncement by a Division Bench of this Court on it.

I, therefore, refer the case to a Division Bench for decision of this point, which is the only point left undecided.

Agha Haidar, J.—A reference was made to a Division Bench by a learned Single Judge of this Court on 22nd July 1927 under the following circumstances:

A report was made to the police by one Muhammada, the accused, in the present case, to the effect that his sister Mt. Bago, who was a widow and had some property, was an indoor patient in the Ferozepore hospital; that one Nihal Singh had trespassed into the compound of the said hospital in order to murder the said lady; that Nihal Singh, when caught by the informant, invoked the aid of two of his accomplices, namely Raushan Beg and his son Ahmad Din; that the informant identified these two men by their speech; and that they being the reversioners of Mt Bago's estate would have been directly benefited by her death. The police made an investigation, but did not feel satisfied as regards the complicity of Raushan Beg and Ahmad Din and so no action was taken against them. Nihal Singh, however, was charged under S. 19, Indian Arms Act (11 of 1878) and tried by a Magistrate. On 17th November 1925, the Magistrate acquitted Nihal Singh observing at the conclusion of his judgment that the case seemed to be frivolous one which had been initiated by Muhammada and Mt. Bago in order to implicate Raushan Beg and Ahmad Din who were the reversioners and heirs of Mt. Bago.

On 16th January 1926, Raushan Beg filed a complaint under Ss. 211/500, I. P. C, in the Court of a Magistrate. This comp aint ended in the conviction of Muhammada under S. 211, I. P. C.

Muhammada appealed to the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, who, however, dismissed his appeal. An application for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge was filed in this Court, and the case came on for hearing before a learned Single Judge, who went through the evidence on the record and arrived at the conclusion that the conviction of Muhammada under S. 211, I. P. C. was correct.

A point of law, was, however, raised before him to the effect that the complaint which Raushan Beg had made direct to the Magistrate was incompetent in that the case was covered by S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. and, therefore, a complaint in writing should have been mad by the Court which tried the case against Nihal Singh or some other Court to which such Court was subordinate, and that, therefore, the whole proceedings were null and void. The learned Judge of this Court entertained some doubt as to the correctness of a certain decision of the Punjab Chief Court and, therefore, referred the case to a larger Bench.

The portion of S. 195, Criminal P. C., relevant to the present reference is as follows:

> No Court shall take cognizance:
>
>
> (b) of any offence punishable under • • • S. 211 • • • of the same Code, when such offence is alleged to have been committed in, or in relation to, any proceed ng in any Court, except on the complaint in writing, of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.
> • • •

The case in Emperor v. Gurditta (1), is in favour of the applicant. This was, however, a judgment by a Single Judge who followed Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (2). Now, we have to see whether Hardwar Pal's case (2) was rightly decided. In that case a report was made by one H at a police station against several persons, one of whom was S

(3) A. I. R. 1924 All. 779=46 All. 906.

charging them with rioting and voluntarily causing hurt. The police made an investigation and sent up several persons for trial, but no action was taken against S. Some of the persons charged were convicted by the Magistrate but were acquitted by the Sessions Judge. Thereupon S filed a complaint in the Court of the Magistrate charging H with having made a false report to the police implicating him (S) in the offence. The matter came up before a Division Bench who held that, as there was considerable relation between the first report and the proceedings in Court, the latter being the result of the former, the alleged offence with which H was charged was committed in relation to proceeding in Court. They further held that the report led to the police inquiry and the police inquiry led to the proceeding in Court. And proceeding on this line of reasoning the learned Judges finally held that the sanction of the Court under S. 195 (1) (b) was necessary and in the absence of such sanction they quashed the proceedings taken by S against H in the Court of the Magistrate.

The matter once came before a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court where two learned Judges in Emperor v. Kashi Ram (3) threw considerable doubt upon the correctness of Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (2). In this case the learned Judges observed as follows :

> In Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (2) a charge was made against several people including one S, but S was never charged in Court. S was not put upon his trial and no proceedings were taken against him. The other people were, and the ratio decidendi in Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (2) is that the charge against S amounted to a charge in Court because Court proceedings were taken against some body else. In this respect we are unable to agree with Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (2).

The learned Judges then proceeded to lay down the following formula deciding the question as to where a report to the police stops and the charge before the Magistrate begins.

> If the complainant confines himself to reporting what he knows of the facts, stating his suspicions, and leaving the matter to be further investigated by the police, or leaving the police to take such course as they think right in the performance of their duty, he is making a report but he is not making a charge. But if he takes the further step, without waiting for any official investigation of definitely alleging his belief in the guilt of a specified person, and his desire that the specified person be proceeded against in Court, that act of his, whether verbal or written, if made to an officer of the law authorized to initiate proceedings based upon the complainant's statement, whether amounting to an expression of the complainant's belief in the guilt of the specified persons, or his desire that Court proceedings be taken against him, amount to making a charge.

This being the position, the authority of Emperor v. Gurditta (1), may be taken to have been considerably shaken in that the case on which it was founded has been definitely dissented from by the Allahabad High Court itself.

There is another case, Tayebulla v. Emperor (5), where Mookerjee and Sheepshanks, JJ., held that no sanction was necessary under S. 195, Criminal P. C., to prosecute an informant under S. 211, I. P. C., when a false charge had been made by him only to the police.

Brown v. Ananda Lal Mullick (4) approves of the case in Tayebulla v. Emperor (5) and the learned Chief Justice, who delivered the main judgment of the Court, definitely refused to express an opinion as to whether the case in Emperor v. Hardwar Pal (2) was rightly or wrongly decided.

We prefer to follow the law as laid down in Emperor v. Kashi Ram (3) Raushan Beg was never charged in any Court, nor was he ever put upon his trial before any Magistrate, nor were any proceedings taken against him before the Court in which Nihal Singh was involved. This being so, it cannot be said that the offence under S. 211, I. P. C., with which Muhammada, the applicant, had been charged, was an offence which was committed in or in relation to any proceeding in Court. This being our view, it was not necessary that the present prosecution should have been started on the complaint in writing of the Magistrate who tried and disposed of Nihal Singh's case. Under these circumstances the objection as to the maintainability of the present complaint fails.

The case having been heard on the merits by the learned referring Judge and the only question that had been referred to us for consideration having been also decided against the applicant, the result is that the application for revision fails and is dismissed.

BROADWAY AND SKEMP, JJ.

Narsingh Das—Objector-Appellant.

v.

Secretary of State—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 2187 of 1922, Decided on 26th May 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 29th May 1922.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 5—Copy of land acquisition award must be filed with appeal — Filing can be allowed even at the time of hearing and time extended in proper cases—Land Acquisition Act (amended 1921), S. 26 — Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 1.

In an appeal from an award of District Judge in a land acquisition case, the appellant failed to file a copy of the award with the appeal. The appeal was filed in 1922. The decision of Lahore High Court in A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 438, under which the amendment to Land Acquisition Act in 1921 was interpreted making the filing of copy of award with appeal obligatory, was decided in 1925. The appellant's counsel applied during the hearing of the appeal in 1927 for an extension of time under S. 5 Lim. Act, and put in a complete copy of the award together with an affidavit and statement of reasons asking for indulgence.

Held : that the application should be allowed and that the appeal should be heard : A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 216, Ref. [P 264 C 1,2]

(b) Land Acquisition Act, S. 23 — Hypothetical building schemes — Probable investment and return must be estimated through a surveyor.

Hypothetical building schemes can be the usual basis of valuation in case of building lands, but the course contemplated in such cases is that a surveyor should be called who would unfold a scheme giving details of the amount to be spent and estimating probable returns which could be tested in cross-examination: 16 *Bom. A prior decision in land acquisition case, though between the same parties and in respect of adjacent land, is not res judicata if land is acquired under different notification. [P 266 C 2]

(e) Land Acquisition Act, S. 28 — Amount enhanced by District Judge—Claimant is entitled to interest on difference.

Where the District Judge enhances the amount of compensation as awarded by the Collector, the claimant is entitled to interest on the amount whereby the District Judge enhanced the Collector's award from the date of that award until the date of his own judgment, and if the amount is further enhanced by the High Court, he is entitled to further interest at the same rate from that date until the date of judgment of the High Court. [P 266 C 2]

(f) Land Acquisition Act, S. 27 (2)—Collector was ordered to pay claimant's costs though claim was extravagant.

C. H. Carden Noad and Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Respondent.

Skemp, J.—These three connected appeals, which have been urged together, have arisen out of three references (not four as stated by the learned District Judge) made by the Collector under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act. To understand the matter it is necessary to refer to the plan Ex. P. A. on the record. The appeals concern four areas near the Queen's Statue, in the heart of the civil station of Lahore, taken up with the intention, as yet unrealized, of building a new Secretariat. These areas have been marked A,B,C and D by the District Judge who varied the lettering given by the Land Acquisition Officer. Plots A and B and C belong to Rai Bahadur Lala Narsingh Das and form the subject of first appeals Nos. 2187 and 2188 of 1922, plot D belongs to Mumtaz Din and Moiz-u-din and form the subject of first appeal No. 2817 of 1922. Plots B, C and D were acquired in pursuance of a notification of the Punjab Government dated the 23rd August 1918 and plot A in pursuance of a notification dated the 22nd July 1919. The learned District Judge disposed of the references by a common judgment dated the 29th May 1922.

A preliminary objection is taken that the appeal in respect of plot A is barred by time. The objection is the same as that taken in Mubarak Ali Shah v. Secretary of State (1). The learned District Judge wrote one main judgment which was attached to the reference dealing with plots B and C ; in respect of the other two plots he merely wrote : " See my judgment in Land Acquisition Case No. 13 of 1919."

The preliminary objection is that as under S. 26, Land Acquisition Act, amended in 1921, the award of the District Judge shall be deemed to be a decree it is necessary under O. 41, R. 1 Civil P. C., to attach a copy thereof to the appeal. Copies of the full award were attached with the other two appeals but all that was attached in the appeal as to plot A was a copy of the reference to the main award. This, as previously laid down, does not comply with the law, and the Court has no power to dispense with a copy of the decree.

Mr. Bevan Petman for the appellant Narsingh Das contended first that the judgment of the District Judge dealing with plot A did not amount to an award and, therefore, that no copy of the award could be attached to the appeal. S. 26 (1) sets forth :

> Every award under this part shall be in writing signed by the Judge, and shall specify the amount awarded under Cl. 1, sub-S. (1), S. 23, and also the amounts, if any, respectively awarded under each of the other clauses of the same sub section.

The District Judge's judgment does not comply exactly with this provision The District Judge wrote :

> I, therefore, find this plot A to be worth Rs. 2,500 per kanal. The area acquired is 30 kanalas 15 marlas 17 feet, the value, therefore, works out at Rs. 76,885 plus 15 per cent Rs. 11,532-12 0, total Rs. 88,417-12 0.

There is, however, no doubt that the sum last mentioned is the amount the District Judge awarded and equally no doubt that no one would have troubled about this phraseology but for the objection taken on behalf of the Crown. In my opinion this contention on behalf of the respondent has no value.

But Mr. Bevan Petman also orally applied for an extension of time under S. 5, Lim. Act, and during the hearing which occupied several days put in a complete copy of the award together with an affidavit and statement of reasons asking for indulgence. In my opinion this application ought to be granted. I do not think the Crown ought to take technical objections in a case of this kind. It is hard to conceive of anything more likely to engender a sense of injustice than to take a man's property compulsorily at an under-valuation and then to dismiss his appeal to higher authority on the basis of a technical objection he could have never heard of.

The procedure followed in these cases was in accordance with the practice of the Court until the amendment of the Act made in 1921, which was made not in order to restrict appeals but to enable appeals to go up to the Privy Council. The old practice continued in this Court until attention was first drawn to it in Mubarak Ali Shahi's case (1). Since that case, which was decided on 19th February 1925 and published the same year, the matter has been before this Court several times. In Civil Misc. Appeal No. 2585 of 1924 decided on 10th November 1926, the Secretary of State under similar circumstances was allowed time under S. 5 to file a copy of the award. But in Secy. of State v. Tirath Ram (2) permission was refused to the Secretary of State on the objection taken by the respondent that the Secretary of State was fixed with knowledge of the defect in law 14 months before the application was made, and that he had taken no steps during this period to lodge a copy of the award.

Mr. Carden Noad for the Secretary of State contended that since the publication of Mubarak Ali Shah's case (1) all practitioners of this Court ought to have been aware of this technical difficulty but that the appellant took no steps to lodge an application for time under S. 5 until arguments were almost completed.

Mr. Bevan Petman admitted that this argument would have had force if the appeal had been lodged at or about the time Mubarak Ali Shah's case (1) was decided. It was actually lodged on 1st August 1922, some 2½ years earlier, and he contended that no practitioner could keep in mind an appeal lodged so long before. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the application should be allowed and that the appeal should be heard.

Turning to the merits : the learned District Judge awarded Rs. 2,500 per kanal for this plot A. In coming to this conclusion he relied mainly on the fact that the appellant had, a short time before the notification, sold a portion of the plot in dispute at this rate. The notification was dated 22nd July 1919 and Rai Bahadur Narsingh Das stated that he agreed to sell the plot to the Associated Hotels Company on the 22nd April 1918 and was paid the consideration on the 19th May 1919, the sale-deed being executed in December 1919. Mr. Bevan Petman minimized this sale on the ground that it was effected on something different from an ordinary commercial basis. The appellant, Mr. Moncrieff, and Mr. Bevan Petman were co-directors of the Alliance Bank and Mr. Moncrieff was a partner in Boulton Brothers which practically owned the Associated Hotels Company. The appellant says that his co-directors in the bank persuaded him to sell this plot to the Hotels Company for what he paid for the land plus interest.

(2) A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 216=9 Lah. 76.

In my judgment there is no reason for not relying on this sale as a criterion of the value of the land sold, for it was a sale by a willing seller to a willing buyer.

Mr. Bevan Petman, however, rightly pointed out that whereas the land sold was back land having access only on a very narrow front to the Cooper Road and adjacent to the servant's quarters of Falletti's Hotel, the land remaining has a double frontage on the Montgomery and Cooper Roads. He contended that his client intended to erect thereon a first class hotel with shops and a cinema. On this point there is only the evidence of the appellant himself supported by a draftsman who prepared a plan for a hotel with shops underneath. No doubt their Lordships of the Privy Council in Merwanji v. Government of Bombay (3) have pointed out that hypothetical building schemes are the usual basis of valuation in case of building lands, but the course there contemplated is that a surveyor should be called who would unfold a scheme giving details of the amount to be spent and estimating probable returns which could be tested in cross-examination. This course had not been followed in the present case and indeed there is not even a plea of a cinema the reference to which is verbal only. Before he thought of the cinema Lala Narsingh Das had already been approached by the Associated Hotels Company and if Government had not acquired the land we do not know for certain that the scheme would have materialized. We are still less certain whether it would have been successful financially. I, therefore, agree with the learned District Judge that the only solid ground on which to base valuation of this plot is the sale of part thereof effected about three months before the notification. I also agree with the appellant that the part sold was the less valuable part of the plot remote from the more desirable thoroughfare and adjacent to a row of servants' quarters. Servants' quarters and stables have now been extended to the limit of the land shown on the plan: indeed Government has acquired a portion of the plot which the appellant contracted to sell to the Hotels Company and the same disadvantage now attaches to the back portion of the plot. I think, however, that the front portion on the Montgomery Road is more valuable. The appellant contended in other connexions for a frontage of 100 feet which is the depth allowed in various cases by the High Court of Bombay, e. g., Government of Bombay v. Karim Tar Mahomed (4) from which come most of the important land acquisition cases in India. I would, therefore, allow Rs. 3,000 per kanal for a frontage of 100 feet from the Montgomery Road and Rs. 2,500 per kanal for the remainder of the area. There is also a small item of Rs. 100 for trees on this plot allowed in the award of the land acquisition officer, but overlooked by the District Judge. With interest and costs I will deal later.

Turning to the plot B: there is a dispute about the area. There was a claim that the Forest Department which occupies an adjacent site had encroached, but this was given up by Mr. Bevan Petman and it would appear that the encroachment, if made at all, was completed some time before the last settlement. The point remaining is very simple. The District Judge found the area of B to be 90 kanals 1 marla 209 square feet, this being the total of the area of two plots described in the award of the land acquisition officer as B and C. The appellant in proceedings before the District Judge called a Civil Engineer who said that the area of these two plots (now B) was 90 kanals 14 marlas 221 square feet. The Collector called the Engineer in charge of the 1 Lahore Provincial Division, who measured the area as 91 kanals 19 marlas 82 feet, i. e., more than the other engineer. The appellant contends and the Government Advocate does not contest that the area must be taken to be that given by the Secretary of State's own witness. This point could hardly have escaped the attention of the learned District Judge but for the fact that he did not pronounce judgment for some 17 months after hearing arguments. The area of the District Judge's plot marked B for which compensation is to awarded will, therefore, be increased from 90 kanals 1 marla 209 feet to 91 kanals 19 marlas 82 square feet.

The area in question was the major part of a large area which Lala Narsingh Das contracted to buy in January 1908. He then arranged to pay the owner Rs. 690 per kanal. The owner, however, died before the contract was carried out and his legal representatives refused to ratify it. In 1914 Government acquired a plot of 10 kanals 8 marlas, part of this estate behind the Charing Cross Police Post at Rs. 2,000 per kanal. The value was admitted to be correct on the 28th April 1914 both by Narsingh Das and by the agent of the vendor's mother and legal representative. The Collector then settled the dispute between the parties and Lala Narsingh Das paid an additional Rs. 16,000 including interest. A sale-deed was executed in his favour and registered in August 1915. The total amount that Narsingh Das paid came to Rs. 880 per kanal.

The Government Advocate strongly relies on the fact that in 1914 Narsingh Das was willing to accept Rs. 2,000 a kanal for part of this land, but Narsingh Das had got this land cheap for several reasons. The vendor lived in the U. P.; there was a shrine in the property, and a dispute about wakf. On the other hand Narsingh Das had been out of his money for years and was unable to get title, indeed the Collector in apportioning the award held that Narsingh Das's claim was worthless. Narsingh Das was, therefore, in no position to contest the matter. Moreover, there was always the fear of a suit being brought to have the property declared wakf. Mr. Bevan Petman stated in arguments that such a suit had been lodged four months previously.

The Government Advocate also relied on a sale (p.11) of 1 kanal out of this land in 1914-15 to Ghulam Rasul for Rupees 2,000. But this kanal was separated from the rest of the area by a broad and deep storm water channel. Ghulam Rasul had previously in December 1913 bought land on the Mall for Rs. 2½ lakhs, including 5 marlas of vacant land at Rs. 10,000 a kanal. This 1 kanal in question was situated between the storm water channel and Ghulam Rasul's Mall property on which Rasul Building now stands and obviously not of great value.

In this connexion the Government Advocate also referred to a previous judgment of the High Court in Narsingh Das v. Secy. of State (5) decided by a Division Bench on the 27th April 1922 and printed in the paper book and elsewhere. This judgment dealt with an appeal of Narsingh Das concerning the acquisition of land under a notification, dated 7th July 1917, for the police post at Charing Cross adjacent to the plot now marked C. The learned Judges allowed Rs. 2,400 per kanal and their judgment was subsequently confirmed on appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a case reported as Narsingh Das v. Secy. of State (6). The Government Advocate contended that this judgment operated as res judicata, but it is sufficient to say that the cause of action is not the same. Different land was acquired under a different notification. Their Lordships of the Privy Council specifically stated that they would not interfere with judgments of Courts in India as to matter involving valuation of property because of the local knowledge requisite. The judgment of the Division Bench says:

> We may state at the outest that the evidence produced by the parties is both extremely meagre and affords extraordinarily little help.

The cases before us are more important and the appellants made greater efforts and produced more evidence. It would also seem probable that certain arguments have been adduced before us which were not put before the learned Judges who decided the earlier case. There is, therefore, no lack of respect involved in not concurring with all the conclusions come to in that case. (The judgment then considered the sales of other lands in the neighbourhood and proceeded.) Mr. Bevan Petman also complained that the District Judge did not allow interest on the amount whereby he enhanced the Collector's award from the date of that award until the date of his own judgment. The appellant is clearly entitled to interest on the difference from the 21st March 1919 to the 29th May 1922. He is entitled to further interest at the same rate from that date until the present time The simplest method of calculation would be to allow interest at 6 per cent on the enhancement from the date of the land acquisition officer's award until the date of the present judgment.

Complaint was also made that the District Judge, while enhancing the award to some extent gave the Collector costs in all these proceedings because of the large demands made by the objectors and the comparatively small extent to which they succeeded. This course is not in accordance with law. S. 27, sub-S. (2), of the Act runs :

When the award of the Collector is not upheld, the costs shall ordinarily be paid by the Collector unless the Court shall be of opinion that the claim of the applicant was so extravagant or that he was so negligent in putting his case before the Collector that some deduction from his costs should be made or that he should pay a part of the Collector's costs.

Lala Narsingh Das claimed before the District Judge Rs. 10,000 a kanal for A and Rs. 8,000 per kanal for C. For B he claimed Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 3,000. The rates claimed for A and C are certainly extravagant, but it was only permissible to make some deduction from his costs or order him to pay the Collector's costs. Taking the case as a whole, however, I am of opinion that the Collector should pay the appellants' costs because the extravagant amount claimed has not increased the Collector's costs at all and the appellant has been substantially successful. These remarks apply with particular force to the appeal of Mumtaz Din and Moiz-ud-din who have now succeeded to the extent of half of their claim. I would allow the appellants their costs.

An award is now to be prepared on the forgoing principles for areas as follows :

Plot A.—Area 30 kanals 15 marlas 17 square feet ; frontage at 100 feet along 512 feet at Rs. 3,000 per kanal. Remaining area at Rs. 2,500 per kanal.

Plot B.—Area 91 kanals 19 marlas 82 square feet. Area of a rectangle 500 by 100 feet at Rs. 3,000 per kanal. Remaining area at Rs. 2,500 per kanal.

Plot C.—As by District Judge.

Plot D.—Area as by District Judge. Valuation Rs. 6,000 per kanal.

Broadway, J.—The only question on which I had any doubt was whether time should be extended under S. 5, Lim. Act. After a careful consideration of the matter and a perusal of my brother Skemp's judgment I am not prepared to differ and I, therefore, agree generally with the above.

Addison, J.—(After setting out the pedigree showing the relationship of the parties the judgment proceeded.)

Kundan Lal sued two defendants for a declaration to the effect that Mt. Viranwali, the widow of his de ceased uncle Ram Asra Mal, was not the proprietor of a one-fourth share of certain land and that she had no power to sell her share to defendant 2. The suit was based on the allegation that plaintiff was joint with the husband of defendant 1, who was thus entitled to maintenance only. It was admitted that the other members of the family were separate. The trial Judge held that the suit for a declaration lay and that it was not necessary to sue for possession, as third parties were in possession of the suit land. He also held that Ram Asra Mal and plaintiff were not members of a joint Hindu family. On this finding he dismissed the suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs.

On appeal the District Judge agreed with the trial Judge that the plaintiff and the deceased husband of defendant 1, were not members of a joint Hindu family, and there was ample evidence to support this conclusion. He did not, however, dismiss the appeal but went on to hold that the plaintiff could sue to protect his interest as reversioner. As the sale on his finding was only for necessity to the extent of Rs. 500, he therefore granted the plaintiff as reversioner a declaratory decree to the effect that the alienation would not be binding upon him upon the death of defendant 1 except to the extent of Rs. 500. Against this decision the defendants have appealed.

It was quite clear that the suit was brought on the allegation that defendant 1 had no right in the land which was owned by the plaintiff as the last surviving coparcener of a joint Hindu family. As there was a clear finding that this joint family did not exist, the suit should have been dismissed,

It is true that a suit by a plaintiff as reversioner might lie but only in special circumstances. There are two daughters alive, one of whom has a son and the other a daughter. It has been held in Gumanan v. Jahangira (1) and Bechu Pandey v. Mt. Dulhman (2), that a suit for a declaration by a Hindu reversioner must always be brought by the reversioner nearest in succession at the time. If the nearest reversionary heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or has colluded with the widow, the next presumable reversioner would be entitled to sue. In the presence of daughters and a daughter's son, even if the daughter's son be a minor, a remote reversioner is not entitled to sue.

It has been held by a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court, reported as Barkat Ram v. Jagat Ram (3), that separated nephews of a deceased Hindu have no locus standi to maintain a suit to challenge the widow's act where daughters and a daughter's son were alive, their interest being too remote.

In Tek Chand v. Soman Singh (4) it was held that a suit by a reversioner would lie in the presence of a daughter of the deceased. In that case the Full Bench decision was distinguished as a daughter's son was not in existence. The subject was again considered in Kanshi Ram v. Sarda Nand (5) where it was held that the principles applicable to a suit by a reversioner in circumstances like the present were those laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Anand Kumar v. Court of Wards (6), and the decision turned upon whether the daughter's son had precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing or had colluded with the widow. As the daughter's son was a minor at the date of the alienation and was still a minor at the date of suit the answer to the question must be in the negative, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to the declaration prayed for. It was held further that according to the principles laid down by their Lordships in the case aforesaid, the plaintiffs should have stated in their plaint the circumstances under which they claimed to sue in the presence of the nearest reversionary heir and upon a plaint so framed the Court should have exercised its judicial discretion in determining whether the more remote reversioners were entitled to sue, one of the circumstances to be considered being whether plaintiffs' chances of succession were so remote that no declaration should be granted

In the suit under appeal none of these things were done and the District Judge could not convert the suit from one by a coparcener in a joint Hindu family to one by a reversioner to set aside an alienation by a widow in the presence of her daughters and a daughter's son. None of the facts necessary to be alleged in such a plaint were alleged, nor could the point be decided whether the suit should be allowed to proceed I would, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge restore that of the trial Judge. The appellants, Mt. Viranwali and her vendee, will have their costs in this Court and in the Court of the District Judge There is no force in the cross-objections which are dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 2409 of 1923, Decided on 8th February 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ambala, D/- 23rd July 1923.

Civil P. C., O. 2, R. 2—Suit by simple mortgagee to recover interest from the mortgagor personally—Subsequent suit to recover balance of mortgage amount is not barred—Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 14.

In the case of a simple mortgage providing for the recovery of the principal and interest from the mortgaged property as well as from the other property and the person of the mortgagor a prior suit for interest against the mortgagor personally does not bar a subsequent suit for recovering the balance due on the mortgage from the mortgaged property under O. 2, R. 2, the cause of action in the two suits being different: *A. Mohammad Tufail—for Appellants.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiffs, who are the mortgagees under a registered deed, dated 12th August 1906, instituted a suit under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C., for recovery of Rs. 1,599 14-3, being the balance of the principal and interest, alleged to be due on foot of the mortgage. One of the pleas raised by the defendants was that the suit was barred by O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., by reason of a previous suit having been instituted by the plaintiffs in 1909 for interest only. This plea was overruled by the Sub-Judge who passed a decree in terms of O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C On appeal the learned District Judge took the contrary view and the suit was dismissed. The mortgagees have preferred a second appeal and the only point requiring decision is whether O. 2, R. 2, bars the suit.

The relevant facts are that on 12th August 1906 the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants-respondents executed a simple mortgage without possession in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 4,500. The term of the mortgage was fixed as three years. The principal was to bear interst at As. 9-6 par cent. per mensem. It was provided that if this interest was not paid for three months consecutively the mortgagees shall be competent to include interest in the principal amount and realize compound interest through the Court by instituting a suit or cancel all the conditions and recover the principal mortgage money with interest.

The deed also contained a clause that in the event of the mortgagors failing to pay the principal or interest, the mortgagee was empowered to realize it from the mortgaged properties as well as from the other properties belonging to them or their person.

The mortgagors failed to pay interest regularly and were in default for more then three months consecutively. Accordingly, on 8th August 1908, before the stipulated period of three years had expired, the mortgagees instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 682-7-3 on account of interest and compound interest due on that date. It is important to note that in that suit no relief against the mortgaged properties was claimed, the prayer being simply for recovery of the amount due from the defendants, and the Court passed a personal decree against them. This decree was duly satisfied, and the mortgagors, from time to time, made further payments in discharge of their liability under mortgage. The balance due on the date of the institution of the present suit was Rs. 1,599 14-3, which the mortgagees sued to recover from the mortgaged properties.

In deciding whether the suit is barred under O. 2, R. 2, two points must be borne in mind: (1) the nature of the mortgage: and (2) the relief claimed in the former suit. As already stated the mortgage in question is a simple mortgage, which expressly gave the mortgagees power to realize the principal and interest from the mortgaged properties as well as from the persons of the mortgagors. In the former suit the plaintiffs did not claim any relief against the mortgaged properties but simply sued to recover the amount due from the defendants personally and were given a personal decree and nothing more.

Now it is well-known that a simple mortgage of this kind gives rise to two distinct obligations; the obligation to repay the amount as a loan and the obligation to permit the mortgagee to realize his dues from the mortgaged property. These two obligations are independent of each other and the procedure for enforcing them is different, though under certain conditions one suit may be brought to enforce both. If two suits be brought, the one will be to recover the debt as a loan ond the other to proceed against the property. The plaint in the former must be in Form 1 of Appendix A, Civil P. C., while that in the second will be in Form 45. The limitation for claiming a personal decree against the mortgagor is six years (Art. 116) but that for proceeding against the property is twelve years (Art. 132). Similarly the former relief can be claimed even if the document is unregistered while registration is cumpulsory in the latter case if the principal is more than Rs. 100. As pointed out by Ghose in his Law of Mortgages (5th edn.) Vol. 1, p. 81:

A simple mortgage consists of two parts: a covenant on the part of the mortgagor to pay the debt, and an agreement empowering the mortgagee to realize his money out of the property pledged to him. The pledgee must, however, ordinarily obtain a decree directing a sale in order to make his security available. In the case of a simple mortgage, therefore, the mortgagee has, generally speaking, on the default of the debtor. a twofold cause of action: one arising out of the breach of the covenant to repay and the other arising out of the hypothecation; and he can sue the mortgagor on both the causes of action in one suit.

The personal liability created by a simple mortgage being separable from the obligation in rem created by the pledge, the mortgagee may sue the debtor personally although he may not be able to enforce his security as, for instance, in a case in which, owing to want of registration, no mortgage has been effectually created * * * * *.

A simple mortgage possesses this feature in common with another kind of mortgage, known as "English mortgage" and defined in S. 58, T. P. Act. It is well-established that an "English mortgage" also gives rise to a double obligation on the part of the mortgagor and in it, as in a simple mortgage, personal liability is presumed, even though the deed is silent on the point. As was observed by Lord Talbot in King v. King (1):

Every mortgage implies a debt; every loan a debt, and though there were no covenants in the bond, the personal estate of the last owner must remain liable to pay off the mortgage.

But the position is wholly different in a mortgage by conditional sale as well as in a pure usufructuary mortgage, in either of which the creditor can only look to the property pledged to him for the satisfaction of the debt. The distinguishing feature between the two classes of mortgages is that in the first, which comprises the simple and the English mortgages, there is the implied obligation to repay the amount as a loan, while in the second—the usufructuary and the conditional sale—there is no such obligation unless the instrument contains a clause specifically creating it.

It will thus be seen that the mortgage transaction in question gave rise to two independent obligations; the right of recovering the amount due as a loan and that of enforcing the relief against the property, and each of them furnished an independent cause of action. In the former suit the plaintiffs claimed a personal decree for interest against the mortgagors and so enforced the first obligation only. In the present suit they seek relief against the property, and the cause of action, therefore, is wholly distinct. Consequently no question of the applicability of O. 2, R. 2 arises.

In support of his decision the learned District Judge has relied on Kishen Narain v. Pala Mal (2) but. in my opinion, that ruling lays down the exact opposite. It seems to me that the point is concluded in favour of the appellants by the following observations of Lord Buckmaster at p. 36 of the report:

That O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., is the relative section of the Code applicable to the dispute is not in contest. The whole question is, what does it mean? It does not appear to their Lordships that if the mortgage had provided, as mortgages always do in this country, for an independent obligation to pay the principal and the interest, that in a suit brought to obtain a personal judgment in respect of the interest alone the rule would have prevented a subsequent claim for payment of the principal. In such a case the cause of action would have been distinct. * * * * *.

Again it is stated:

If, therefore, the plaint originally brought came to be properly interpreted as claiming only a personal relief in respect of the unpaid interest, the appellant's case would be on surer ground. but although their Lordships are anxious that claims for a just debt should not be defeated by the intricacies of legal procedure, yet they are unable to hold that the plaint that was originally issued by the appellant can properly bear that interpretation. The claim is for a decree for the interest "recoverable from the mortgaged property" and the other property and persons of the defendants. The words are not dissimilar from the words of Cl. 5 of the mortgage-deed, which clearly points to the interest being payable (that is by sale) out of the mortgaged property.

As in that particular case the former claim was for a decree for the interest "recoverable from the mortgaged property" their Lordships held that the second suit was barred by O. 2, R. 2. In the present case, as pointed out above, the plaintiffs claimed and obtained in the former suit a personal decree against the mortgagors and no relief was sought against the property. The case clearly comes within the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council and; it must be held that the suit is not barred.

Mr. Jagan Nath has relied on Mohammad Hafiz v. Mirza Mohammad (3) but that case is distinguishable as there also the former suit had been instituted for recovery of interest from the mortgaged property.

For the foregoing reasons I would accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the trial Court. The appellants will have their costs throughout.

Judgment.—Lal Chand, a minor, alleging himself to be the adopted son of one Miri Mal, has applied for permission to sue in forma pauperis the widow of the said Miri Mal, for possession of certain property and also for an injunction The application has been dismissed and a revision has been admitted.

Mr. Shamair Chand takes the preliminary objection that no revision lies and relies more especially on Mahadeo Sahai v. Secy. of State (1); Shankar Ben v. Ram Deo (2); Mir Ahsan Ali v. Mirza Muhammad Jafar (3), Haur Kaur v. Munni Lal (4); and the present authority Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (5). Counsel on the other side has quoted Firm Bhajan Ram Gil Raj Mal v. Mt. Narain Devi (A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 642;) Sm. Mabia Khatun v. Satkari (A. I. R. 1927. Cal. 309); and Achalsingh v. D. B. Seth Jiwandas (6).

I take first the question raised by counsel for the petitioner as to the meaning of O. 33, R. 1, Civil P. C., that is, whether the words "possessed of sufficient means" cover only the case of a man with sufficient funds in current coin. For this proposition he relied on Sm. Mabia Khatun v. Satkari (A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 309). It is there laid down that a debt, which is due from a third person, however good and realizable, cannot be said to be "means." On the same principle I take it that shares or fixed deposits in a bank would not be "means." It has also been held that ornaments which a woman ordinarily wears are not "means." With all respect to the Judges who gave that decision I regret that I cannot agree, and it appears to me that the very use of the word "means" shows that it is intended to cover and include all forms of realizable assets which can be converted into cash and as such can be used for financing the litigation. It has been held in Firm Bhajan Ram Gil Raj Mal v. Mt. Narain Devi (A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 642) that where a Court made the mistake of supposing that the property, which forms the subject-matter of the suit and which is not at the time in the possession of the plaintiffs, can be treated as means, the mistake is such an obvious error of law as to render the whole order open to revision. It is not really necessary for me to express an opinion as to whether such a mistake made by a Judge having jurisdiction is or is not open to revision, for that is not the question in this case.

Counsel who presented the petition has stated that the Court-fee required was Rs. 870 whereas on his own showing it was Rs. 412. The value of the decrees, which stand jointly in the names of the prospective plaintiff and the prospective defendant, is Rs 1,035. Counsel has urged that these are in no sense in possession of or under the control of the plaintiff.

I do not understand, nor has counsel been able to enlighten me, as to the meaning of the expression "possession of the decree." The decrees either staud in the name of the plaintiff or not, and it is admitted that they do and that he is one of the decree-holders. It is urged that Mt. Pisto has copies of the decrees, but there is nothing to pr vent the plaintiff obtaining similar copies and taking action upon them, when he has received them. It is stated vaguely in the grounds that it has not been proved what the present value of these decrees may be. It appears to me that it was the duty of the candidate for pauperism to prove that it has less than the face value and this he he has not attempted to do. The face value of half of these decrees is more than that of the stamp shown by him to be required on the plaint, I repeat once more, shown by the plaintiff himself. I hold that there has been no mistake in law and there is a finding of a Court having jurisdiction. That finding is not wrong on the face of it, and, even if it were, I do not think I have any power to interfere. I dismiss the application with costs.

Appeal No. 397 of 1927, Decided on 15th February 1928, from order of Dist Magistrate, Lahore, D/- 25th March 1927.

(a) Penal Code, S. 27—Article found in a house not in exclusive possession of any one member—Possession of the article is presumed to be with the head of the family — Explosive Substances Act (6 of 1908), S. 4.

Where the portion of a house in which an article is found is not in the exclusive possession of any one member of the joint family, but is used by or accessible to, all the members of the family there is no presumption that the article is in the possession or control of any person other than the house-master or the head of the family. (c) Penal Code, S. 27—Possession—English law and Indian law distinguished—Indian law does not recognize dis inction between possession and custody—Possession to be punishable must be possession with knowledge.

The expression "possession" in S. 27, shows that the Indian law does not recognize the distinction which the English law makes between "possession" and "custody." In the English law a moveable thing is said to be in the possession of a person when he is so situated with respect to it that he has the power to deal with it as owner to the exclusion of all other persons, and when the circumstances are such that he may be presumed to intend to do so in case of need. The word "custody" means such a relation towards the thing as would constitute possession if the person having custody had it on his own account. Whether the possession is that of the owner or of another person, it is clear that the person, who is said to possess the thing, must have knowledge of the existence of that thing. In other words, possession to be punishable under the criminal law must be possession with knowledge. [P 273 C 2 ; P 274 C 1]

(d) Explosive Substances Act (6 of 1908), S. 4 —A person not knowing existence of explosives cannot be said to possess it maliciously.

Not only does the term "possession" imply knowledge, but the expression "maliciously," as used in S. 4, connotes intention. But neither knowledge. nor intention as to the use to be made of an object, can be imputed to a person who is not conscious of its existence. [P 274 C 1]

Brij Lal—for Appellants.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 9th January 1927, two bombs were found in the ceiling of a thatched shed situate in the court-yard of a residential house. The house belonged to a joint family composed of Dula Singh, his nephew Sohan Singh, another nephew Chanan Singh, aged about twenty years and several other persons, male as well as females. Two members of the family, namely, Dula Singh and Sohan Singh, have been convicted under S. 4, Explosive Substances Act 6, 1908, and have been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for seven years and five years respectively.

It is common ground that Dulla Singh was not in the house at the time of the recovery of the bombs and had been absent from the village for two days. His conviction rests on the sole ground that, as he was the head of the family to which the shed in question belonged, he must be deemed to be in possession of the bombs concealed in it. His nephew Sohan Singh has been found guilty, because he was the senior male member of the family present at the time of the recovery of the bombs and should, therefore, be held to be in actual possession of them.

These are the undisputed facts of the case, and the question arises whether they can sustain the conviction of the prisoners. S. 4, Explosive Substances Act punishes a person :

> who unlawfully and maliciously * * * has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance with intent by means thereof to endanger life, or to cause serious injury to property in British India * * * *.

The expression "unlawfully" signifies "not for a lawful object," and the term "maliciously" means and implies an intention to do an act, which is wrongful, to the detriment of another person per Bowen, L. J. in Mogul Steamship Co. Ltd. v. McGregor (1).

The vital point requiring determination is whether the prisoners can be held to be in possession of the bombs found in a shed belonging to the joint family. The law on the liability of the members of a joint family for an article found in the house of the family is in an unsatisfactory state, and it is not easy to reconcile the judicial cases on the subject. Some propositions, founded as they are upon sense, do not, however, admit of any doubt. It may be stated at the outset that the law does not require that the incriminating article must be in the manual possession of the accused. A thing is in the possession of a person, if it is in his power or under his control. It is at the same time clear that the mere fact that an article is found in a house belonging to the joint family does not per se render every member of the family liable for its possession. If it is found in a portion of the house, of which one member has the exclusive use, the presumption, which might be rebutted, is that that member alone and none else is liable for it. The difficulty arises when the portion of the house, where the article is found, is not in the exclusive possession of any particular mamber, but is used by, or accessible to, all the members of the family. In such a case the rule, as enunciated in Queen-Empress v. Sangam Lal (2), and followed in several other judgments, is to the effect that there is no presumption that the article is in the possession or control of any person other than the house-master or the head of the family. But it is open to the prosecution to prove that the possession was with some other member of the family, and that member would then be liable to account for it.

Now, there is not a scintilla of evidence on the record that Sohan Singh was in possession of the bombs or was aware of their existence in the shed. The mere circumstance that he happened to be the senior member of the family at the time of the recovery does not justify the inference that he must be regarded to be in possession of every article hidden in the residential house or in a shed attached thereto. There is nothing but suspicion to connect him with the commission of the crime and it is obvious that suspicion, however plausible, can never be a substitute for proof.

As against Dulla Singh, we have only the fact that he was the head of the joint family which owned the shed in question, and as such he is prima facie presumed to be in possession of the articles found in the family building. But it is only a presumption which can be rebutted by direct or circumstantial evidence. As stated above, Dulla Singh was not in the house at the time of the recovery of the bombs and had been absent from it for two days. Is there anything improbable in the suggestion that the bombs were brought into the place during his absence, and that he never knew that they were concealed in the ceiling.

Neither the Explosive Substances Act nor any other Indian statute defines the expression "possession," but S. 27, I. P. C., shows that the Indian law does not recognize the distinction which the English law makes between "possession" and "custody." In the English law, a moveable thing is said to be in the possession of a person when he is so situated with respect to it that he has the power to deal with it as owner to the exclusion of all other persons, and when the circumstances are such that he may be presumed to intend to do so in case of need. The word "custody" means such a relation towards the thing as would constitute possession if the person having custody had it on his own account. Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law, edn. 7, p. 298. Whether the possession is that of the owner or of another person, it is clear that the person, who is said to possess the thing, must have knowledge of the existence of that thing. In other words, possession to be punishable under the criminal law must be possession with knowledge.

(1) [1899] 28 Q. B. D. 598.

Not only does the term "possession" imply knowledge, but the expression "maliciously," as used in S. 4, connotes intention. But neither knowledge, nor intention as to the use to be made of an object, can be imputed to a person who is not conscious of its existence.

For the aforesaid reasons I hold that there is absolutely no evidence on the record to prove possession or control, such as would warrant the conviction of the prisoners under S. 4, Explosive Substances Act, or even under S. 5, which punishes a person who knowingly has in his possession or under his control any explosive substance under the circumstances specified therein. I accordingly allow the appeal and setting aside the conviction and the sentence direct that the appellants be released forthwith.

Civil Revn. No. 598 of 1927, Decided on 22nd February 1928, from decree of Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, D/- 1st July 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 11—Court-fee stamps not available in treasury on the day of presentation of plaint and hence Court-fee paid late—Plaint must be deemed to have been presented on the proper date.

The period of limitation provided for certain suits was reduced by an Act of the legislature. In order to give relief to those persons whose suits would have become barred under the amended law, the 8th December 1926 was fixed to be the date by which all such suits, which would otherwise have been barred by limitation could be instituted in the province of Delhi. On that date apparently a large number of suits were filed in the civil Courts with the result that the supply of Court-fee stamps was exhausted. Plaintiff's suit was instituted on the 8th December but without the necessary Court-fee stamps being affixed on the plaint. The Court directed that the stamp be paid the next day. On that day the plaintiff absented himself and the 15th December was fixed as the date on which the stamp could be paid. On that date also the plaintiff did not appear and consequently the suit was dismissed by default. On the 17th December an application was made by the plaintiff for the restoration of the suit. It was alleged that he could not pay the Court-fee on the 8th because no Court-fee stamp was available on that day and also that since then he had been ill and therefore unable to attend the Court in order to pay the requisite Court-fee stamp. The Court below thereupon permitted him to pay the Court-fee stamp and admitted the plaint subject to any objection that the defendant might have on the score of limitation.

Held: that there was sufficient cause for the plaintiff not paying the Court-fee on the plaint on the 8th December and that the Court was fully justified under the circumstances in allowing the plaintiff to pay such fee before the time fixed by it; the same having been so paid the plaint must be deemed to have been presented on the 8th December. Revision lies from an order wrongly dismissing a suit as time barred. [P 275 C 2]

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Nand Lal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The period of limitation provided for certain suits was reduced by an Act of Legislature so far as the Punjab is concerned and in order to give relief to those persons whose suits would have become barred under the amended law the 8th December 1926 was fixed to be the date by which all such suits, which would otherwise have been barred by limitation, could be instituted in the province of Delhi. On that date apparently a large number of suits were filed in the civil Courts with the result that the supply of Court-fee stamps was exhausted.

The suit out of which these proceedings have arisen was instituted by the plaintiff petitioner on the 8th December but without the necessary Court-fee stamps being affixed on the plaint. The Court directed that the stamp be paid the next day, i. e., the 9th December. On that day the plaintiff absented himself and the 15th December was fixed as the date on which the stamp could be paid. On that date also the plaintiff did not appear and consequently the suit was dismissed by default. On the 17th December an application was made by the plaintiff for the restoration of the suit. It was alleged that he could not pay the Court-fee on the 8th because no Court-fee stamp was available on that day and also that since then he had been ill and therefore unable to attend the Court in order to pay the requisite Court-fee stamp. The Court below thereupon permitted him to pay the Court-fee stamp and admitted the plaint subject to any objection that the defendant might have on the score of limitation.

The suit was registered on the 18th on payment of the requisite Court-fee stamp within the time fixed by the Court and summons sent to the defendant who appeared and raised an objection that the suit was barred by time. This objection found favour with the Judge, Small Cause Court, who on the 1st July 1927 dismissed the suit as barred by time.

An affidavit has been filed with the petition in this Court in which it is asserted by the plaintiff that on the 8th December he could not get the requisite Court-fee stamp from the treasury. There is no counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent. I, therefore, must hold that the allegation of the plaintiff that he was unable to procure the requisite Court-fee on the 8th December owing to the supply of the Court-fee stamps having been exhausted is true.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that no petition for revision lies. Certain authorities were cited in support of this contention and reliance was also placed on the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C. It is to be noted that this is not a petition under S. 115, Civil P. C., but under S. 25, Small Cause Courts Act, and the powers of revision vested in this Court under the latter Act are wider than those under the Civil Procedure Code. With regard to the judgments cited by the learned counsel some of them are no doubt under S. 25, Small Cause Courts Act, and it has been held therein that if a suit, which is barred by time has been decreed by the trial Court the High Court need not interfere in revision with the decree of the trial Court because in such a case substantial justice has been done between the parties and the Court is not bound to interfere in revision in every case in which the judgment of the trial Court may be opposed to some provisions of law. But in the case before me it is not that substantial justice has been done between the parties. On the other hand the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed and if I hold that it has been wrongly dismissed then it would be in the interests of justice that the petition be accepted. The cases cited by the learned counsel, therefore, have no application to the facts of the present case and I must, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits I hold that it having been established that the failure of the plaintiff to affix the requisite Court-fee stamp on the plaint on the 8th December 1927 was not due to any fault on his part, but was due to the supply of stamps having become exhausted, I consider that the Court below should have exercised its discretion under S. 149, Civil P. C. But counsel for the respondent says that in this case not only there was a failure to pay the requisite Court-fee stamp, but also there was subsequent absence of the plaintiff, but that absence has been condoned by the Court below and the explanation of the plaintiff has been accepted as true inasmuch as the Court did set aside the dismissal in default. No notice prior to the restoration of the case was necessary to be sent to the defendant as contended by his counsel because the suit had been dismissed in the absence of the defendant.

I, therefore, hold that there was sufficient cause for the plaintiff not having paid the Court-fee on the plaint on the 8th December and that the Court was fully justified under the circumstances in allowing the plaintiff to pay such fee before the time fixed by it, and further that the same having been so paid the plaint must be deemed to have been presented on the 8th December. Admittedly the suit was within time on that date and consequently this petition is accepted, the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit as barred by time set aside and the case remanded to it with directions to dispose of it on the merits. Costs of these proceedings will abide the result.

Shah Nawaz—for Petitioners.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application for transfer. It came before me on 14th October 1927, and I issued notice on it. I further directed that copies of the application and the affidavit should be sent to the District Magistrate, Kangra at Dharmsala, Mr. Labhu Ram, and also to Mr. Kanwar Bhan and Mr. Disney, Magistrates, in the same district. These officers were directed to submit such explanation as they might think necessary. These explanations came up before me on 11th November 1927. On this date a very unusual document was filed before me by Chaudhuri Shuja-ud-Din, Bar-at-law, Dharmsala, counsel for the applicants. This is an affidavit in connexion with the application for transfer and the declarant, Chaudhri Shuja-ud-Din, has been appearing apparently as counsel for the applicants. According to the well-recognized practice which prevails wherever members of the English Bar practise, the counsel should never file an affidavit in a case in which he is appearing professionally. The reason is obvious. To begin with, it hampers his freedom of action as an advocate. Besides, he gives up his dignified position of detachment as an advocate and lowers himself to the level of either a pairokar or a witness who has to support the case of a particular party by giving evidence on his behalf. Chaudhri Shuja-ud-Din has not exercised proper judgment as a counsel and he has been, in any case, ill-advised in adopting the course that he did. As to the affidavit itself: it has got no evidentiary value as such because it is not such an affidavit at all which a Court of justice can take into consideration. However, the so-called affidavit of Chaudhri Shuja-ud-Din was placed on the file by me on 11th November 1927. Mr. B. H. Bevan Petman asked for further adjournment with the view of filing an additional affidavit or statement.

The case came up before me on 25th November 1927, and it was argued by Mr. Shah Nawaz for the best part of the day. In fact his arguments alone took about three hours. The Crown was represented by the Assistant Legal Remembrancer, Mr. Ram Lal, and naturally he took some time in replying to Mr. Shah Nawaz's arguments. Mr. Ram Lal placed on the record a document which purports to be a letter addressed by Mr. Labhu Ram, District Magistrate, Kangra, to the Government Advocate. I understand that a copy of that letter had also been given to Mr. Shah Nawaz, counsel for the applicants. In any case no objection was taken to this document being placed on the record of the present case, and Mr. Shah Nawaz directed part of his arguments to this document. I regret to say that this document plainly and categorically contradicts the main allegations of Chaudhri Shuja-ud-Din's so-called affidavit. It is a very serious matter if either Chaudhri Shuja-ud-Din's statement is incorrect or the District Magistrate's explanation is erroneous. However, I am satisfied on the explanation submitted by the District Magistrate and Mr. Kanwar Bhan and Mr. Disney that the present application is without force. I do not think that the District Magistrate has conducted himself at any stage in such a way as to create an impression upon the mind of an accused person that the Magistrate was prejudiced against him and that he would not have a fair and impartial trial in his Court. It is true that there has been some bungling during the course of the trial of this case and proceedings have been inordinately protracted, but for this result, I find from an order of Mr. Labhu Ram, dated 15th September 1927, that the applicants are mainly responsible.

At the request of Mr. Shah Nawaz at the last hearing I ordered Mr. Abdul Rab, Additional District Magistrate, Kangra, to give his explanation also in case he thought fit to do so. He has done so. It appears from that explanation that there is some feeling among a certain section of the people in the district which on one occasion, at any rate, took the form of a demonstration which ended in a riot. But for this side issue the District Magistrate, who is trying the case, cannot be held responsible. Furthermore, I do not think that the feeling is of such volume and intensity as to create an atmosphere in the whole district so inimical to the applicants that trial of the case against them would in any way be affected.

Applications for transfer cannot be granted lightly on fanciful and sentimental grounds, and I may also mention that it is not my practice, as a rule to grant such applications when they are supported by false affidavits. I find, I am sorry to say, that the affidavits filed on behalf of the applicants are such that I cannot take any action upon them. I am sure the District Magistrate would try this case with all expedition and would show all fairness and impartiality to the accused persons which is expected of him.

With these observations I reject this application for transfer.

M. Saleem—for Appellants.

Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—Nawab, son of Fattu, and Misri, son of Budha, have been convicted of having been members of an unlawful assembly with the object of revenging an attack upon one Khuda Bakhsh and that the members of this unlawful assembly in the prosecution of that object caused grievous hurt to Lakha and simple hurt to Misri, son of Taura, Nur Khan, son of Atar, and Baru. Each of them has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 325/147, I. P. C., for the grievous hurt caused to Lakha, and to one year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 323/147, I. P. C., for the hurt caused to Misri, son of Taura, Nur Khan and Baru, the four sentences to run concurrently. They have appealed and on their behalf we have heard Mr. Saleem.

The finding of the learned Sessions Judge is that one Khuda Bakhsh has been attacked by Misri, son of Taura, Nur Khan and others who had succeeded in disposing of him entirely, inflicting such injuries as resulted in his death a few hours later, that subsequent to the attack on Khuda Bakhsh and immediately following it Khuda Bakhsh's friends and partizans, including the two appellants, arrived on the spot and attacked Khuda Bakhsh's assailants, causing them various injuries as already indicated. The report in this case was made by Sher Khan at 12 noon at thana Lawa, which is a few furlongs from the scene. The learned Sessions Judge has not accepted the story of the prosecution in its entirety because he has considered that they were obviously partial and their story was incredible. He says :

> It is impossible to accept any portion of their statements unless corroborated by outside facts or self-evident probabilities :

and because the two appellants received injuries, he has convicted them. Now the story told by Sher Khan is that he, together with Misri, son of Taura, and Nur Khan, had gone out on the morning of the 9th June 1927 to sow bajra in their fields after the rain that had fallen on the preceding night, that they had there discovered that the banna between their field and the field of Mt. Sahib Khatun, which was being managed and looked after by Khuda Bakhsh and which is 18 inches lower in level than their own, had beed breached, that they proceeded to repair this breach when they were interrupted by Khuda Bakhsh and Latif. When Khuda Bakhsh and Latif attacked Misri, son of Taura, and Nur Khan, Sher Khan cleared off. He, however, heard Khuda Bakhsh called out and in response to his calls saw a large number of persons including the two appellants, come running to the scene whereupon a general melee ensued in the course of which somehow or other Khuda Bakhsh was beaten and Misri, son of Taura, Nur Khan and Lakha received injuries. That is the case for the prosecution and it was urged by Mr. Saleem that it was wrong on the part of the learned Sessions Judge to resort to conjecture and to assume that the common object of those persons, including the two appellants, who came up on Khuda Bakhsh's cries was to take revenge for the injuries which had been inflicted on Khuda Bakhsh. He referred to Ambika Singh v. King-Emperor (1) and urged that the facts of the present case were, as near as may be, on all fours with the facts of the case cited by him.

In Ambika Singh v. King-Emperor (1) it was held that where on K being assaulted by B a number of persons rushed to the scene and a fracas occurred in which B was killed, the conviction under S. 147 was not sustainable, the common object of the crowd being to rescue K, the person originally assaulted, and not to assault B, his assailant. Further, that in so far as excessive force had been used by some members of the assembly, the users of such force alone were liable to be punished for the assaults committed by them, and not the other members of the assembly ; and finally, that in the absence of proof as to who actually dealt the fatal blow to B, the original assailant, no member of the assembly was punishable in respect of that blow.

It seems to me that in the present case the story as told by Sher Khan shows that when Khuda Bakhsh was attacked by Misri, son of Taura, and Nur Khan, he called out for assistance and those who came to his assistance must be held to have come with the object of rescuing him and the assembly was at that stage, therefore, not an unlawful one. S. 147, I. P. C., is therefore, not applicable in the present case and the individual members of that assembly can only be convicted of any act they committed in excess of their right to rescue Khuda Bakhsh. It seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge has fallen into the error he has owing to the fact that although he kept this trial completely separate from the trial relating to the murder of Khuda Bakhsh, he failed to realize that the material on this record was very considerably different from the material in the other case. In these circumstances, following Ambika Singh v. King-Emperor (1) I accept this appeal and acquit the appellants who must be released forthwith.

Municipal Committee, Lahore—Complainant—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 1777 of 1927, Decided on 16th December 1927, reported by Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 31st October 1927.

Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911), S. 153—Premises used as brothel—Order to the owner thereof to vacate the same is bad—Proper order is to ask the owner to cease to use it as brothel.

An order passed under S. 153, Punjab Municipal Act, on an owner of a hotel which was being used as brothel to vacate the premises is bad ; the proper order in such a case is to ask the owner to discontinue the using of the hotel as a brothel. [P 279 C 2]

Report.—Mr. H. Bharucha, a Parsee gentleman, is carrying on an hotel known as Albion Hotel on the Nicholson Road, Lahore. The Municipal Committee of Lahore complained against him under S. 153, Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, that the said hotel was being used as a brothel and was visited by disorderly persons. The case was tried by Mr. Phailbus, Magistrate, 1st Class, who considered the evidence produced in the case by both the parties and came to a finding that the hotel was in fact used as a brothel, that there was a boarding house in the upper flat of the building and a temple and a mosque in its vicinity and that the neighbours had been disturbed at night by the disorderly behaviour of drunken people in the hotel. On this finding, the learned Magistrate ordered "that Mr. Bharucha should vacate the premises within five days."

This is a petition for revision against the said order. Only three points have been argued before me. The first is that there is no sufficient proof that the hotel is used as a brothel. This is, however, a finding of fact which has been recorded by the Magistrate after considering the evidence and is not open to question on revision. Then it is complained that there was no notice under S. 153, Punjab Municipal Act, declaring the area to be a prohibited area. This argument hardly needs any notice, as there was no prosecution under S. 152. The proceedings have been under S. 153 and the same could be taken within the whole of the municipal area, provided the conditions laid down in the said section were fulfilled, which does appear to be the case here. The last condition is that the Magistrate could not order the petitioner to vacate the premises. This is conceded by the learned counsel on behalf of the Municipal Committee. He agrees that under this section the order should only have been that Mr. Bharucha should, within five days, discontinue the use of the Albion Hotel as a brothel and so arrange that there should be no undue noise and disorderly behaviour therein.

The records are, therefore, submitted to the High Court with a recommendation that the Magistrate directing the hotel premises to be vacated, be set aside, and that an order substituted instead to the effect that the Albion Hotel should cease to be a brothel and should no longer be accessible to disorderly persons and that the said order should be carried out within five days.

Order.—Accepting the recommendation of the referring Court I set aside that portion of the Magistrate's order as directs vacation of the premises and in lieu thereof direct that the petitioner discontinue using the Albion Hotel as a brothel and so arrange the carrying on of his business as to avoid undue noise to the detriment of his neighbours. This he must do within five days.

Civil Revn. No. 130 of 1927, Decided on 16th November 1927, against decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 15th November 1926.

Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 33 — Suit decreed against K and J, both taking separate defences —K not appealing—J appealing on his behalf only—Suit against K cannot be dismissed in J's appeal.

J and K as partners were sued for a certain money. J pleaded that no money was borrowed for the partnership. K admitted liability but pleaded payment of his share of the debt. Defence of both was disbelieved and suit was decreed against both. Against this decree J alone appealed to the Senior Sub-Judge. K did not appeal. The first appellate Court accepted the appeal of J, but instead of dismissing the suit against him alone he dismissed it against K also.

Held : that the first appellate Court was not justified in dismissing the suit as against K.

Ram Lal Anand for Ram Chand Manchand—for Petitioners.

Ghulam Rasul and Din Dayal — for Respondents.

Judgment. — The plaintiff Amir Chand instituted a suit against three persons, Kahan Das, Jinda Ram and Hari Chand for recovery of a certain sum of money which was alleged to be due to him on foot of an entry in the bahi made by Hari Chand as the Karinda of a firm working under the name and style of Kahan Das-Jinda Ram. It was alleged that this firm consisted of two partners Kahan Das and Jinda Ram and that Hari Chand as their agent had made the entry in question.

The defence put forward by Jinda Ram was that the partnership had ended long before the entry in question was made, that the firm had no previous dealings with the plaintiff and that Hari Chand had no authority to raise the debt. Nor was any portion of the money so raised used for any purpose in which he was concerned.

Kahan Das admitted that he was a partner in the firm and that Hari Chand had authority on behalf of the firm to make the entry. He also admitted that he was a member of the firm and was liable for the debt, but pleaded that he had paid off his share of the debt and that he was no longer liable to pay anything more to the plaintiff.

Hari Chand's defence was that he was a mere servant of the other two defendants and was not personally liable.

The Sub-Judge discharged Hari Chand holding that he was a servant and not a partner in the firm. He also held that the defence put forward by Kahan Das and Jinda Ram respectively had not been established. He accordingly passed a decree against both Kahan Das and Jinda Ram.

Against this decree Jinda Ram alone appealed to the learned Senior Sub-Judge raising the same pleas as he had urged in the trial Court. Kahan Das did not appeal and does not appear to have been present at the hearing. The learned Senior Sub-Judge accepted the contentions put forward on behalf of Jinda Ram and accepted the appeal, but instead of dismissing the suit against him alone, he dismissed it against Kahan Das also.

The plaintiff has come up to this Court on the revision side and on his behalf it is urged that the defences set up by Kahan Das and Jinda Ram were separate, that the findings of the trial Court against Kahan Das had not been reversed by the learned Senior Sub-Judge; that O. 41, R. 4 is inapplicable; and the Senior Sub-Judge ought not to have dismissed the suit against Kahan Das.

The findings of the lower appellate Court in favour of Jinda Ram are also attacked, but after hearing the petitioner's counsel I do not find any sufficient ground to interfere with this part of the case in revision. There is no material irregularity committed by the appellate Court in deciding the point on which the suit was dismissed against Jinda Ram. I, therefore, dismiss the revision as against him.

On behalf of Kahan Das I have heard Mr. Ghulam Rasul. But after giving due weight to his contentions I am of opinion that the petition must succeed so far as he is concerned. As pointed out already his defence was wholly different from that of Jinda Ram. He had clearly admitted his membership of the firm at the time when the entry was executed as also the authority of Hari Chand to raise the money on his behalf. He had preferred no appeal himself nor did Jinda Ram purport to appeal on his behalf. The grounds on which the appeal of Jinda Ram was accepted were wholly different from the defence set up by Kahan Das. The learned Senior Sub-Judge was not, therefore, justified in dismissing the suit as against Kahan Das.

Accordingly I accept the petition for revision to this extent that the suit of the plaintiff-petitioner against Kahan Das defendant-respondent will be decreed in full with costs in the trial Court and in this Court, but the suit as against Jinda Ram and Hari Chand is dismissed.

Jinda Ram will have his costs from the petitioner in all Courts.

First Appeal No. 406 of 1923, Decided on 17th January 1928, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Hissar, D/- 24th January 1923.

(a) Custom (Punjab) — Women's right to succeed acknowledged—Riwaj-i-am to the contrary — Onus on females is not so great as in case of males.

Where a custom is acknowledged by which women's right to succeed is admitted such an acknowledgment has great force but it is equally true that where the riwaj-i-am is to the contrary the onus upon the females is not so heavy as it would be in the case of males. [P 281 C 1, 2]

(b) Custom (Punjab) — Daughter entitled to succeed—Her predeceasing the father's widow does not deprive her daughter of succession.

Where a daughter is herself entitled to succeed the mere fact that she predeceased the widow of her father will not deprive her heirs of the succession to the property left by her father and there is no logic in holding that whereas a daughter can succeed as full heir to her father's self-acquired property a daughter's daughter will not so succeed in case her mother had predeceased the father's widow.

G. C. Narang, Nanak Chand and Nawal Kishore—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The pedigree-table of the parties is printed at p. 35 of the paper-book. The plaintiffs are the descendants of Hasan Ali and the defendant, Mt. Kaman, is the daughter's daughter of Mir Khan, brother of Hassan Ali. Ghulam Hussain, the father of Hussan Ali and Mir Khan had three sons: Hassan Ali, Nur Khan, who married Nuri and died without issue, and Mir Khan. It is common ground that the property in dispute was acquired originally by Ghulam Hussain, the common ancestor of the plaintiffs and of the defendant. It is also clear from p. 9 of the paper-book that Ghulam Hussain in his life gifted the property acquired by him in various shares to his sons and other relatives of his and Mir Khan got the property in dispute from Ghulam Hussain by way of gift and not by way of succession.

It has been urged by counsel for the plaintiffs that Ghulam Hussain merely accelerated the succession of his sons but Ghulam Hussain reserved a portion of the property for himself and there were other donees besides the sons and, therefore, this argument has no force. The land that was reserved by Ghulam Hussain for himself was taken in equal shares by Nur Khan and the sons of Hassan Ali. Mir Khan got no share by way of inheritance. It is, therefore, clear that the property was the self-acquired property of Mir Khan, and we hold accordingly.

It has been contended that even if the property be held to be the self-acquired property of Mir Khan the riwaj-i-am of the parties shows that daughters are not the heirs even to the self-acquired property of their father in this tribe of Mussalman Rajputs of the Hissar District. As has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council, where a custom is acknowledged by which women's right to succeed is admitted, such an acknowledgment has great force, but it is equally true that where the riwaj-i-am is to the contrary the onus upon the females is not so heavy as it would be in the case of males. In this particular case there is a note by the officer who prepared the riwaj-i-am printed at p. 136 of the paper-book that he has great doubts as to the accuracy of the reply that daughters in no case inherit their fathers' property whether ancestral or acquired, and he gives instances against the alleged custom including one of Mahommadan Rajputs of the district. He is of opinion that the people who give no explanation of these cases have stated their wishes for the future in this matter and not their existing custom. Besides this note at least two instances have been produced by the defendants in which daughters succeeded to the estate of their father. One is Ex. D. 6. printed at p. 128 where after a contest it was decided by the learned District Judge that daughters did succeed to their father's self-acquired property. The other instance is Ex. D. 65 at p. 93 of the paper-book in which a daughter succeeded to the property of her father. In this case the area of the property was 233 kanals, and though there was no contest it cannot be said that this was a small amount of land, which the daughter was allowed to keep in lieu of maintenance. On the other hand the plaintiffs have not been able to prove a single instance in which collaterals have excluded daughters in succession to self-acquired property of the father. A number of witnesses have come forward to state that in this tribe there is no custom that daughters succeed to their father's property. But after considering this evidence we are of opinion that the presumption raised by the riwaj-i-am has been rebutted in this particular case and that daughters have a right to succeed to the self-acquired property of their father.

On the death of Mir Khan his widow, Mt. Tajo succeeded to the property. Mt. Tajo gifted the land to her daughter Mt. Umdan with the consent of all the collaterals now suing or of their predecessors-in-interest. It is contended, however, that the gift to Mt. Umdan was not an acceleration of the estate of the next heir by the widow, but was a gift conditional on Mt. Umdan having male issue and that as Mt. Umdan predeceased Mt. Tajo without leaving male issue the property reverted to Mt. Tajo and, on the death of Mt. Tajo, which took place during the pendency of this case, Mt. Kaman could only succeed as a daughter's daughter and that there is no evidence to the effect that a daughter's daughter would exclude 'near collaterals. It has bee contended on the other side that the word "pisri" in the mutation order is an interpolation and that the order itself makes no mention of any such condition and further that Mt. Tajo, the donor, withdrew her claim and therefore, waived the condition which was in her favour.

It is unnecessary to decide any of these points because we are of opinion that where a daughter is herself entitled to succeed the mere fact that she predeceased the widow of her father, would not deprive her heirs of the succession to the property left by her father, and there is no logic in holding that, whereas a daughter could succeed as full heir to her father's self-acquired property, a daughter's daughter would not so succeed in case her mother had predeceased the father's widow. In any case the daughter's daughter is the defendant and and it was for the plaintiffs to prove that collaterals would exclude a daughter's daughter from inheritance of self-acquired property of the father in such a case. There is no evidence to show this and we, therefore, consider that Mt. Kaman is entitled to the property.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's case with costs throughout.

Sheo Ram—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 1049 of 1927, Decided on 19th January 1928, from order of 1st. Cl. Hony. Magistrate, Hissar, D/- 27th May 1927.

Evidence Act, S. 26— Confession made by accused not to Magistrate but Superintendent of Post Offices is not admissible.

Confession made by an accused not to a Magistrate but to the Superintendent of Post Offices, at his house, where he was taken temporarily by the police and was again removed back to police lock-up, is inadmissible in evidence : 20 Bom. 165, Foll. [P 283 C 2]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—This is an appeal preferred by the Local Government, under S. 417, Criminal P. C., against an order of acquittal. The respondent Sheo Ram was tried for the theft of certain postal articles from the post office at Tosham in the Hissar District, but was acquitted by the Magistrate on the ground that the prosecution had failed to establish the charge.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated : One Bishen Singh was the postmaster of the post office at Tosham, and during his temporary absence on leave Islam-ud-din, a postman, was appointed to officiate for him as postmaster. On the afternoon of 12th March 1926 Islam-ud-din lodged a report at the police station to the effect that two parcels insured for Rs. 400, four currency notes of the value of the 210, and Rs. 9-12-0 in cash had been lost, and asked for an investigation. It appears that the postal authorities originally suspected both Islam-ud-din and the respondent of the theft, and consequently called upon each of them to pay Rs. 300 in order to make up the loss caused to the Postal Department. Subsequently the respondent was arrested and prosecuted for having committed the theft.

Now, the officiating postmaster, who was in charge of the articles in question, describes the procedure adopted by him for keeping them in safe custody. He states that on the morning of 12th March he placed a small box called cash box, containing the said articles and cash amounting to Rs. 430 in a large box; and, after locking that box as well as the door of the post office, he, accompanied by the postman Sheo Ram, left the post office and went to the city. At about 1 p. m. he alone returned to the post office but again left after a short time. It was, however, in the afternoon, when he came back again, that he found the lock of the large box open and discovered that the articles mentioned above had been removed from the small box.

This version makes it clear that the theft, if any, was committed in broad daylight. But there is no eyewitness of the affair. The case for the prosecution rests upon two pieces of evidence ; (1) the alleged confession of the accused ; and (2) the recovery of the stolen property from a nauhra ; and it is necessary to examine them carefully.

As regards the confession: it is common ground that it was made after the accused had been arrested by the police. The parties are at variance as to the exact date on which he was taken into custody, but it is admitted, even by the Sub-Inspector of Police, that he was arrested on 24th March. It was not, however, until the 27th March that the confession relied upon by the prosecution was made by him. It is noteworthy that the confession was made, not to a Magistrate, but to the Superintendent of Post Offices at his house at Hissar, and was then reduced to writing. Now, S. 26, Evidence Act, lays down that no confession made by any person whilst he is in the custody of a police officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against such person. The prosecution, however, seek to get over this imperative provision of the law by alleging that the Sub-Inspector of Police was not present at the time of the making of the confession and that on 27th March he merely took the accused to the house of the Superintendent of Post Offices (who was himself taking a leading part in the investigation of the case) and left him there. When the Sub-Inspector returned to the house after an interval of about three hours he found that the accused had not only admitted the commission of the crime but also reduced it to writing. He then brought the prisoner back to the police lock-up with the document embodying the confession.

Now, taking this version of the incident at its face value, it is obvious that the reason for taking the accused to the house of the Superintendent of Post Offices and leaving him temporarily there was that he, having already been prepared to make a confession, should make it to a person who could not be regarded to be a police officer.

As observed above, the confession was made at Hissar, but it is not explained why the accused was not produced before a Magistrate who would have satisfied himself that the confession was voluntarily made and would, before recording the confession, have explained to him that he was not bound to make a confession and that, if he did so, it might be used as evidence against him. The procedure adopted by the police was obviously intended to evade the mandatory rule enacted by S. 26, Evidence Act, and we consider that the confession is inadmissible in evidence.

The principle enunciated in Empress v. Lester (1), is applicable to the present case. In that case, a person under arrest on a charge of murder was taken in a tonga, from the place where the alleged offence was committed, to Godhra. A friend drove with the accused in the tonga and a mounted policeman rode in front. In the course of the journey, the policeman left the tonga and went to a neighbouring village to procure a fresh horse, the tonga meanwhile proceeding slowly along the road for some miles without any escort. In the absence of the policeman, the accused made a communication to the friend with reference to the alleged crime. At the trial, it was proposed to ask what the prisoner had said, on the ground that the prisoner was not then in custody, and that S. 26, Evidence Act, did not apply. It was, however, held that, notwithstanding the temporary absence of the policeman, the accused was still in custody, and the question must be disallowed. In the case before us, the accused, who had been in the police lock-up for three days was brought out temporarily, taken to the house of the Superintendent of Post Offices, where he made the confession, and then brought back to the lock-up. No breach of the police custody was occasioned by the temporary separation of the accused from the Sub-Inspector of Police in these circumstances, and this attempt to evade the law, disingenuous as it was, cannot take the case out of the prohibition prescribed by S. 26, Evidence Act.

Coming now to the recovery of the stolen property: we observe that the place where the recovery was made was not a residential house, but a nauhra or a cattle house. It is admitted that the nauhra was the property of one Nirmal Singh, but it is stated by the Sarbarah lambardar Moiz-ud-din (P. W. 4) that the accused had taken it on rent from the owner. Nizam-ud-din, lambarder, another witness for the prosecution, however, deposes that it was the accused's father Devi Sahai who had taken the nauhra on lease from Nirmal Singh. Be that as it may, the witnesses for the prosecution admit that the building was, on the day of the search, locked up; and that the key of the lock was obtained from Devi Sahai. There is not a scintilla of evidence to prove that the nauhra in question was in the possession of the prisoner, or that it should be deemed to be in his possession.

It appears that the nauhra is surrounded by low walls. Nizam-ud-din also states, and his statement is borne out by what the trial Magistrate himself saw at the time of his inspection of the spot, that one of the walls was in a dilapidated condition. In these circumstances the Magistrate was justified in holding that the building was accessible to any outsider who could, if he so desired, place in it the incriminating articles.

There is some evidence to the effect that the accused himself dug out from the courtyard of the nauhra a piece of cloth containing Rs. 10-12-0 in cash. Nizam-ud-din, on the contrary, deposes that it was Moiz-ud-din and the Sub-Inspector of Police who were making the search for the stolen property after digging up the foundations of the walls. Moreover, the cash stolen was only Rs. 9-12-0 and it is not explained why the accused had added a rupee to it and concealed Rs. 10-12-0 in the courtyard.

Our attention has been invited also to the evidence for the prosecution which shows that currency notes of the value of Rs. 760 were found in a piece of cloth recovered from a small room in the nauhra. There was no door to this room, and the cloth containing the notes was found lying under some fodder which was removed partly by a sweeper and partly by the accused. Now, according to the story for the prosecution, currency notes of the value of Rs. 210 were stolen from the post office, but the search of the building resulted, as stated above, in the recovery of the notes of the value of Rs. 760. The explanation offered, for the excess, which amounted to Rs. 550, is that notes of that value were contained in the two parcels which were insured for Rs. 400.

It is to be remembered that this nauhra had been searched by the police at least once before, but no property was recovered therefrom. In view of this fact and having regard to the defects pointed out above, we must hold that, even if the discovery was not a faked affair, it has not been proved that the accused was actually or constructively in possession of the stolen articles.

As the confession is inadmissible in evidence and there is no other reliable evidence to connect the accused with the commission of the crime, it is unnecessary to examine the authorities cited by the learned counsel for the respondent which lay down the proposition that the finding of fact arrived at by the trial Court is ordinarily entitled to great weight and should be set aside by the Court of appeal only when the indications of mistake are clear, specially when the finding is in favour of the accused's innocence. If in such a case, the evidence is all oral, and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion without involving other considerations, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses must be treated as almost conclusive.

For the aforesaid reasons we cannot set aside the verdict of acquittal pronounced by the trial Magistrate. We accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Judgment.—This revision was admitted on the question of the interpretation to be placed on a certain document. The suit was between certain landlords and their tenants, the remaining landlords being impleaded as defendants. The agreement in question which ended the previous litigation provided for the raising of the rent from a certain date and immediately after the sentence which made this provision the words are to be found that repairs would be done on behalf of the landlords by one Haji Karim Bakhsh before that date. The contention of the defendants has been throughout that the raising of the rent was conditional on the previous carrying out of the repairs. The view taken by both the trial Cpurt and the lower appellate Court was that the two conditions were independent and that the raising of the rent was not dependent upon the previous performance of the repairs.

I have been referred to the standard authority Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1) and also to Shew Prosad v. Ram Chunder (2), and on the other side reliance has been placed upon Jogunnessa Bibi v. Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee (3). It appears to me that this is essentially a case governed by Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1). There are two possible views of the meaning of the words used in the document, but the trial Court and the appellate Court have taken one, and whether I agree with that view or not it is not open to me to take the question up in revision and the petition should not have been admitted by me in the first instance for I am of opinion that it is a revision and not a second appeal and that the the words 'house rent' as used in para. 8, Sch. 2, Act 9, 1887, cover and include shop rent. If it be conceded in the first instance that the interpretation of this document is a question of law and not a finding of fact on the intention of the parties similar to that explained in Diwan Chand v. Sundar (4) and even if it be further conceded that the question of law has been wrongly decided no revision can be entertained as laid down in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1).

Tek Chand, J.—The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree table:

(For pedigree see p. 286.)

The property in dispute is situate in two villages Rahon and Bharata Khurd, both in the Jullundur District. The last holder of the property was one Badar Bakhsh who died sonless many years ago leaving him surviving a widow, Mt. Aziman, and a daughter Mt. Janat. On his death the mutation of his entire estate was effected in favour of Mt. Aziman who took possession on the usual widow's life-estate. On 21st May 1910, Aziman gifted 928 kanals 6 marlas of land in Rahon to the plaintiffs, Saif-ul-Rahman and Aziz-ul-Rahman, who are the sons of her daughter Mt. Jannat. In the same year Mt. Aziman sold 55 kanals out of the remaining land in Rahon to Jang Baz Khan and Abdul Rahman.

The present defendants, who are the collaterals of Badar Bakhsh in the fourth degree, instituted two suits to contest the gift and the sale respectively. In the suit relating to the gift the daughter's sons were impleaded as defendants, while in the other suit in which the sale was contested the vendees were the sole defendants, the daughter's sons not being impleaded as they had no immediate interest in that contest. The suit relating to the sale was decreed in favour of the collaterals on a compromise entered into between them and the vendees. The terms of this compromise were that the vendees were to retain possession of the land sold to them till the death of Mt. Aziman, and on her death the land alienated was to be taken possession of by the collaterals without any payment to the vendees. This decree is dated 19th December 1911 and, as pointed out already, the daughter's sons, the present plaintiffs, were no parties to this compromise or the decree.

The collaterals' suit to contest the gift by the widow in favour of the daughter's sons relating to the Rahon land was finally decided by Mr. Lumsden, Divisional Judge, Jullundur, on 25th June 1913, who held that according to the custom prevailing among the parties the collaterals were preferential heirs qua the ancestral land, but the daughter's sons had a superior right to succeed qua the non-ancestral land. He carefully examined the history of the various plots comprised in the gift and came to the conclusion that 272 kanals 16 marlas were ancestral and the remaining 655 kanals 10 marlas were non-ancestral. Accordingly a declaratory decree was passed in favour of the collaterals to the effect that the gift would not affect their reversionary rights with regard to 272 kanals 16 marlas. The rest of the claim was disallowed.

The widow Mt. Aziman died in 1921, and on her death the collaterals took possession of the whole of the land in mauza Bharta Khurd and also of the lands in Rahon for which they had obtained a declaratory decree in 1911 and 1913.

On 1st March 1924, the present suit was instituted by Saif-ul-Rahman and Aziz-ul-Rahman, the daughter's sons of Mt. Aziman and Badar Bakhsh for possession of: (a) the whole of the land in Bharta Khurd belonging to Badar Bakhsh which on his death was held by his widow Mt. Aziman and (b) 55 kanals of land in mauza Rahon which had been sold by Mt. Aziman to Jang Baz Khan and Abdul Rahman, and with regard to which, as already stated, a decree on compromise had been passed in favour of the collaterals. The plaintiffs claimed that both these lands were nonancestral of Badar Bakhsh qua the defendants and that according to the custom prevailing in the tribe of the parties the daughters and their sons had a preferential right to succeed to such property as against the collaterals.

The plaintiffs also claimed a declaration with regard to Khasra No. 2669, but there is now no controversy relating to this plot and I shall not deal with it in this judgment. It may also be noted that the present suit is not concerned with 272 kanals 16 marlas out of the gifted land for which a declaratory decree had been passed in favour of the collaterals in 1913.

The defence put forward by the collaterals was that the whole of the Bharta Khurd land, as also the 55 kanals at Rahon was ancestral. With regard to the latter land it was further pleaded, that even if it be held to be nonancestral the plaintiffs have locus standi to sue, as the defendants, collaterals had obtained it under a compromise decree passed against the vendees.

There is now no contention between the parties as to the rule of custom governing succession, all concerned being agreed that the daughters had a prior right to succeed to the nonancestral property and the collaterals to the ancestral property.

The learned Subordinate Judge traced the history of such plot of land and held that the Bharta Khurd land in suit comprised $5\frac{1}{2}$ out of 72 shares which represented the total area held by the common ancestor of the parties in that village. Out of these $5\frac{1}{2}$ shares he held that 3 were ancestral and $2\frac{1}{2}$ were nonancestral. As to the 55 kanals in Rahon he found that only one-fourth of it was ancestral, and the remaining three-fourths was nonancestral. He further overruled the defendants' plea that the compromise decree of 1911 was a bar to the maintainability of the suit with regard to the Rahon land. A decree was accordingly passed in favour of the plaintiffs for $2\frac{1}{2}$/$5\frac{1}{2}$ of the land in Bharta Khurd and for three-fourths of 55 kanals in Rahon.

Both parties appealed to the learned District Judge, who in a judgment, the reasoning of which I confess I am unable to understand, held that the whole of the Bharta land was ancestral. As regards the Rahon land he did not think it necessary to decide whether the whole or any part of it was ancestral as he thought that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue by reason of the principles underlying Punjab Act 1, 1920, and the rule laid down in Partapi v. Hazara Singh (1). On these findings he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in toto.

The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court and we have heard Mr. Badri Das in support of the appeal, while Mr. Zafar-ullah-Khan has addressed us on behalf of the respondents. As to the Bharta Khurd land Mr. Badri Das has conceded that 3 shares out of the $5\frac{1}{2}$ in dispute have descended from Ghulam-Mohi-ud-Din to Badar Bakhsh in the male line of succession and, therefore, it must be held to be ancestral qua the plaintiffs. On this admission the plaintiffs have obviously no claim with regard to these 3 shares. As to the remaining $2\frac{1}{2}$ shares, it has been found that they were originally held by Ghulam-Mohi-ud-Din from whom they descended to Muhammad Bakhsh, and on Muhammad Bakhsh's line becoming extinct, devolved on one of his collaterals Qutab-ud-Din. Subsequently Qutab-ud-Din gifted these $2\frac{1}{2}$ shares to Wazir Khan, the father of Badar Bakhsh. The question to be decided is whether this land, which was at one time held by the common ancestor Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din and which had under the ordinary rules of succession descended to one of his male lineal descendants, Qutab-ud-Din, retained its ancestral character after Qutab-ud-Din had gifted it to one of his collaterals, Wazir Khan. There is no doubt that if Wazir Khan had obtained this land by succession it would have been ancestral. But here the ordinary course of inheritance was diverted by the gift by Qutab-ud-Din to Wazir Khan, who was not his heir at the time He was one of his distant collaterals and the gift by Qutab-ud-Din to him was admittedly not made by way of surrender of his estate or acceleration of succession but was a gift pure and simple. In my opinion the mere fact that the donee was one of the large number of collaterals makes no difference whatever. It will be seen from the pedigree table that Qutab-ud-Din's immediate heirs were his uncle Samme Khan and his first cousin Chuhar Khan, and on Samme Khan's and Chunhar Khan's lines becoming extinct his estate would have been divided equally among the descendants of Bube Khan, Muhammad Bakhsh and Karim Bakhsh. Wazir Khan was a remote heir of Qutab-ud-Din, and even if he was to succeed at all to Qutab-ud-Din's property he would have got only a small portion of his estate. It cannot, therefore, be said that a gift made in these circumstances partook of the nature of an acceleration of succession or was made by reason merely of the donee's connexion with the common ancestor. In any case the onus of proving these facts lay upon the collaterals, who have failed to place any materials on the record from which a contrary conclusion might be drawn.

It is now firmly established that land ceases to be ancestral if it comes into the hands of an owner otherwise than by descent or by reason merely of his connexion with the common ancestor: see Sri Ram v. Ramji Das (2), which has been followed in Gurdit v. Mt. Ishar Kuar (3); Munsha Singh v. Uttam Singh (4): Phui v. Devatia (5); Nagina Singh v. Jiwan Singh (6); and Ghania v. Phuman Singh (7). Applying the test that has been laid down in these rulings this land must be held to be nonancestral. Mt. Zafar Ullah Khan relies strongly on Imam Din v. Ram Rattan (8) in which a Division Bench of this Court held that property which is ancestral does not cease to be so merely because the owner acquired it not by descent but by gift from a collateral, where the reason of the gift was the donee's connexion with the common ancestor of himself and the donor. The judgment as printed in Indian Cases does not set out the history of the land in any great detail and it is not possible to say definitely on what facts that decision was given. We sent for the High Court record relating to that case and examined the judgments of the two lower Courts, but nothing was revealed which could give us an indication as to the circumstances under which the gift has been made, except that it appeared that the donor there was sonless and the donee was his brother, who would have in the ordinary course succeeded to the former on his death. If this was so, the case was clearly one of acceleration of succession and in those circumstances it was rightly held that the gift would not alter the character of the land which would still continue to be ancestral. The facts in the present case, however, are, as pointed out already, entirely different. I, therefore, hold that the learned trial Judge was correct in holding that the whole of the land in Bharta Khurd was nonancestral to which the plaintiffs had a right to succeed in preference to the defendants. It may be mentioned that the learned District Judge sought to base his decision on Maya Das v. Gurdit Singh (9), but both counsel are agreed that that ruling has not got the remotest bearing on the point for determination in the case. I would, therefore, set aside the finding of the learned District Judge relating to the Bharta Khurd land and restore that of the learned Subordinate Judge.

As to the 55 kanals of Rahon land the learned Subordinate Judge found that one-fourth of it was ancestral and three-fourths nonancestral. The learned District Judge has given no finding on this point. Both Mr. Badri Das and Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan, after examining the record, are agreed that this finding of the Subordinate Judge is in accord with the facts on the record. Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan, however, argues that the plaintiffs are not entitled to be heard in second appeal in support of their claim relating to this land, as the learned District Judge has thrown out their claim on a question of custom, and as no certificate has been filed with the memorandum of appeal, this Court is precluded from adjudicating upon it. It appears, however, from the pleadings of the parties and the issues as framed, as well as from the evidence led at the trial that no question of custom was raised by either party that might have had any bearing on the claim relating to this land. The learned District Judge in rejecting this part of the plaintiffs' claim purports to follow Partapi v. Hazara Singh (1), from which ruling he infers that the plaintiffs, who are the daughter's sons of Mt. Aziman had no right to contest the sale effected by her. He also thought that the decree which the collaterals had obtained in 1911 would enure for the benefit of those persons only who have a right to sue under Punjab Act 1 of 1920, the plaintiffs have no locus standi to sue.

With regard to the first of these grounds I may say at once that neither party had during the trial suggested that in the tribe to which the parties belong daughters or their sons have no right to contest an alienation by the widow of the last male holder with regard to the property which she had got from her husband. No evidence was led on the point nor any finding given by the trial Judge. The learned District Judge, was therefore, not justified in importing it, into the decision of the case. If the question had been raised at the proper stage and if a decision on it had been necessary for the purposes of this case, it would not have been difficult for the plaintiffs to prove that they had a locus standi to contest Mt. Aziman's alienation. It is only sufficient to point out that Mt. Partapi v. Hazara Singh (1) is no longer regarded as laying down a rule of general application. Subsequent decisions of this Court, the most important of which are Gobinda v. Nandu (10) and Dayal Kaur v. Mahtab Kaur (11) have taken a contrary view of the locus standi of a female to contest an alienation by another female. Further this question is of no importance whatever in this litigation as the present is not a suit to contest an alienation by a widow. It is a suit to succeed to the property of the last male holder on the death of his widow by persons who are admittedly his next heirs and, therefore, the rule in Mt. Partapi's case has no bearing on it.

Nor can I see the force of the argument based upon Punjab Act 1 of 1920. That Act prescribes the period of limitation for suits by a certain class of collaterals to contest alienations of ancestral land. In the present case no question of limitation is involved nor is the suit one to contest an alienation of ancestral land. There can be no doubt that the decree passed in 1911 setting aside the sale in 1911 enures for the benefit of those persons, who were entitled to succeed at the time when succession opened out in 1921. The plaintiffs are admittedly the heirs of Badar Bakhsh qua his nonancestral land and are entitled to succeed to it.

For these reasons the learned District Judge's finding cannot be supported. As the decision proceeded on a point, which was neither in the pleading nor put in issue and a decision on which was not really required for the decision of the case it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to file certificate under S. 41 (1) (3), Punjab Courts Act, with their memorandum of second appeal. I would, therefore, overrule the objection raised by Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan against the competency of the appeal. Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan has frankly conceded that he is unable to support the plea raised by the defendants in their written statements that the compromise decree of 1911 barred the plaintiffs' claim to this land. I have already held that three-fourths of the land is ancestral. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to succeed with regard to the three-fourths of 55 kanals of land in Rahon.

For the foregoing reasons I would accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. As the plaintiffs have substantially succeeded they will get their costs in all Courts.

Civil Revn. No. 328 of 1927, Decided on 30th November 1927, from order of 2nd Class Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 2nd April 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 1, R. 9 and O. 2, R. 7—Objection regarding misjoinder of parties raised but not pressed — No issue regarding misjoinder framed—Trial proceeding on merits—Order returning plaint due to misjoinder at this stage is bad.

In a suit one of the parties objected to the suit on the ground of misjoinder of parties and of causes of action, but the objection was not pressed further and the Court framed issues, but no issue was framed as to the suit being bad for misjoinder of parties or of causes of action. Evidence was then recorded and case closed. After this the Court returned the plaint on the ground that two different causes of action were joint and that two separate suits should be filed.

Held, that as one of the parties had pleaded that the suit was bad for multifariousness but no issue was framed on this point and the parties had proceeded to trial on the merits, the objection has waived and so the order returning the plaint on that score at so late a stage is bad. [P 290 C 2]

Nand Lal—for Petitioners.

Saim Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 240 alleged to be due from three persons, Ghulam Hussain, Mohammad Hussain and Hassan sons of Madu. In the plaint it was alleged that the sum claimed was due on account of: (a), a balance struck by Madu, father of the defendants; and (b), a loan of 18¾ pais of wheat borrowed by Ghulam Hussain, defendant 1, from the plaintiffs. A decree was claimed for the sum due on both these items.

The defendants resisted the suit alleging that nothing was due in either account and pleading that there was misjoinder of parties and of causes of action in the suit as framed. The Court framed two issues on the merits:

(1) Whether a balance had been struck relating to item (a) by the father of the defendants and (2) whether the quantity of wheat mentioned in (b) had been given by the plaintiffs to defendant 1.

No issue was framed as to the suit being bad for misjoinder of parties or of causes of action. Both the parties were directed to lead evidence on the issues framed. The plaintiffs after producing their evidence closed their case on 2nd April 1927, but the defendants' pleader stated that they had no evidence to give. At this stage the Court instead of deciding the suit on the issues framed passed an order holding that the plaintiffs had joined two different causes of action in a single suit and accordingly it returned the plaint to the plaintiffs with the direction that they should file two separate suits.

A petition for revision has been preferred by the plaintiffs and I have heard Dr. Nand Lal for the petitioners and Mr. Saim Das for the respondents. I am of opinion that the order of the lower Court is clearly erroneous and ought to be set aside. The defendants had no doubt pleaded that the suit was bad for multifariousness but no issue was framed on this point and the parties had proceeded to trial on the merits. The defendants had no doubt raised the objections, but they had clearly waived it. The suit was a simple one and no real embarrassment was or could be caused to the parties by the joinder of the two causes of action. Therefore the defendants never pressed the objection and for all practical purposes had abandoned it.

I, therefore, accept the petition, set aside the order of the lower Court and send the case back to it for disposal in accordance with law. Costs will be costs in the cause.

First Appeal No. 796 of 1923, Decided on 28th November 1927.

Custom (Punjab)—Female inheriting landed property from male holds on life-tenure — Reversioners can contest alienation of even non-ancestral property.

A female inheriting landed estate from a male holds the property on life-tenure, and it is immaterial whether the female is a widow, a daughter or a mother. A female is not competent to alienate the property except for necessity, and the reversionary heirs of the last male holder are entitled to contest the alienation, even if the property is not proved to be ancestral: 18 P. R. 1906, Ref. [P 291 C 1,2]

Des Raj Sawhney and Din Dayal Kapur—for Appellants.

Zafrulla Khan, Bashir Ahmad and Khurshid Zaman—for Respondents.

Judgment.—On 19th March 1918, one Mt. Umar Bibi, acting on behalf of her two minor daughters, mortgaged the land in dispute to the defendants Umar Din and Muhammad Din for Rs. 755. The estate originally belonged to Mt.

Umar Bibi's deceased husband Sadar Din, a Jat of Kotli Maharan in the Gujranwala District, and on the latter's death it was inherited by his widow. The widow subsequently contracted a marriage with one Jalal, and consequently forfeited her life-estate, with the result that the property was mutated in favour of the two daughters of Sadar Din.

The plaintiffs, who claim to be the collaterals of Sadar Din, have brought the present action for the declaration that they are entitled to inherit the land as soon as the daughters get married or attain majority, and that the alienation shall not prejudicially affect their right of succession to the estate. Now, the trial Judge holds, after examining the evidence on the record, and we have no hesitation in endorsing his conclusion that the plaintiffs are collaterals of Sadar Din in the sixth degree and not in the fifth degree as claimed by them. We do not, however, agree with the learned Judge that the property in question has been proved to be ancestral qua the plaintiffs. It is beyond dispute that it was their duty to satisfy the Court that the property descended from the common ancestor Ghariba, and the mere fact that the revenue records are silent on the question of the acquisition of the land by any of the descendants of Ghariba does not justify the conclusion that it belonged to him. A mere conjecture, however plausible, cannot be a substitute for proof, and the learned counsel for the plaintiffs is unable to invite our attention to any evidence which would show that the property descended from the common ancestor.

Nor do we think that the plaintiffs, who are related to the last male holder in the sixth degree, are entitled to inherit the estate in preference to his daughters, more especially when it is not proved to be ancestral. The onus rested upon them to establish a custom in favour of their right of succession to the exclusion of the daughters, and this onus they have wholly failed to discharge.

The trial Judge is, however, wrong in dismissing the suit merely on the ground that the daughters have got a preferential right of succession. The rule of the customary law is firmly established that a female inheriting landed estate from a male holds the property on life-tenure, and it is immaterial whether the female is a widow, a daughter or a mother, vide, inter alia, Abdul Hussan v. Habib Ullah (1). A female is not competent to alienate the property except for necessity, and the reversionary heirs of the last male holder are entitled to contest the alienation, even if the property is not proved to be ancestral.

It is, therefore, clear that the alienation cannot adversely affect the plaintiffs when the succession opens out to them, unless the mortgagees prove not only consideration but also necessity for the mortgage. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, wrong in dismissing the suit without determining the question of the consideration and necessity for the alienation.

We accordingly accept the appeal and remit the case to the trial Judge for redecision with reference to the foregoing remarks. The costs in this Court shall abide the event.

Tek Chand, J.—The facts of the dispute giving rise to the action out of which this appeal arises are as follows :

The property in suit was acquired by one Bakha who was a Sial of the Dinga got residing in mauza Kaurian in the Jhang District. Bakha died about 17 years before the institution of the suit, leaving him surviving a widow Bharai, defendant 1, and his pre-deceased son's daughter Daulat. Daulat married Sardara who is also a Dinga Sial of the same district, and gave birth to two sons : Muhammad, defendant 2, and Ahmad, defendant 3. On the death of Bakha the property in dispute was mutated in the name of his widow Bharai. On 13th August 1920, Mt. Bharai made a gift of this property in favour of her pre-deceased son's daughter's sons, Muhammad and Ahmad, defendants 2 and 3. She had mutation entered in respect of this gift and in the proceedings before the revenue officer stated that she was making this gift in pursuance of instructions given in an oral will by her husband just before his death. The mutation was sanctioned in favour of the donees on 11th April 1921.

On 10th March 1922, Inayat, claiming himself to be a collateral of Bakha, deceased, in the fourth degree, instituted the present suit for a declaration that the aforesaid gift was null and void and ineffectual as against his rights. Defendants 2 and 3 denied that the plaintiff was a collateral of the husband of the donor in the fourth degree. On the other hand, they alleged that they were related to the deceased in the fifth degree and that the plaintiff was more distantly related to him. The will, which had been mentioned by Mt. Bharai during the mutation proceedings, was also pleaded in support of the gift. It was further stated that the donees were the sons of the daughter of the pre-deceased son of Bakha and the gift being in the nature of acceleration of succession the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue. In their statements before issues it was admitted by both counsel that Sials were governed by the general agricultural custom of the province in matters of succession and alienation. The trial Court in an exhaustive judgment dismissed the suit and the plaintiff has preferred a first appeal to this Court.

I may at the outset remark that the defendants have entirely failed to establish the oral will alleged to have been made by Bakha just before his death 17 or 18 years ago, under which Mt. Bharai, purported to make the gift in favour of the defendants. The evidence produced by the defendants in support of it is very vague and inconclusive and was, in my opinion, rightly rejected by the lower Court.

The most important question to be decided is how and in what degree are the parties related to Bakha, deceased. As already stated. the .plaintiff claimed to be a collateral of the fourth degree. In support of his alleged relationship, he produced twelve witnesses. Mr. Gopal Chand for the appellant has read this evidence in extenso before us, and, after considering his arguments, I am of opinion that no reliance whatsoever can be placed on their testimony. Mr. Gopal Chand principally relies on the evidence of Ghulam Hassan (P. W. 7) who claims to be the family mirasi of Dinga Sials of the Jhang District. This witness has produced a pedigree-table which purports to connect the plaintiff with Bakha deceased, in the fourth degree. After going through his evidence and examining the document put in by him, I have not the least doubt that this pedigree-table has been manufactured for the purposes of this case. The rest of the oral evidence is of a partisan character and is extremely vague and indefinite as to the exact relationship of the plaintiff with Bakha, deceased. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge came to a correct conclusion in holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was related to the deceased Rakha in the fourth degree.

Defendant 2 and 3 claim to be connected with the deceased Bakha in two different ways. Firstly, they contend that they were his collaterals in the fifth degree ; and secondly that they were his predeceased son's daughter's sons. As to the alleged collateral relationship, I must say at once that the evidence produced by the defendants in no way differs in character from that produced by the plaintiff. Two of these witnesses, Inayat (D. W. 2) and Sultan (D. W. 5) claim to be the maurusi mirasis of the defendants and they have propounded a pedigree-table which is printed as Ex. D-3 at pages 13 to 16 of the paper-book. After examining the evidence of these two witnesses and looking at the document produced by them, I am of opinion that this document also has been prepared for the purposes of this case. The rest of the oral evidence produced by the defendants to prove their alleged collateral relationship is of a partisan character and must, like the evidence of the plaintiff, be totally rejected.

There is, however, no doubt that the defendants donees are the sons of the daughter of the pre-deceased son of Bakha, deceased. This was, as already pointed out, stated in so many words in the mutation proceedings and was not denied either in those proceedings or in the written statement filed at the trial. Counsel for the plaintiff did not contradict this in his statement made before the issues were framed and the case in the lower Court proceeded on this assumption. Mr. Gopal Chand has been unable to point out anything to the contrary and it must be held that defendants 2 and 3 are Bakha's predeceased son's daughter's sons. The result of my findings on this point, therefore, is that, whereas it is established that both the plaintiff and defendants are Dinga Sial and very probably are the descendants of a common ancestor and are his agnates of a remote degree, it is not possible to definitely say in what degree either the plaintiff or the defendants are related to him. But the defendants are in this advantageous position that they are the predeceased son's daughter's sons of Bakha deceased.

The next question to be considered is whether on the above findings the plaintiff has established a locus standi to maintain the suit. Mr. Gopal Chand for the plaintiff contends that Mt. Bharai, defendant 1, was in possession of her husband's estate on the usual widow's life-tenure and as such she had no power to make a gift beyond her lifetime. He argues that the plaintiff being an agnate of Bakha deceased, even though of a remote degree, has a right to question his widow's alienation and to preserve the estate for the benefit of the reversionary body after her death. I am, however, of opinion that this contention is devoid of all force. As pointed out already all that has been established is that the plaintiff belongs to be same got and is possibly or at best probably descended from a remote common ancestor with Bakha deceased. As such, he has, in my judgment, no right whatever to impugn an alienation by Bakha's widow.

It is now settled that the mere fact that a person belongs to the same got as the last male owner gives him no right to control his widow's dealings with regard to the property that has descended to her from her husband. In Muhammad Rafi v. Khazan Singh (1), which is regarded as the leading authority on the subject, it was held that a person being unable to prove any specific relationship with the deceased proprietor, cannot be allowed to maintain a suit for declaration to contest an alienation on the ground that he belonged to the same got or was descended from the same stock as the alienor. To the same effect are the decisions in Ram Bhaj v. Nand Ram (2), Jhindu v. Gopal (3), Kirpa v. Chinti (4), and the recent case of Duni Chand v. Lekhu (5). It must, therefore, be held that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain the suit.

This finding is sufficient to dispose of the appeal and it is not necessary to deal with the other points that arise on the pleadings. I wish, however, to examine an argument strenuously urged by Mr. Gopal Chand that both according to the custom of the Sials of the Jhang District as well as under the general agricultural custom of the province the defendants being the sons of the daughter of the pre-deceased son of Bakha are not nearer heirs of Bakha deceased than the plaintiff who is his agnate of a remote degree. The riwaj-i-am of the Jhang District prepared by Mr. Abbott in 1904-09 is, however, opposed to this contention. In answer to question No. 5 given by the members of the Sial tribe it is distinctly stated that if a person dies leaving the descendants of a pre-deceased son, these descendants succeed to his property in the same way as the pre-deceased son would have himself succeeded. This indicates that the right of representation is recognized to the fullest extent amongst the members of this tribe. This answer is in accord with the general agricultural custom of the province which on the whole favours the right of the descendants of a pre-deceased person to succeed. I must, therefore, hold that the defendants-donees, who are the daughter's sons of Fattu, the pre-deceased son of Bakha, have under the custom a decidedly superior claim to succeed to Bakha's property as against the plaintiff, who is, if at all, an agnate of a very remote degree.

It may also be mentioned that according to the general agricultural custom a grand-daughter and her sons are more or less on the same footing as a daughter and her sons as against distant collaterals, and as pointed out by the learned Judge of the Court below, among Sials of this district daughters of a sonless proprietor occupy a very much more favourable position as against collaterals than in many other tribes in the Province. Mr. Gopal Chand has urged that answers to questions Nos 15 and 19 of the riwai-i-am indicate that custom favours only such daughters as are married in the same kuff as the deceased proprietor. In this case it is proved that the daughter of Fattu was married to Sardara, who is, like the plaintiff, a Dinga Sial of the Jhang District. The rule laid down in the answer to these two questions, therefore, applies to the defendants and they are, for this reason also, better heirs than the plaintiff. The gift is, therefore, an accelaration of succession in favour of defendants 2 and 3.

However, even if we were to accept the argument of Mr. Gopal Chand that the paragraphs of the riwaj-i-am above referred to do not apply to a case like the present and that no custom special or general is proved laying down the rule which is to regulate succession to the property of a deceased proprietor as between remote collaterals and his pre-deceased son's daughter's sons then in that case the Courts are bound under the authority of the leading case reported as Daya Ram v. Sohel Singh (6) to fall back upon the personal law of the parties which in this case is Mahomedan law. It is conceded that under that system of law the defendants being the pre-deceased son's daughter's sons are entitled to succeed as distant kindred in preference to the plaintiff whose relationship, is as stated above undefined. In this view of the case also defendants 2 and 3 have got a right to be maintained in possession of the property of Bakha after the death of his widow Mt. Bharai.

For the foregoing reasons, I hold that there is no force in this appeal and I would dismiss it with costs.

Agha Haidar, J.—I agree.

v.

Mt. Rattan Devi—Complainant—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 1383 of 1927, Decided on 13th December 1927, reported by Dist. Magistrate Gujranwala, D/- 24th August 1927.

Criminal Trial—Warrant case—Accused reserving cross-examination—Case ordered to be treated as summons case—Order is unjustifiable and accused has a right to cross-examine.

In a case tried as a warrant case under S. 323, I. P. C., some of the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined, accused reserving his right of cross-examining the complainant and a charge was framed against the accused. At this stage the magistrate ordered the case to be treated as one under S. 352, I. P. C., that is to say, as a summons case and the accused were refused permission to further cross-examine the prosecution witness.

Held: the order of the Court was unjustifiable and the accused must be allowed to cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses that they may wish to. [P 295 C 1, 2]

Partab Singh—for Petitioners.

Report. — Mt. Rattan Devi, complainant lodged a complaint under Ss. 147 323, 354, 504, I. P. C., against Devi Dial and others. The case was sent to the Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Gujranwala, exercising 2nd Class powers. The Court issued summons under S. 323, I. P. C. The prosecution witnesses were examined, but the complainant and one or two other prosecution witnesses were not cross-examined at all by the accused, evidently because the case was proceeded with as a warrant case and they knew that they had a right to re-cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in case a charge was framed against them. However, at this stage, the Court ordered that the case should be treated as one under S. 352, I. P. C., i. e., a summons case and that the accused should produce their defence. On this the accused applied that the prosecution witnesses should be summoned for re-cross-examination as they had reserved their right to re-cross-examine them; but this application was refused by the Court and now the accused have applied to me for the revision of the said order.

I have perused the file and I find that the complainant was not cross-examined at all and there was practically no cross-examination of another prosecution witness also. I certainly think the refusal of the Court to summon these witnesses for re-cross-examination cannot be considered justifiable and the order of refusal is prejudicial to the interests of justice. The accused party must have an opportunity to cross-examine them.

As I cannot pass the order myself, I submit the case to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court with the recommendation that the order of the Court, dated 6th July 1927, may be revised and the Court directed to re-summon the prosecution witnesses whom the accused want to re-cross-examine.

Judgment.—This case has been reported by the District Magistrate, Gujranwala, under S. 438, Criminal P. C. The facts are that on a complaint by Mt. Rattan Devi the case was being tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates as a warrant case under S. 323, I. P. C. Some of the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined, the complainant was not cross-examined at all and a charge was framed against the accused. At this stage the Bench of Honorary Magistrates ordered that the case should be treated as one under S. 352, I. P. C., that is to say, as a summons case and refused to allow the accused to further cross-examine the prosecution witness. It is obvious that the accused may have been considerably prejudiced by this and in the circumstances I direct that the Bench of Honorary Magistrates allow the accused to cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses that they may wish to and then the case will be disposed of according to law.

The reference is accepted accordingly.

Criminal Appeal No. 677 of 1926, Decided on 22nd June 1927, from order of Sess. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 12th April 1926.

Arms Act (11 of 1878), S. 19 (f) — Instrument consisting of a lathi and an axe-like blade and not one used for domestic purposes is "Arm."

An instrument consisting of two separate pieces, namely, a lathi 6' 3" long, at one end of which a hallow screw and an axe-like blade 5" by 4½" having a screw to allow of its being fixed into the long lathi was held to be an arm within the meaning of S. 19 (f), Arms Act, as no instrument like that is ever used for domestic or agricultural purposes : 33 *P. [P 296 C 1]

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

H. Rustomji—for Respondent.

Addison, J. — The respondent was tried under S. 19 (f), Arms Act, for being in possession of an "arm" and was convicted of that offence on 30th March 1926 when he was sentenced to three months rigorous imprisonment. His appeal was accepted on 12th April 1926 by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that the blade of the weapon was an ordinary axe-blade and that, therefore, it could not be said to be an "arm." Against his acquittal by the Sessions Judge the Crown has appealed.

The respondent was an absconder in a dacoity case. The police received information that he was living with a relative in a particular village. They raided the house about 3 a. m. on 1st October 1925, and arrested the respondent when he was lying asleep on a bed. After the arrest the house was closed. It was searched in the morning after daylight. During the search, concealed in the bed on which the respondent had been sleeping, were found a long lathi and an axe-like blade, detached from each other. There is ample evidence to this effect and the only question is whether these two articles when combined together, constitute an "arm."

The instrument in question consists of two separate pieces, namely, a lathi 6′ 3″ long, at one end of which is a hollow screw, and the axe-like blade, 5″ by 4½″. This blade has a screw to allow of its being fixed into the long lathi. No instrument like that is ever used for domestic or agricultural purposes. The handle is too long and the screw would soon become useless if the instrument was much used. On the other hand, it is an admirable weapon for offence and defence, while it admits of being successfully concealed by hiding the axe-like head on the person and carrying the handle as a lathi The learned Sessions Judge was clearly wrong in holding that because the head was like an ordinary axe-head; it was not an "arm." In the first place it was not an ordinary axe-head because of the screw. In the second place the length of the handle renders the instrument useless for domestic purposes. Further, his decision goes in the face of numerous decisions of this Court. In Gahna v. Emperor (1), where there was a handle 4′ long and an axe-like blade capable of being fixed to the handle by a ring, it was held that this did not differ from a chhavi and that it was an "arm" within the meaning of the Arms Act, In The Crown v. Santa Singh (2), it was held that > where the circumstances of a case show that a weapon or instrument is carried or possessed for the purpose of offence or defence and not as an article of domestic or agricultural utility, there is no reason why such weapon or instrument should not be held to fall within the category of 'arm,' and further that > it was not necessary to decide whether the weapon was a chhavi or a gandasi, it being immaterial what the name, shape or size of an instrument is, but material to determine the use for which it is carried or possessed.

(2) [1900] 16 P. R. 1900 Cr.

The same conclusion was arrived at in Emperor v. Ralla Singh (3).

In these circumstances I would accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the learned Sessions Judge, convict the respondent of an offence under S. 19 (f) Act 11, 1878.

The respondent was about half a month in a jail before he was acquitted by the Sessions Judge. He has been out of jail since April 1926. The sentence passed upon him by the Magistrate was by no means excessive, but owing to the fact that he has been for so long out of jail I do not think that he should be sent back to jail. At the same time, as half a month's imprisonment is obviously much too light a sentence, I would sentence him now to pay a fine of Rs. 100 and in default of its payment to undergo two months' rigorous imprisonment. The respondent will either pay the fine or surrender to his bail bond before the District Magistrate.

v.

Akbar—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 1186 of 1927, Decided on 16th December 1927, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Attock, on 26th August 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 562 — Accused charged under S. 193, Penal Code for deliberately committing perjury—Deterrent punishment should be awarded.

A the accused was a complainant in the case against B and had received a bullet wound. He was won over by the defence in the case against B and he deliberately committed perjury intending to screen B. In a case against A under S. 193, Penal Code, the Magistrate proceeded in dealing with A under S. 562.

Held : the Magistrate was wrong in dealing with the accused so leniently and that a deterrent punishment ought to be awarded.

Report.—The matter arose out of a case under S. 307, Penal Code. One Hans Raj fired a pistol shot at the said Akbar at Ghurghushti in police station Hazro. The bullet hit him in the shoulder and remained in the body. Hans Raj was challaned under S. 307, Penal Code. Akbar was produced as a witness by the prosecution and while on oath he told material lies in the Court to save Hans Raj. Some other witnesses did the same. Hans Raj was, however, convicted by Khan Abdul Majid Khan, M. B. E., Magistrate of the 1st Class, exercising enhanced powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., and the conviction was upheld in appeal. Complaints under S. 193, Penal Code, were lodged against Akbar and one Jullundhur. Akbar was convicted and released on probation under S. 562, Criminal P. C.

The infection of the prosecution witnesses going hostile, particularly amongst the residents of Chhachh (police station Hazro), is daily increasing. It is a well-known fact that in cases of perjury it is extremely difficult to obtain evidence sufficient to bring the guilt home to the perjurer. If the very few cases, in which prosecution succeeds in convincing a Judge, are also lightly dealt with merely because, as the Court has remarked, the convict had received a bullet wound and was probably seduced by interested people, there will be no end to the matters. The people should not be suffered to understand that a perjurer if convicted, which is very seldom, has still a chance of escape on probation. If the complainants themselves succumb to accused's allurements what is to be expected of the corroborating witnesses? This sentence has had a very bad effect on the witnesses in other cases. I, therefore, forward the record to their Lordships and recommend that the order of release on probation be set aside and a deterrent sentence inflicted on the convict.

Order.—Akbar has been found guilty of an offence under S. 193, I. P. C., and has been dealt with under S. 562, Criminal P. C. The reason for this is that he was the complainant in the case against Hans Raj and had received a bullet wound. There is no doubt that he was won over by the defence in the case against Hans Raj and that he deliberately committed perjury intending to screen Hans Raj. In these circumstances I do not think the Magistrate was right in dealing with Akbar under S. 562, Criminal P. C. Perjury is far too rife for any such leniency which I consider misplaced. Bearing in mind that he was shot I set aside the order under S. 562, Criminal P. C., and sentence Akbar to rigorous imprisonment for one year.

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

Bhagat Govind Das—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiffs-respondents instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, for recovery of Rs. 1,780 from the defendant-appellant, who carried on the business of a commission agent at Srinagar. It was alleged in the plaint that a contract had been entered into between the parties at Rawalpindi, whereby the defendant had agreed to purchase for the plaintiffs dry apricots at Askardu in Kashmir territory and to deliver them at Rawalpindi, that the plaintiffs had remitted Rs. 1,500 to the defendant at Srinagar for the purpose, but that the defendant had neither supplied the apricots nor returned the money. The plaintiffs accordingly sued to recover the amount advanced (Rs. 1,500) together with interest thereon (Rs. 280).

The defendant admitted that an order for the purchase of apricots had been placed by the plaintiffs with him and he had received Rs. 1500 from them at Srinagar. He denied, however, that the contract had been completed at Rawalpandi or that he had agreed to deliver the apricots there. On the other hand, he alleged that the order had been placed by the plaintiffs with him at Srinagar and as the cause of action did not arise in whole or in part at Rawalpindi, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit. On the merits he pleaded that in accordance with the instructions sent by the plaintiff he had purchased apricots at Askardu but the cost was far in excess of Rs. 1,500, and as in spite of repreated demands the plaintiff failed to pay the balance, the defendant had sold the fruit at a loss and had recouped himself out of the amount advanced (Rs. 1,500).

The Subordinate Judge framed a preliminary issue as to the jurisdiction of Rawalpindi Courts to hear the suit and finding in the affirmative proceeded to trial on the merits. He held the contentions of the defendant to be baseless, and granted the plaintiffs a decree for Rs. 1,780.

On appeal by the defendant, the learned District Judge, in an exhaustive judgment found that the contract had been entered into at Srinagar, that no part of the cause of action arose in British India and consequently the Rawalpindi Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit. He held, however, that as there had been no failure of justice by reason of the suit having been tried at Rawalpindi the decree of the trial Court could not, under S. 21, Civil P. C., be set aside for want of jurisdiction. On the merits the learned Judge found for the plaintiffs and held that they were entitled to recover Rs. 1,500 which they had advanced, but that they could not be allowed interest on the advance. The amount decreed by the trial Court was accordingly reduced to Rs. 1,500.

The defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court and the plaintiff-respondent has filed cross-objections praying in that the amount decreed be enhanced to Rs. 1,780.

Mr. Govind Das for the respondent attempted to challenge the finding of the learned District Judge that the Rawalpandi Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. But the learned District Judge has, after an exhaustive review of the evidence, held that the relationship between the parties was that of principal and agent, that the order had been placed by correspondence with the defendant at Srinagar, and that no agreement to make delivery at Rawalpindi had been proved. There can be no doubt, that on these facts the Rawalpindi Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It is settled law that a suit by a principal against a commission agent who has agreed to execute an order placed with him by correspondence must be instituted at the place where the commission agent carries on his business and that the principal cannot sue him at the place from where he sent the order, see Muhammad Shafi v. Karamat Ali (1), Asa Ram-Kalu Ram v. Bakhshi Ram-Kanahyia Ram (2) and Pirthi Singh-Jamiat Rai v. Harsukh Das-Jhog Mal (3). I must, therefore, uphold the finding of the learned District Judge that the Rawalpindi Court had no jurisdiction to entertain and try the suit.

The next question to be decided is whether the learned District Judge was right in holding, with reference to the provisions of S. 21, Civil P. C., that the decree of the trial Court could not be set aside for want of jurisdiction as there had been no consequent failure of justice. There is no doubt that if the cause of action had arisen at a place in British India, but outside the Rawalpindi District and the suit had been instituted at Rawalpindi and tried and decided there in spite of the objections of the defendant, the decree so passed could not have been set aside on appeal unless it had been established that there had been a consequent failure of justice : see Ratti Ram v. Kundan Lal (4). But this rule does not apply when a suit has been instituted in a British Indian Court against a non-resident foreigner on a cause of action which arose wholly outside British territory and the lower Court has, after overruling the defendant's objection, tried and decreed the suit against him. S. 21, Civil P. C., on which reliance is placed, runs as follows :

> No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any appellate or revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance, at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice.

(1) [1896] 76 P. R. 1896.
(2) [1920] 1 Lah. 203=53 I. C. 331.

It will be seen that this section refers to objections only to the "place of suing" and not to those of the inherent incompetency of a Court to assume jurisdiction. Ss. 15 to 20 of the Code which immediately precede S. 21 lay down rules as to the "place of suing" and there can be no manner of doubt that in that section this expression is used with reference to these rules. It is not denied that Ss. 15 to 20 regulate the venue within British India and apply only to those places where the Code is in force. They deal with matters of domestic concern and prescribe rules for assumption of territorial jurisdiction by British Indian Courts in matters within their cognizance and do not govern claims against persons or things wholly outside their jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that the rule laid down in S. 21 applies only to cases cognizable by such Courts only. Reference may in this connexion be made to Setrucharlu Ramabhadra Raju v. Maharaja of Jeypore (5), where a suit had been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam on a mortgage of property which was partly situate in that district and partly in one of the scheduled districts to which the Civil Procedure Code did not apply. No objection was taken by the defendant at the trial to the jurisdiction of the Court to deal with any part of the property in suit and a decree was passed for the sale of the entire mortgaged property. On appeal the defendant objected for the first time that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to deal with the part of the property situate in the scheduled district, but the High Court, finding that no prejudice had been caused by suing in the wrong Court refused to interfere in view of the provision of S. 21, Civil P. C. The Privy Council, however, set aside the decision of the High Court and observed that S. 21 applied only where the right place of suing was one subject to the Code. Dealing with the property situate in the scheduled district their Lordships remarked that this is not an objection as to the place of suing; it is an objection going to the nullity of the order on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

(5) A. I. R. 1919 P. C. 150 = 42 Mad. 813 = 46 I. A. 151 (P. C.).

Their Lordships, in rejecting an argument based on S. 17, Civil P. C., held that the word "Courts" as used in that section "must be held as meaning the Courts to which the Code applies."

The question was also considered by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Manjappa v. Rajagopalchariar (6) where it was held that S. 21 has no applicability to a case in which there has been usurpation by the lower Court of the jurisdiction of a foreign Court. I must, therefore, hold that the Rawalpindi Court had no jurisdiction to try the case and that the District Judge was bound to give effect to the defendant's objection. I would accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the plaintiffs-respondents' suit. But having regard to all the circumstances of the case I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout. The cross-objections necessarily fail and are dismissed.

Judgment.—On 14th July 1922 the Gwalior Metal Works Company Limited booked a consignment of 21 bags of aluminium wares at the Gwalior Railway Station on the G. I. P. Railway for carriage to Ferozepore City on the North-Western Railway. The goods were booked to the consignor himself, but he had endorsed the railway receipt in favour of the plaintiff thus entitling him to take delivery of the consignment at Ferozepore. When the plaintiff went to the Ferozepore railway station to take delivery, it was discovered that only three bags out of 21 had arrived and that the remaining 18 bags were not forthcoming. The plaintiff took delivery of the three bags and on 27th August 1923, instituted the present suit against the Secretary of State for India through the Agent, North-Western Railway, for recovery of Rs. 495-3-6 being the price of the missing 18 bags. In the plaint it was alleged that the loss was due to the wilful neglect and gross carelessness of the Railway Administration The G I. P. Railway and the Gwalior Metal Works were also impleaded as defendants, but none of them appeared and the proceedings were ex parte against them.

The Secretary of State pleaded, inter alia, that the goods were booked at a special reduced rate at the owner's risk under Risk-Note B and that for this reason the Railway Administration was free from all liability for the alleged loss. It was further pleaded that the goods had been lost on the G. I. P. Railway in a theft committed from a running train and that for this reason also defendant 1 was not liable. The plaintiff at first denied the execution of the Risk-Note B, but later on he admitted it.

The trial Court found that the contention of the defendant that the goods had been lost on the G. I. P. Railway was not proved and also that the defendant had failed to establish that the goods were lost in a theft committed from a running train.

On these findings, but without going into the question as to whether defendant 1 was guilty of wilful neglect, it decreed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal by defendant 1 to the Senior Subordinate Judge at Ferozepore, it was specifically urged in the memorandum of appeal that the lower Court could not legally pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff in view of the fact that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the Railway Administration. The other findings as to the loss having occurred on the North-Western Railway and the goods not having been stolen from a running train were also challenged. The appellate Court, however, upheld these findings, but, without going into the question of wilful neglect on the part of defendant 1, dismissed the appeal.

Defendant 1 has come up to this Court on the revision side and the learned Government Advocate, who appears in support of the petition for revision, has, accepting the findings of the Courts below as correct, argued that the Courts have acted with material irregularity in not applying their minds to the really vital point in the case, namely whether a decree for damages for loss of the goods consigned, under Risk-Note B could be passed in favour of a consignee against the Railway Administration without a definite finding that the Railway Administration was guilty of wilful neglect. After hearing the learned Government Advocate for the petitioner and Mr. Muhammad Amin, who appears for the respondent, I am of opinion that this contention must prevail.

In Risk-Note B it is definitely provided that the Railway Administration will carry the goods harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, the said consignment, from any cause whatever except for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, * * * provided the term "wilful neglect" be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any other unforeseen event or accident.

It is, therefore, clear that before a person, who has consigned his goods under Risk-Note B is entitled to maintain an action for damages for loss of his goods, he must definitely prove that the loss was caused by reason of the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or its servants. If and when he has succeeded in proving such neglect, it will be open to the Railway Administration to claim immunity by proving that the theft was from a running train. It is now well settled that the onus of proving that the railway was guilty of wilful neglect lies clearly upon the plaintiff. There was at one time a conflict of judicial authority on this point, but all doubts have been set at rest by the decision of the House of Lords in the well-known case of Smith Ltd. v. Great Western Ry. Co. (1), where it was held with reference to a risk-note, the terms of which were very similar to those of Risk-Note B, that it lies upon the plaintiff to affirmatively establish that the loss was due to the wilful misconduct of the Railway Company and its servants, and that the failure of the railway to account for the loss of goods was not evidence, which justified the Court in interfering that the loss arose from such wilful misconduct.

The learned counsel for the respondents, however, has argued that in this case the railway had set up a plea of loss by theft from a running train and having failed to prove it, it is not open to it now to insist upon the plaintiff proving wilful neglect on the part of the defendants. In my opinion this contention is devoid of all force. In a case, which is very similar to the present one a Division Bench of the Patna Court held that where the Railway Company alleged theft from a running train, but failed to prove the allegation, the admission was not of theft at large, but of a specific form of theft; and that in any case the onus still lay on the plaintiff to prove neglect or theft by the servants of the company: G. I. P. Ry. v. Datti Ram (2). In a somewhat similar case, the Bombay High Court also came to the decision in B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. v. Ranchhodlal Chotalal & Co. (3). The terms of the risk-note are very clear and cast a duty on the consignor to establish that the railway was guilty of wilful neglect before he can hold it liable for the loss.

In the present case the plaintiff specifically alleged in his plaint wilful neglect on the part of the defendant, but led no evidence whatever in support of it. Nor are there any materials on the record from which I can infer that the defendant or any of its servants was guilty of any such neglect. Respondents' counsel concedes that this is so, but urges that this is a petition for revision under S. 44, Punjab Courts Act, and even if a mistake of law has been committed by the appellate Court, this Court ought not to interfere. But this is not a case in which the lower appellate Court has come to an erroneous decision on a point of law. Here, as already pointed out, the appellate Court, (as also the trial Judge), has failed to take notice of the real point in the case and has given no decision on it at all. This is clearly a material irregularity justifying interference on the revision side: see Tej Bhan v. Wali Dad (4), Bawa Naringir v. Miran Baksh (5), Baij Nath Mistry v. Jang Bahadur (6), and Sibu Sant v. Nelai Charan Das (7).

For the foregoing reasons, I accept the petition and, setting aside the decrees of the Courts below, dismiss the plaintiff's suit. As defendant 1 put forward a plea of theft from a running train, but failed to prove it, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 318 of 1923, Decided on 11th May 1927, from decree of 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Sialkot, D/- 22nd December 1922.

Transfer of Property Act, S. 74—Purchase of puisne mortgagee's rights by prior mortgagee—Prior security is presumed to be kept alive and not lost—T. P. Act, S. 101.

There is no rule of law under which a prior mortgagee by purchasing the rights of a puisne mortgagee loses the rights, which had been secured to him by the earlier mortgage. In such cases, the presumption is that he intended to keep alive the prior security and would be entitled to fall back upon it in case of necessity. [P 303 C 1]

G. C. Narang and Maya Das—for Appellants.

S. A. Nasir and Dhanpat Rai—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—On the 13th February 1914, defendants 4, 5 and 6 Nagahia, Sultan and Babu, who are the owners of 133 kanals, 16 marlas of land executed a deed of mortgage in respect of this land in favour of plaintiffs, 1, 2, 5 and 6 and Hakim, the predecessor-in-interest of plaintiffs 3 and 4 and defendant 7 for a sum of Rs. 3,455. The mortgage was with possession and the mortgage money was to bear no interest. The term of the mortgage was fixed as 17 years and twas specifically provided that within that period :

> the mortgagors were not entitled to redeem the land nor could the mortgagees demand their mortgage money from the mortgagors.

It was stipulated that on the expiry of this period when the principal mortgage money was paid the land shall be redeemed. This mortgage was given effect to in the revenue papers and the mortgagees took possession of the land as agreed upon.

On the 6th March 1916, the mortgagors executed another mortgage-deed in respect of the same property in favour of one Hari Singh for a sum of Rs. 6,000. It was stated in this deed that out of the mortgage money Rs. 3,400 was kept in deposit with the mortgagee (Hari Singh) for payment to Hakim etc., prior mortgagees under the deed dated the 13th February 1914. The balance of Rs. 2,600 was paid in cash partly to the mortgagors and partly adjusted in discharge of their other liabilities to Hari Singh and third persons. It was also stipulated in the deed that interest on Rs. 2,600 was chargeable at the rate of Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem. Hari Singh was authorized to take possession of the land on payment of the mortgage money due to Fateh Ali, etc., on the prior mortgage and in that event interest on this sum of Rs. 3,400 was to counterbalance the produce of the land.

On the 27th August 1917, Hari Singh, the mortgagee under the deed of the 6th March 1916, aforesaid, transferred his mortgagee rights to Fateh Ali, etc., (the mortgagees under the deed of the 13th February 1914) for a sum of Rs. 6,000. The consideration was recited as having received as follows :

> (I) Given credit for to the vendee out of Rs. 3,455 (which was kept in trust with him) on account of the mortgage-deed dated the 13th February 1914 : Rs. 3,400.
> (II) To be received in cash before the Sub-Registrar at the time of the registration : Rs. 2,600.

It was already recited :

> that the vendees are already in possession. They should remain in future as well, on payment of the Government revenue so long as redemption is not effected. The owners shall redeem the land mortgaged when they pay the mortgage money with interest due from them.

On the 26th January 1922, the mortgagors Jawahir, etc., executed another mortgage-deed for 197 kanals 7 marlas of land (which included 133 kanals and 16 marlas which had been the subject-matter of the former transaction) in favour of defendants 1 to 3, Gahna, Shera and Saraj Din, for Rs. 9,500. Out of this sum Rs. 6,000 was left in deposit with these mortgagees for payment to Fateh Ali, etc., the prior mortgagees. The term of this mortgage was fixed as ten years at the expiry of which the mortgagors were entitled to redeem the land mortgaged.

On the 20th February 1922 defendants 1 to 3 (mortgagees under the last mortgage, dated the 26th January 1922) presented an application under the Redemption of Mortgages Act 11 of 1913, to the Collector, asking for redemption of the land from Fateh Ali, etc., the prior mortgagees on payment of Rs. 6,000. Fateh Ali, etc., resisted the application contending that the term of their mortgage was 17 years and redemption could not take place before the expiry of that period. This contention was overruled and the defendants' application granted on the 18th March 1922.

Thereupon Fateh Ali, etc., the prior mortgagees, instituted the present suit on the 30th March 1922 under S. 12, Act 11, 1913, claiming a declaration that the term of their mortgage, i. e., 17 years, is still intact and it is not open to the original mortgagors or the subsequent mortgagees, defendants 1 to 3 to redeem the mortgage before the expiry of that period. The claim was resisted by defendants 1 to 3 on the ground that the plaintiffs, by purchasing the mortgage rights of Hari Singh under the sale-deed of the 27th August 1917, had extinguished the prior mortgage and cannot take advantage of the provisions thereof.

The lower Court in a judgment which it is not easy to understand has upheld the defendants' contention and disallowed the plaintiffs' claim to rely on the clause securing the property to them for 17 years but has passed a decree for interest on the sum of Rs. 2,600 (which is the item over and above Rs. 3,455 the principal sum secured on the foot of the first mortgage) the liability to pay which was also denied by the defendants.

The defendants have accepted the findings of the Court below with regard to the item of interest, but the plaintiffs have preferred a first appeal asking for a declaration that the mortgage in their favour cannot be redeemed till after the expiry of 17 years from the 13th February 1914.

The sole question to be decided is whether by taking over the mortgagee rights from Hari Singh under the deed of sale dated the 27th August 1917, which is printed at pp. 6 and 7 of the paper-book, the plaintiffs can be said to have either expressly or by necessary implication given up the rights that were secured to them by the original mortgage dated the 13th February 1914. After hearing Dr. Narang for the appellant and Mr. Nasir for the respondents, I am of opinion that the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court cannot be sustained, and this appeal must succeed. There is nothing in the provisions of the sale-deed aforesaid from which it could be concluded that the plaintiffs intended to abandon the rights that had been secured to them under the prior mortgage-deed in their favour, nor is there any rule of law under which a prior mortgagee by purchasing the rights of a puisne mortgagee loses the rights, which had been secured to him by the earlier mortgage. Indeed, in such cases, the presumption is that he intended to keep alive the prior security and would be entitled to fall back upon it in case of necessity.

The learned counsel for the respondents contends that in this case by purchasing the mortgagee rights of Hari Singh, the appellants had clothed themselves with his rights and now stand in his shoes, and as the mortgage in favour of Hari Singh was for a consolidated sum of Rs. 6,000 and in that deed it is stated that Rs. 3,400 was kept in trust for payment to the appellants, they should be considered to have automatically redeemed themselves the moment the sale of Hari Singh's rights in their favour was effected. After giving full consideration to the contentions of the learned counsel and considering the terms of the deed, I am, however, of opinion that all that the plaintiffs did by entering into the transaction of the 27th August 1917, was to take over from Hari Singh an additional mortgage for Rs. 2,600 that had been created in his favour. The practical effect of the sale was to create an additional charge for this amount in their favour on the same property. There was no intention to abandon the rights under the prior mortgage nor does the creation of an additional mortgage extinguish the rights which they had already acquired under the prior mortgage.

In this connexion reference may usefully be made to the remarks of Lord St. Leonards in Tenison v. Sweeny (1):

> Then another point was started, that, as the successive mortgages were for the sum secured by the former mortgages and for the sums subsequently advanced, the old securities were merged in the new, and that the judgment-debtors had a right to come before the last mortgage. That is a very novel view of the operation of the deeds. It is clear that the former mortgages continued untouched and operative notwithstanding the new mortgages and the new mortgages were for the purpose of letting in the further advances upon the property. Nothing could be more alarming to creditors than that a doubt should be thrown out where, by taking a new security for their old debt and for further advance they do not prejudice their original securities.

I may also refer to the decision of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in the well-known case of Miln v. Walton (2), that a creditor having a mortgage on the funds of his debtor for part of his debt does not necessarily surrender that mortgage or lower its priority by taking a subsequent mortgage on the same funds of the whole of the debt.

In the case before us there is the additional fact, that the first mortgage in favour of the plaintiff was for Rs. 3,455 and in the mortgage-deed in favour of Hari Singh and the sale-deed of his mortgagee rights by the latter in favour of the appellants dated the 22nd August (1) [1844] 1 Jones & Lot. 710=7 Ir. Eq. R. 511.

(2) 60 R. R. 184.

1917, the sum of Rs. 3400 and not the full amount of Rs. 3,455 was recited as having been kept in deposit for payment on account of the prior mortgage. This clearly indicates that the intention of the parties to the later transactions was not to extinguish the prior mortgage but rather to keep it alive. Further, the mortgagors were not parties to this sale-deed and, therefore, this transaction could not affect the rights of the appellants and the mortgagers inter se, which had been secured to each of them by the mortgage dated 13th February 1914.

In the lower Court Sultan, one of the mortgagors, stated that as a matter of fact Rs. 3,400 had been actually paid to the plaintiffs in redemption of the first mortgage. This allegation, however, is contrary to the case that had been put forward by the contesting defendants in their written statement and was rightly rejected by the lower Court. I have considered the evidence which was led in support of this allegation and have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned trial Judge that it is unreliable.

For the foregoing reasons I would accept the appeal and grant the plaintiffs the declaration prayed for, but, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Civil Revn. No. 721 of 1927, Decided on 16th December 1927, from order of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, D/- 16th November 1927.

Punjab Courts Act (6 of 1918), S. 44—Order reviewing previous order setting aside ex-parte proceedings is interlocutory—Revision does not lie against it.

Orders amending the conditions on which ex-parte proceedings are set aside are interlocutory orders and are not orders in 'a case which has been decided by a subordinate Court' within the meaning of S. 44, Punjab Courts Act, and a revision is not competent against them: *A. Judgment.—This is a petition for revision of an order passed by the trial Court on 30th November 1927 whereby it reviewed its previous order of 16th November 1927 modifying the conditions on which it had set aside ex-parte proceedings against the defendant-respondent.

This suit in which these orders were passed has not yet been decided. The relevant facts are that the defendant failed to appear on a particular date and the Court directed ex-parte proceedings to be taken against him. Before the judgment was announced an application was made to set aside the ex-parte proceedings and this was granted on certain conditions. On review, one of these conditions was modified and the Court directed the parties to produce their evidence. As these various orders have been passed in a pending case and are interlocutory they are not order in a "case which has been decided by a subordinate Court" within the meaning of S. 44, Punjab Courts Act, and a revision is not competent in view of the Full Bench decision in Firm Lal Chand Mangal Sen v. Firm Behari Lal-Mehr Chand (1).

Mr. H. C. Kumar, for the petitioner, relies on Piroj Shah v. Qarib Shah (2) and Dittu Ram v. Nawab (3) in support of his contention that this Court has got the power to interfere with such orders on revision. I am, however, of opinion that these cases are clearly distinguishable as in each of them the suits had (at least for the time being) been decided by the passing of an ex-parte decree. In the present case the suit is still pending and no decree has yet been passed. The orders are, therefore, of a purely interlocutory nature and no revision lies. Accordingly I dismiss the petition for revision, but having regard to all the circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs. The Deputy Registrar will see that the record is returned to the lower Court to-morrow.

First Appeal No. 994 of 1923, Decided on 22nd November 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 18th April 1923.

(a) Custom (Punjab)— Succession— Amritsar District—Daughters succeed to the exclusion of agnates.

According to the customary law of the Amritsar District daughters exclude collaterals in succession to self-acquired property. [P 305 C 2]

(b) Punjab Colonization of Government Act (5 of 1912) as amended by Act (3 of 1920), S. 20— Succession in cases before the Act came into force is governed by personal law of parties and not by the Act.

Succession to a tenant who has died before the Punjab Colonization of Government Act came into existence was governed by the custom prevalent among the parties and S. 20 of the above Act has no application in such a case as it provides for devolution of a tenancy where, after the commencement of the Act any original tenant dies. [P 305 C 2]

Abdul Ghani Khan—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Mahajan and Faqir Chand for Moti Sagar—for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—This is an appeal by Pir Bakhsh against a declaratory decree passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Lyallpur, declaring that the plaintiffs, the daughters of one Nathu, were entitled to succeed to the land in dispute after the death of their mother Mt. Rahmate. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has written a lengthy judgment in which all the points have been carefully discussed.

It appears that the original tenant of this land was one Nathu who was granted the holding as an abadkar and subsequently acquired occupancy rights therein. He died in 1908 leaving him surviving a widow, Mt. Rahmate, and two daughters Mt. Ghulam Bibi and Mehtab Bibi. Mt. Rahmate attempted to dispose of this tenancy but her attempt failed as the revenue authorities declined to sanction the alienation proposed by her. Later on she made a gift in favour of her daughters. When this gift was placed before the revenue authorities for sanction Pir Bakhsh protested urging that he was the ultimate heir to this property as a collateral of the deceased Nathu. The revenue authorities accordingly declined to enter up the gift and referred the parties to a civil Court. Thereupon the two daughters (both of them married) of Nathu brought a suit for a declaration of their rights as the heirs of Nathu impleading Mt. Rahmate, widow of Nathu and Pir Bakhsh as defendants. Mt. Rahmate admitted the claim while Pir Bakhsh contested it.

It has been urged before us that the suit is governed by the provisions of Act 5 of 1912 as amended by Act 3 of 1920. This appears to have been the position taken up by both parties in the Court below. In the grounds of appeal to this Court it was alleged that Act 5 of 1912 did not apply. The learned advocate for the appellant appears to have been in somewhat of a quandary as to the line he was prepared to take in this Court, for at one time he said that he was prepared to give up that ground and urged that the parties were governed by the Act of 1912. It seems to me, however, that that Act does not afford any assistance in this matter. The succession in this case is clearly succession to Nathu and S. 20 Act 5 of 1912 as amended by Act 3 of 1920 provides for the devolution of a tenancy in cases where, after the commencement of the Act, any original tenant dies. Admittedly, in the present case Nathu died in 1908 and succession to his rights, therefore, is clearly not governed by this section. In order to ascertain who his successor is recourse must be had to the ordinary custom by which the parties are governed. The general rule of custom as laid down in para. 23 of the Digest of Customary Law by Sir William Rattigan, is that daughters exclude collaterals in succession to self-acquired property. Admittedly this estate is the self-acquired or non-ancestral property of Nathu and, therefore, by the general custom, the plaintiffs in this case would exclude collaterals. An attempt was made by Pir Bakhsh to establish a custom to the contrary and certain evidence was led in support. That evidence has been carefully examined by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and it has been pointed out that the instances given by the witnesses have no real application to the facts before us, whereas the instances relied on and proved by the plaintiffs, support their claim. So far as the Customary Law of the Amritsar District, (from which district Nathu originally migrated to Lyallpur) shows the general trend of opinion was that daughters succeed to non ancestral property to the exclusion of agnates. In every respect, therefore, the claim of the daughters appears to me to be superior to that of Pir Bakhsh and I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 2704 of 1923, Decided on 9th June 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Shahpur, D/- 14th Aug. 1923.

(a) Record-of-Rights — Presumption of correctness about entries in it arises—Onus is on party challenging correctness of entries.

There is a presumption of correctness attaching to the entries in the record-of-rights to rebut which the onus lies heavily on the party challenging the correctness of the entries. [P 307 C 1]

(b) Adverse Possession—Waste land—Erroneous entry regarding title in the record-of-rights—Original owner should be considered as real owner unless adverse possession for 12 years by others has been established.

Where the title to the land in question has been proved to be with the plaintiffs and the land was waste and unoccupied for a short time before the suit and where it had not been shown how the defendants acquired it,

Held: that title being originally with the plaintiffs and the land being banjar, they must, notwithstanding the erroneous entries from 1891 to 1918, be considered to be owners of it, unless overt acts of adverse possession extending for a period longer than 12 years are established. [P 307 C 1, 2]

Nanak Chand and Devi Dial — for Appellants.

Nand Lal and Amolak Ram — for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for possession of 76¾ kanals of land comprised in specific killa numbers in squares Nos. 81 and 91, situate at mauza Bhabra in the Bhalwal tahsil of the Shahpur District. The suit has been dismissed and the plaintiffs appeal.

The plaintiffs' case is that the land in suit was allotted to the defendants by the revenue officers at the time of the killabandi in 1922 in lieu of the land which was shown as Nos 160 1604, 1608, 1612 and 1613 in Mr. Hailey's Settlement. They contend that these khasra numbers corresponded to khasra Nos. 2632, 2639, 4290/2641 and 4290/2641 respectively of Mr. Wilson's Settlement of 1891-1892, in which had been included by mistake 76¾ kanals of land out of khasra No. 2238/2 min which had been allotted to the plaintiff's ancestors in the partition of the village Shamilat effected in 1878-1879. They contend that the land was banjar waste till the advent of the canal in 1918-1919, and it was not till 1922 that plaintiffs were forcibly dispossessed of it by the revenue authorities, when the killabandi system was not introduced. They, therefore, claim that the land in suit, which had been given to the defendants at the rectification in March 1922 in lieu of the land which originally belonged to the plaintiffs, but which had been wrongly taken out of their possession is the plaintiff's property and possession really thereof should be restored to them.

The defendants denied that any land of the plaintiffs had by mistake been entered as the defendants' property in 1891-1892, and contended that the land comprised in khasra Nos. 1601-1603, 1612 and 1613 of Mr. Hailey's Settlement had been shown in the revenue papers as owned by the defendants since 1891-1892, and has been in their possession since as owners. They did not admit that this land was a part of No. 2238/2 which had fallen to the share of the plaintiffs in the partition of 1878-1879. They also raised pleas of limitation and bar by adverse possession.

The first point to be decided is, as to who were the real owners of the land shown as khasra Nos. 1601, 1603, 1612 and 1613 aforesaid. After hearing at length Mr. Nanak Chand for the appellants and Dr. Nand Lal for the respondents and going through the documentary evidence on the record and the statement of the patwari and special kanungo, I am of opinion, that it is satisfactorily proved that village shamilat land was partitioned in 1878-1879, when 365 kanals and 16 marlas of banjar qadim land to which No. 2238/2 min was assigned at that time was allotted to the ancestors of the plaintiffs, and similarly 305 kanals and 2 marlas (also banjar qadim) described as No. 2238/2 min fell to the share of the defendants. The entries in the settlement of 1891-1892, however, showed that the land allotted to the plaintiffs was 289 kanals only, i. e., there was a reduction of 76 kanals 16 marlas. On the other hand the land which had fallen to the share of the defendants in 1878-1879 in the adjoining field No. 2832/3 min increased from 305 kanals 2 marlas to 409¾ kanals, i. e., an increase of 104¾ kanals. The defendants have given no explanation whatever for this enormous increase in their holding or for the deficiency in the plaintiff's fields.

It is admitted that the increase was not the result of any alienation by way of purchase, exchange, gift, inheritance, etc. On the other hand, the special kanungo has placed materials on the record which indicate that the increase in the defendants' land was due to the inclusion in their holding of an area partly belonging to the defendants and partly to third parties to whom No. 2254 had been allotted in 1878-1879 in both of which there was a corresponding decrease. As most of the land was banjar and incapable of physical possession and of no immediate use to the plaintiff the mistake was not noticed till the land became irrigated about the year 1918. It is no doubt true that the entries made in 1891-1892 were repeated in the subsequent jamabandi and the settlement of Mr. Hailey in 1906-1907 ; and there is a presumption of correctness attaching to these entries, to rebut which the onus lies heavily on the plaintiffs. After fully considering the matter, however, I have reached the conclusion that the plaintiffs have succeeded in rebutting this presumption with regard to the land in khasra Nos. 1601 and 1613. From Ex. P-16, which is a statement prepared by the special kanungo and which contains a detail of the entries relating to the land in suit from 1879 to 1918-1919 it is clearly established that the land in these two numbers was originally parts of 2238-2 min which was, as already stated, allotted to the plaintiffs in the partition of 1878-1879. This land continued to be banjar qadim till 1918-1919 and it has not been shown how the defendants acquired it. Title being originally with the plaintiffs and the land being banjar, they must notwithstanding the erroneous entries from 1891 to 1918 be considered to be owners of it, unless overt acts of adverse possession extending for a period longer than 12 years are established. No such acts on any date anterior to 1918-1919 have been alleged much less proved with regard to these two fields. The suit was instituted on 3rd January 1923 and, therefore, the defendants' possession does not extend over a period beyond four or five years. Dr. Nand Lal contends that the suit is barred under Art. 142, Lim. Act, but having regard to the nature of the land, it must be held that possession was with the real owners, the plaintiffs, till 1918-1919. The suit of the plaintiffs is, therefore, clearly within time and no adverse possession extending over the statutory period has been established. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have established a right to recover 28½ kanals in khasra No. 1601 and 38 kanals in khasra No. 1613.

The land comprised in the other two Nos. 1608 and 1612 of the settlement of 1906 has been proved to correspond to Nos. 2639 and 2641 respectively of the settlement of 1891-1892. The plaintiffs have also succeeded in proving that this land was in actual possession of the plaintiffs till 1918-1919, they being shown in cultivating possession of it in the revenue papers and the defendants being shown as the proprietors. Mr. Nanak Chand contends that the plaintiffs never attorned to the defendants and never paid them any rent and their possession was really as owners. On the other hand Dr. Nand Lal relies on the entries in Mr. Hailey's settlement showing that in the year 1906-1907 at least the plaintiffs paid rent by way of batai in the ratio of 2 : 5 to the defendants. It is, however, not necessary to determine which of the two respective contentions is correct, as I am not satisfied that the land comprised in Nos. 2639 and 2641 of the settlement of 1891-1892 was really part of the land that had been allotted to the plaintiffs in the partition of 1878-1879 and which was at the time described as khasra No. 2238/2 min. In the statement filed by the special kanungo (Ex. P. 16) the previous khasra numbers corresponding to No 2639 and 2641 are shown as No. 2241 min and No. 2244 and not 2238/2 min. So far as these fields are concerned the plaintiffs have, in my opinion, failed to show that they have a part of the land allotted to them in 1878-1879. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's claim fails in respect of them.

The result is that the plaintiffs succeed only with regard to 38 kanals of land of khasra No. 1813 and 28½ kanals of land khasra No. 1601 of Mr. Hailey's settlement or 66½ kanals in all.

In their amended plaint the plaintiffs claimed a decree for possession of specific killa numbers out of squares Nos. 81 and 91 as demarcated in the killa bandi of 1921-1922. As the plaintiffs have succeeded only with regard to a part of the claim and it is not possible to say on the record which of the killa numbers were allotted at the rectification in lieu of that part, a decree for possession of specific fields could not be passed in their favour. In these circumstances the relief to which the plaintiffs are entitled is a decree for joint possession with the defendants for 66½ kanals out of the land comprised in squares Nos. 81 and 91. It will be for the revenue authorities to decide on the spot which particular killa numbers are to be allotted to the plaintiffs for 66½ kanals of land that has been decreed in their favour. For the foregoing reasons I would accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and the decree of the lower Court and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants for joint possession of 66½ kanals of land of squares Nos. 81 and 91. As neither party has succeeded in full, parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Appeal No. 1264 of 1927, Decided on 24th February 1928.

 Evidence Act, S. 27—Statement leading to discovery of fact, including connexion of that fact with crime, should be proved—Confessional part cannot be excluded—Information should be proved in the precise words used—Law in India is wider than common law in England.

As S. 27 is intended to enable the prosecution to prove a confession made under certain circumstances, the whole of the information including the confessional portion thereof, given by the prisoner, which relates to the fact includes not only the concrete thing discovered by the investigating officer, but also its description as given by the accused including its connexion with the crime which is under investigation. While only so much of the information can be proved as has led to the discovery of the fact, there is no legal justification for splitting up or cutting down the statement of the prisoner so as to make it a vague and unintelligible statement and thus to defeat the very object with which S. 27 was enacted and, therefore, the information must be proved in the precise terms in which it was given : *A. Jai Lal, J.—The Sessions Judge of Sialkot has convicted Harnam Singh, appellant, of an offence under S. 396, I. P. C., and has sentenced him to death. The convict has appealed against his conviction and the case is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., to consider the question of confirmation of the sentence passed upon him.

Owing to the prevalence of plague in the beginning of the year 1924, the residents of Kot Moman in the district of Sialkot had evacuated the village and were living in a camp established outside the village. On the night between the 9th and 10th April 1924, a party of persons, who are stated by the prosecution witnesses to have numbered 14 or 15, committed a dacoity in this camp. The culprits were armed with guns, sharp-edged weapons and dangs, and in the course of the dacoity injuries, both grievous and simple, were caused by sharp-edged weapons and dangs to no less than fourteen residents of the camp. Buta Mal, son of Jhanda Mal, an Arora died as a result of the injuries received by him on this occasion. The medical evidence shows that he had an oblique incised wound $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times 3'' \times 4''$ on the right side of the anterior abdominal wall, the intestines having been cut across into two and an incised oblique wound $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1''$ in the right side of the chest between the eighth and the ninth rib. The ninth rib had been fractured and splintered. There was also a contusion on the back of the right forearm and the ulna bone had been fractured. In the opinion of the doctor the first two injuries were caused by a sharp-edged pointed weapon like a spear and injury No 3 was the result of a blow with a blunt weapon like a lathi. It is unnecessary to describe the injuries that were found by the doctor on the persons of the remaining men injured on this occasion, but an examination thereof leaves no doubt that the dacoits beat their victims mercilessly and were prepared to go to any length in order to attain their object of looting the camp.

Some of the culprits were arrested soon after the crime, were tried and convicted under S. 396, I. P. C. Harnam Singh, however, is alleged to have absconded and was not arrested till early in June 1925. During the previous trial of the culprits Ujagar Singh, son of Hira Singh, who was suspected to have been one of the dacoits, was tendered a pardon and was examined as a witness for the prosecution. Proceedings were taken against the present appellant under S. 512, Criminal P. C., on that occasion, and as Ujagar Singh is proved to have disappeared, his whereabouts not being known even to his son Jassa Singh (P. W. 46), and every attempt to secure his attendance having failed his statements recorded before the committing Magistrate on 12th July 1924 and 8th August 1924 have been transferred to the record of the Sessions Judge in the present case and have been read as evidence against the appellant.

Ujagar Singh in the first statement has described the manner in which this dacoity was planned and carried out. It is unnecessary to make any detailed reference to his statement on this point. It is sufficient to say that he definitely implicates Harnam Singh as one of his comrades in this crime and states that the appellant carried a spear in his hand. He also states that after the dacoity the property stolen, which was considerable in value, was divided into three portions, one of which was given to Harnam Singh and five others.

The fact that the approver was one of the dacoits is established by his own statement and also by the fact that he had disposed of a large amount of jewellery within a few days of the dacoity and that he surrendered to the police a gold bar and Rs. 113 in cash which represented his share of the stolen property.

The question, however, is whether the statement of the approver has been materially corroborated so as to connect Harnam Singh with the crime in question. After his arrest Harnam Singh was identified by Lal Chand (P. W. 8) and Sohan Lal (P. W. 9) who depose to have identified him as one of the dacoits. Lal Chand was injured in the course of the dacoity; there can, therefore, be no doubt about his being in a position to indentify the culprits. Sohan Lal is son of Ladhu Mal who was robbed of considerable property and was the first man to report the matter at the police station. This witness states that he was present when the dacoity was committed and that Buta Mal, deceased, Daulat Ram, Chuni Lal and others were injured in his presence by the dacoits who carried guns, pistols, chhavis, spears and dangs. It is in evidence that the camp was lit by means of lanterns and, therefore, the witnesses had ample opportunity to see the dacoits and to identify them. I see no reason to disbelieve the testimony of Lal Chand and Sohan Lal that they actually identified Harnam Singh as one of the dacoits.

There is, however, another piece of corroboration of the approver's testimony as against Harnam Singh. The latter after his arrest stated to Wahab Din (P. W. 23), Sub-Inspector of Police, attached to the Police Station of Tarn Taran, that part of his share of the Kotli Moman dacoity had been sold by him to Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith of Kalsian Khurd, in the district of Lahore. The distance between the place where this statement was made and Kalsian Khurd village is deposed to be 40 or 45 miles. On receiving this information the Sub-Inspector deputed a head constable to proceed to the village Kalsian Khurd and to recover the property from Wadhawa Singh. The head constable was able to recover a hasira, a pair of banks and some bangles from Wadhava Singh. They are marked Exs. P-16, P-17 and P-18 respectively. Wadhawa Singh in his statement at the trial has deposed that he knew Harnam Singh and that the latter had sold to him the jewellery produced by him. This jewellery has been identified to be part of the property stolen from the house of Ladhu Mal (P. W. 5) in the course of the dacoity. Ladhu Mal and his son Sohan Lal have identified it and they are corroborated in this by the testimony of other witnesses who say that they had pawned some of this jewellery with Ladhu Mal.

I am satisfied that the witnesses have given good reasons for identifying these articles and that they are portion of the property stolen at the time of the dacoity.

The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the property was not recovered from the possession of Wadhawa Singh as a result of information given to the Sub-Inspector by the appellant, but the police were promiscuously carrying out searches in the houses of the goldsmiths and in the course of one of such searches they recovered the jewellery from Wadhawa Singh who, in order to save himself, has falsely implicated Harnam Singh. There is absolutely no evidence in support of the assertion that the police were promiscuously searching the houses of the goldsmiths or that Wadhawa Singh has falsely implicated the appellant. In this connexion it is important to bear in mind that the accused was arrested at a distance of 40 or 45 miles from the village Kalsian Khurd and the police could not possibly have any suspicion against Wadhawa Singh who does not reside anywhere near the scene of the occurrence and against whom there was no reason to entertain any suspicion otherwise. The fact that the appellant made a statement to the Sub-Inspector of Police in a place about 40 miles from the house of this goldsmith and that as a result of that information stolen property was recovered from the house of Wadhawa Singh is to my mind a very good guarantee of the bona fides of the recovery made by the police.

The learned counsel, however, contends that the statement made by Harnam Singh to Wahab Din, Sub-Inspector, is not admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act. The portion of the statement objected to, and as mentioned in the deposition of Wahab Din, is as follows :

Harnam Singh stated before me that part of his share in the Kotli Moman dacoity had been sold by him to a goldsmith, whose name I do not now remember. On seeing the fard Ex. P/2-B I now remember that the name of the goldsmith was Wadhawa Singh of Kalsian Khurd, an original resident of Dal. I sent for Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith, and he came to Ajnala and produced the articles of jewellery alleged to have been sold to him by Harnam Singh.

Objection is taken to the portion underlined (italicized) by me. There is no difficulty in ascertaining from this deposition what was the actual statement made by Harnam Singh, though in my opinion it would have been more satisfactory if the learned Sessions Judge had elicited from the witness and recorded the actual words alleged to have been used by the appellant when giving information about the stolen property. The necessity of ascertaining from the witnesses and recording the exact words in which an accused person is alleged to have made a confession cannot in my opinion be impressed on the trial Courts in too emphatic terms. This has more than once been pointed out by this Court on many previous occasions. I need only add that disregard of these instructions may sometimes lead to grave miscarriage of justice. It may sometimes happen that the accused has given incriminating information in response to a question put to him by a police officer. In such a case both the question and the answer should be taken down in precise terms.

In the present case, as I have stated above, though the learned Sessions Judge has recorded the statement alleged to have been made by the accused in a narrative form in the third person, still there is no difficulty in ascertaining what was the exact statement made by him. Converted into the first person the statement was :

I have sold part of my share of the Kotli Moman dacoity to Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith of Kalsian Khurd.

The learned counsel objects to the admissibility of the words "part of my share of the Kotli Moman dacoity" and contends that the only portion of the information that is admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, is :

I sold (some property) to Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith of Kalsian Khurd.

His contention is that the description of the property as the accused's share of the Kotli Moman dacoity was not such an information as led to the recovery of the property, but that it was the clue to the person who had it, that is, Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith of Kalsian Khurd, that led to its recovery and, therefore, only that portion of the statement is admissible which gave such a clue.

In support of his contention the learned counsel relies upon Santa Singh v. Emperor (1). Tara Singh v. Emperor (2) and Gurdit Singh v. Emperor (3) and finally on Sulakhan Singh v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1926, Lah. 138).

Before entering into a discussion of these cases it will be convenient at this stage to examine S. 27, Evidence Act, on which they are based. That section reads as follows :

Provided that, when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered may be proved.

Now, it would be observed from the opening words of the section that it is really an exception to the sections immediately preceding it and which prohibit the use by the prosecution against the accused person of a confession made by the latter under certain specified circumstances. In its inception, therefore, this section is intended to enable the prosecution to prove against the accused a confession made by him, provided the conditions laid down therein have been complied with. The conditions are : (a) that in consequence of the information given by the accused person some " fact " is discovered—some fact of course which is relevant to the issue involved in the case ; and (b) that only so much of the information given by the accused is provable as relates distinctly to the " fact " thereby discovered. Within these limitations the prosecution is entitled to prove against the accused a confession made by him to a police officer or while in police custody. The reason for this exception to the general rule is that there exists in such a case an independent circumstance which provides a reliable test of the genuineness of the confession, that is to say a discovery of a relevant fact. We are, however, on the present occasion concerned with the extent of second limitation mentioned above. The question is how much of the information given by the accused in this case relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, such fact being the disposal or possession of stolen property by the prisoner. In my opinion the prosecution is entitled to prove the whole of the information which relates to the fact discovered ; in other words, the entire statement made by the accused which enabled the police to discover the fact and to connect or identify the same with the crime, is admissible against the accused.

Now to turn to the cases cited at the bar : the following passage quoted from the judgment in Santa Singh v. Emperor (1) briefly narrates the facts to which the learned Judges were called upon to apply the law and their decision on the legal point involved :

The third point urged in support of the conviction is that the appellant made certain admissions to Ishar Singh, Harnam Singh, and others, to the effect that he would point out the place where he had murdered the deceased and the place where he had buried the chhavi with which he had committed the murder. It is not denied that at the time when the alleged admissions were made the appellant was in police custody, but it is urged that as, in consequence of the information thus given a chhavi was discovered and earth and grass were found with colouring matter of blood thereon, the whole statement made by the appellant in respect of these matters is admissible in evidence against him under S. 27, Evidence Act. We cannot agree with the proposition. In our opinion, only so much of that statement is relevant as led to the discovery of the chhavi or the spots of blood and that that portion of it which went further and purported to be a confession of guilt was irrelevant. In other words, the prisoner's statement that he buried the chhavi in a certain spot would be relevant, but not the further statement that it was the chhavi with which he had committed the murder. So also the statement that he would point out a certain spot would be relevant, and evidence that at the spot indicated bloodstains would be found would be admissible, but not the further statement that it was at this spot that he had committed the murder.

In the present case it is in evidence that the chhavi was actually produced by the appellant himself, and it is not contended that it was found by the police or anyone else in consequence of information given by him. In these circumstances we hold upon the authority of Queen-Empress v. Kamalia (4) that though the fact that the appellant actually produced a chhavi at a particular place may be proved, the accompanying statement alleged to have been made by him to the effect that he buried the chhavi there is inadmissible in evidence.

It is to be observed that the learned Judges were of opinion that the prisoner's statement that he buried the chhavi in a certain spot would be admissible, but that the further statement that it was the chhavi with which he had committed the murder could not be proved. Much depends, of course, on the actual words used by the prisoner, but supposing he had stated :

> I have concealed the chhavi with which I killed the deceased under the heap of manure near my cattle shed, and as a result of this statement the police dug up the manure heap and recovered the chhavi, I am unable to see any reason why the whole of this statement should not be admitted. It is the statement actually made by the prisoner that is to be proved against him and not what the Court considers he should have stated in order to enable the police to discover the chhavi. In my opinion there is no legal sanction for substituting a statement which the accused never made in place of the one actually made by him or for mutilating and splitting up a sentence used by prisoner when giving the information sought to be proved against him and thereby reducing it to a meaningless and vague piece of evidence detached from the context. Further the statement that the prisoner had buried " a chhavi " would be vague, meaningless and irrelevant unless it be assumed that he was referring to the chhavi with which the crime is alleged to have been committed Yet in practice such an assumption is always made if the statement is used against the prisoner. In other words, while the actual statement of the accused describing the chhavi as the weapon of offence is excluded the inference drawn from the discovery and the accompanying statement so far as it is admitted is precisely what is stated by the prisoner in the excluded part of his statement. The result is that though S. 27 permits the proof of a confession, yet it is the confessional part of the statement that is excluded. With great respect I am unable to accept as correct the exposition by the learned Judges of the law as contained in S. 27, Evidence Act. In my opinion they have put too narrow a construction on that section.

But the reported case does not really help the appellant as the learned Judges distinctly held therein that the statement that " prisoner buried the chhavi in a certain spot " would be relevant under S. 27, Evidence Act. It is true that they held that the entire statement was inadmissible because after it had been made the prisoner himself had actually produced the chhavi. The point does not arise in this case, but it seems to me that it was immaterial in what manner the recovery was made, i. e., whether the accused himself dug the place or some other persons did so was immaterial for the purpose of determining the admissibility of the statement made by the prisoner. The essential question to be determined was whether the chhavi was discovered in consequence of the information given by the accused.

In Tara Singh v. Emperor (2) the accused had stated : " I will point out the spot where I committed the murder" and thereafter he conducted the police and other witnesses to a spot where earth was found saturated with blood. The learned Judge held as follows :

> The words: "where I committed the murder" did not in themselves distinctly relate to the discovery of that spot, as the locus delicti could have been discovered just as easily had he merely stated: " I will show you the scene of murder," or " I will take you to a particular place where you will find blood." A person who had had no hand in the murder but had chanced to witness its commission might well have been able to lead the police to the spot in question.

It will be observed that the learned Judges ruled out the confessional part of the information by splitting up the statement of the prisoner.

In Gurdit Singh v. Emperor (3), which is a judgment by a Judge in Chambers of the Chief Court of the Punjab, the learned Judge remarked as follows :

> I must remark that in this case as in many others of his which I have seen, the Magistrate who evidently does not understand S. 27, Evidence Act, has systematically used the provisions of that section to cover inadmissible statements to the police. It is quite legitimate to record evidence that an accused person said: " I will point out certain property " if that statement of the accused leads to a discovery ; but it is not legitimate to record as evidence that an accused person said: " I will point out certain property which I obtained as my share of the booty in the dacoity.

Here again the learned Judge has sought to substitute a vague statement of his own in place of the more definite and intelligible statement made by the prisoner. These two cases, therefore, are open to the same criticisms as the case of Santa Singh v. Emperor (1).

Sulakhan Singh v. Emperor [A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 138] is not of much assistance in the present case because it appears from the judgment that the accused stated that he would point out the place where the dead body was buried and then he said that he had buried it. The statement that he had buried the dead body was held inadmissible by the learned Judges, because it transpired that it was made by the accused on a question being put to him as to who had buried the dead body after he had offered to point out the place where it was buried. Obviously this statement was not admissible in evidence as it was not an essential part of the information which led to the discovery of the body. This case, therefore, affords no guidance on the present occasion.

Reference may also be made to Emperor v. Turezi a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Criminal Appeal No. 658 of 1919. The facts were somewhat similar to the case of Sulakhan Singh v. Emperor [A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 138.] In this case also the accused said that he would point out where the dead body was and in answer to a further question as to who had buried the dead body he admitted that he had done so. The learned Judges held that this last admission made by accused was not admissible against him. They expressed the opinion that there was a distinction between the statement actually made by the prisoner in that case and the following statement: "Come along, I will show you the dead body which I have buried," and it seems that they were inclined to hold that this last statement was admissible.

It appears, therefore, that so far as this Province is concerned the tendency of the Chief Court has been to put too narrow a construction on S. 27, Evidence Act, and to unnecessarily confine its operation within limits not contemplated by law. The later tendency both of the Chief Court of the Punjab and of this Court, however, has been to put a more logical construction on this section. In this connexion reference may be made to Ishar Singh v. Crown, a judgment of his Lordship the Chief Justice sitting with Mr. Justice Scott-Smith in Criminal Appeal No. 538 of 1915 in which it was held that a statement made by the accused that he had buried the article (a revolver in that case) in a particular place where it was subsequently discovered was admissible in evidence against him, as such a statement came within the four corners of S. 27, Evidence Act.

In my opinion, therefore, while on the one hand only so much of the statement made by an accused person can be proved as leads distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, on the other hand, there is no justification for the Court to split up a sentence used by the accused in giving the information or to substitute a different and a vague statement in place of the intelligible and connected statement of the prisoner. As I have already stated, though S. 27 is intended to enable the prosecution to prove a confession by the accused, yet what is sought in many cases to be excluded is the confessional part of the statement, and in some cases the tendency has been to exclude the statement altogether and yet to import a confession in the statement or to interpret the conduct of the accused in making the discovery as an admission of guilt. This I consider is not only unfair to the prosecution but also to the accused.

This question has recently been discussed by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (see In re. Sogiamuthu Padayachi (5), where most of the previous cases decided by the other High Courts have been examined and, therefore, I do not think that any useful purpose will be served by my discussing them here again. In that case the prisoner had stated :

> Properties stolen from the Mutt were buried by me and others in the Cauvery bank and had then taken the police officer to the place indicated and produced the property from there. It was held that the whole of this statement was admissible against the accused. Mr. Justice Wallace remarked as follows :

> The essence of the section is that the statement made by the accused must be a confession, that is, an admission or statement, suggesting an inference of guilt. If every word suggesting an inference of guilt is to be excluded and only words which directly disclose where the property is, are admissible, then the section has no application. It is clear that the Court is not intended to separate up the actual words used by the accused, which led to the discovery of the property, strike out some words here and admit some words there. So much of the statement, as was the immediate cause of the discovery, is admissible. In this case, if the property was discovered in a particular place, because the accused said: "I buried it there" that statement is certainly admissible.

(5) A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 638=50 Mad. 274.

Spencer, Offg. Chief Justice, expressed his opinion in the following terms :

> But if the accused did use the words then they are parts of the sentence in which he gave information which led to the discovery of the stolen property and parts of sentences cannot be excluded so as to have the effect of making the whole statement incomplete and less intelligible.

Similarly Mr. Justice Devadoss, after reviewing the judicial authorities on the subject came to the conclusion that the whole of the statement made by the prisoner was admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act. With this view I respectfully agree.

I hold, therefore, that as S. 27 is intended to enable the prosecution to prove a confession made under certain circumstances the whole of the information including the confessional portion thereof, given by the prisoner which relates to the fact discovered can be proved against him, and further that the fact includes not only the concrete thing discovered by the investigating officer, but also its description as given by the accused including its connexion with the crime which is under investigation. I also hold that while only so much of the information can be proved as has led to the discovery of the fact, there is no legal justification for splitting up or cutting down the statement of the prisoner so as to make it a vague and unintelligible statement and thus to defeat the very object with which S. 27 was enacted and, therefore, that the information must be proved in the precise terms in which it was given.

Consequently the statement made by Harnam Singh to the Sub-Inspector that he had sold part of his share of the Kotli Moman dacoity to Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith of Kalsian Khurd is admissible against him. It may, however, be stated that even if this statement be held to be inadmissible and the entire evidence relating to the discovery of the stolen property as a result of the information given by him be excluded, still there is ample evidence on the record to establish the guilt of the appellant. I would, therefore, affirm his conviction under S. 396, I. P. C.

The question of sentence presents no difficulty in this case. The weapons carried and used by the dacoits, the brutal nature of the assault on the inmates of the camp and the number of the injured persons and of the injuries received by them clearly lead to the inference that the culprits came deliberately prepared to kill anybody who came in their way and that it was in pursuance of this intention that Buta Mal deceased was brutally murdered. Under the circumstances I hold that the penalty of death was fully deserved by Harnam Singh convict. I would, therefore, dismiss his appeal and confirm the sentence of death awarded to him by the Sessions Judge.

Fforde, J.—I agree and have only a few remarks to make on the subject of S. 27, Evidence Act. The tendency of the prosecution in this province has been to give no effect to that section. The statement leading to the discovery of an incriminating fact is hardly ever given in evidence, the prosecution contenting itself with proving the discovery only, and in those cases where the statement is proved the confessional part of it is nearly always omitted. The words of the section, " so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved," have been interpreted as though they read, so much of such information as leads to the discovery of the fact may be proved, provided it does not amount to a confession.

No doubt, the Judges in the past have been led to this construction by the rule of law which at one time prevailed in England. The rule as laid down by Eldon, C.J., in R. v. Harvey (6), was that where the knowledge of a fact was obtained from a prisoner under a promise which excluded the confession itself from being given in evidence an acquittal should be directed, unless the fact itself proved would have been enough to warrant conviction without any confession leading to it. That rule, however, was considerably relaxed in favour of the prosecution by later decisions and the rule of the common law now is as stated by Taylor on Evidence, Vol. 1, p. 614, in these terms :

> When in consequence of information unduly obtained from the prisoner, the property stolen, or the instrument of the crime, or the body of the person murdered, or any other material fact, has been discovered, proof is admissible that such discovery was made conformably with the information so obtained. The prisoner's statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other article was to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is shown to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is, therefore, competent to prove that the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching a particular place, and that it was accordingly so found, but it would not in such a case of a confession improperly obtained, be competent to inquire whether he confessed that he had concealed it there. So much of the confession as relates distinctly to the fact discovered by it may be given in evidence, as this part at least of the statement cannot have been false.

Phipson on Evidence, 6th edn. p. 270, expressed the same rule in this way :

Facts and documents disclosed in consequence of inadmissible confessions are receivable if relevant. And where property has been discovered or delivered up in this way so much of the confession as strictly relates thereto will be admissible, for these portions at least cannot be untrue but independent statements not qualifying or explaining the fact, though made at the same time, will be rejected.

The example given by Phipson to illustrate this principle is as follows :

A is charged with burglary, the fact that, after an improper inducement A confessed to having thrown a lantern into a pond, and the fact that the lantern was found there are admissible : R. v. Gould (7), R. v. Harris cited by Joy, 83, R. v. Thurtell (8) id. 84. Aliter as to other parts of the confessions.

As S. 27, Evidence Act has been drafted, as have been almost all the provisions of that Act, upon the English principles of law laid down in decided cases these principles are no doubt a very useful guide to the interpretation of the Evidence Act. But, in considering the effect of S. 27, it must be borne in mind that whereas in England a confession made to a police officer by a person in custody is admissible in evidence provided the prosecution first shows that it has not been obtained by any improper means such as coercion, threat or wrongful persuasion, S. 26, Evidence Act, prohibits such a confession being received in evidence at all, unless it comes within the four corners of S. 27.

In America the tendency of the Courts appears to be to admit the whole confessional statement, once it has been proved that some relevant fact has been brought to light in consequence thereof : see Wigmore on Evidence.

I can find no recent English authority on the subject probably due to the fact that in England this question now very rarely arises.

In India the Courts have recently given a wider construction to the terms of S. 27 than has hitherto been the practice. In addition to the Madras case cited by my learned brother there are two recent cases decided by the Bombay and the Patna High Courts respectively. In Shivabhai Becharbhai v. Emperor (8), the Court held that a statement made by an accused person while in the custody of the police, to the effect that he had burnt the deceased's clothes and would point out where he had done so, is admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act, on the discovery of the clothes in the place pointed out. The Court went so far as to hold that such a confession, if it affects a co-accused could be taken into consideration against the latter under S. 30. In Lalji Dusadh v. Emperor (9) it was held that where, in answer to the investigating police officer, the accused stated that he threw the weapon with which he assaulted the deceased at a certain place, and the weapon was discovered as the result of the disclosure, the statement consisting of the assertion that the weapon had been thrown at a particular place and that it was the weapon with which the offence was committed, was admissible in evidence under S. 27. With these decisions, which are to the same effect as the Madras decision, I am in complete agreement. The Indian Evidence Act, in express terms, puts the law on the subject on a wider basis than does the common law in England. It seems to me that if an accused person in custody of a police officer says to that officer, I buried the chhavi with which I murdered X at such and such a place," and the chhavi is in fact found concealed in that place, the whole of the statement is admissible in evidence. The words, " with which I murdered X" relate as distinctly to the object discovered, namely the chhavi, as does that portion of the statement which discloses where the weapon may be found. There may, of course, be other remarks of a confessional nature included in the statement which would be inadmissible, as, for instance, if the accused were to make a statement of his motives for murdering

(7) 9 C. & P. 364.

(8) A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 513=50 Bom. 683.

X and introduced details of the crime in which no reference to the weapon used appeared, and then ended by saying, "the chhavi with which the murder was committed will be found hidden at a certain spot", and the chhavi is found hidden at that spot, then only the latter part of the statement could be proved as that would be the only part of the confession which related distinctly to the fact discovered. In every case of this nature the Court has to consider how much of the information given by the accused does relate distinctly to the fact discovered.

In the case before us the statement of the accused, that he had sold part of his share in the Kotli Moman dacoity to Wadhawa Singh, goldsmith of Kalsian Khurd, is in my opinion clearly admissible as soon as articles are found in the possession of the goldsmith Wadhawa Singh which are proved to be the proceeds of the Kotli Moman dacoity, as the whole statement relates distinctly to the discovered fact.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 199 of 1925, Decided on 16th March 1928, from decree of Zafar Ali, J., D/- 20th May 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 433 of 1925.

* Contract Act, S. 171—Amount due under fixed deposit receipt, and payable to either or survivor—Bank cannot appropriate the money towards debt due by one of them alone.

A bank issued a fixed deposit receipt for Rs. 500 in favour of B and R, the amount being payable to either or survivor. R obtained an overdraft from the bank. The bank credited the amount due under the fixed deposit receipt to this overdraft and on B demanding payment informed him of the action taken on it and refused to pay. B thereupon brought an action against the bank for the recovery of the amount due under the fixed deposit receipt.

Held: that the bank could not appropriate the money towards the debt due by R alone.

Judgment.—The Simla Banking and Industrial Company Limited, issued a fixed deposit receipt for Rs. 500 on 23rd February 1922 in favour of Shrimati Bhagwan Kaur and her son Raghunandan Singh, the amount being payable, on 6th January 1923 to "either or survivor."

Subsequent to 22nd February 1922 Raghunandan Singh succeeded in obtaining an overdraft from the bank, and, on 6th January 1923 was indebted to it in the sum of Rs. 33,000 or the reabouts. The bank credited the amount due under the fixed deposit receipt to this overdraft on 6th January 1923 and, on Shrimati Bhagwan Kaur demanding payment, informed her of the action taken on it, and refused to pay. Shrimati Bhagwan Kuar, thereupon, brought an action against the bank for the recovery of the amount due under the fixed deposit receipt.

The bank pleaded a "general lien" and claimed to have acted within its rights in appropriating the amount as it had done. The trial Court, however, decreed the plaintiff's claim and an appeal by the bank having been dismissed by the District Judge, it came up to this Court in second appeal. This appeal was dismissed by Zafar Ali, J., and the bank has preferred an appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, through Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal.

It was contended that as in the present case the presentation of the receipt was not essential, and either of the two could demand payment at the due date, the "general lien" held by the bank entitled it to regard the money as belonging to Raghunandan Singh and to appropriate it towards the debt due by him alone.

No authority was cited in support of the contention and neither in law nor in equity am I able to see any reason to give effect to it. In my judgment the claim was rightly decreed and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Limitation Act, Art. 144 — Overt act by trespasser—Admission by him of plaintiff's title—Admission cancels overt act.

An admission of another's title by a person claiming land adversely cancels the effect of any overt act that he has committed and it cannot be inferred or presumed that that admission carries with it an assertion of adverse title. [P 317 C 1]

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellants.

J. L. Kapur and Badri Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Plaintiffs brought this suit for possession of 10 kanals 18 marlas of land now situate within the abadi of their village and formerly agricultural land. The only issue in the case was whether the plot belonged to the plaintiffs and had been in their possession within the last 12 years. Both these points were decided in their favour by the District Judge and a decree was given.

On second appeal counsel does not contest the title of the plaintiffs beyond saying that his clients have acquired an adverse title, which is indefeasible and that the plaintiffs had not been in possession within 12 years. He relies upon an overt act committed by his clients in the year 1909, when they attempted to build a wall on this land, and in a criminal case, which followed thereon, admitted the title of the plaintiffs. Such an admission cancels the effect of any previous act that they had committed and it cannot be inferred as presumed that that admission carried with it an assertion of adverse title. No overt act since 1909 is alleged and the appeal must, therefore, fail and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 251 of 1927, Decided on 6th January 1928, for transfer of case from 1st Class Magistrate, Hissar, to some other Court.

Niaz Muhammad—for Petitioners.

Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din—for Respondents.

Order.—This is an application for the transfer of a case which has been pending in the Court below for a very long time. Uunder my order dated 18th November 1927, a copy of the affidavit and the application for transfer was sent to the Magistrate concerned and also to another Magistrate whose name unfortunately seems to have been dragged in the application. Both these Magistrates have submitted very full and satisfactory explanations. I may observe that the case was originally filed in the Court of a Tahsildar, it was transferred to the Court of Sardar Bishan Singh, Magistrate. The applicants now desire to get the case transferred once again from the Court of this Magistrate to that of some other Magistrate. The affidavit read along with the explanation submitted by the two Magistrates does not make out a sufficiently strong case for my taking the extreme step of ordering the transfer of the case from the Court of the Magistrate where it is pending. It is urged by Mr. Niaz Muhammad, the learned advocate for the petitioners, that his clients have been already acquitted of the same or similar offences with which they are now charged and that under the provisions of S. 403 they cannot be tried again on the same set of facts. The Magistrate has not so far recorded his judgment. If this point has any substance there is not the slightest doubt that the learned Magistrate would give effect to it. But I have never heard of any application for transfer being successfully made simply because it is apprehended that in the ultimate judgment which the Magistrate would deliver in the case, he would not give effect to a certain legal objection which might be taken at the trial. As stated above no substantial ground has been made out and the affidavit of Mr. Muhammad Sharif, the gentleman who is mentioned in my order dated 18th November 1927, is not forthcoming although Mr. Niaz Muhammad gave me to understand that Mr. Muhammad Sharif would give his affidavit in support of the incident mentioned in para. 3. (d) of the application. The case has been hanging on for a very long time and it is time now that it should come to an end so far as this Magistrate's Court is concerned. I reject this application and at the same time order that this case should be disposed of at the earliest possible opportunity.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 496 — No bail bond can be taken from a third person — Where no undertaking is taken from the principal offender no surety can be made liable.

A police officer acting under S. 496 has the power to demand a bail from person arrested or to accept his own bond without sureties. But under no provision of law the police officer can take a third party's bond for such person's appearance. [P 319 C 1]

There can be no surety without a principal. Where therefore no undertaking has been given by the person arrested to appear when called upon to do so, it is not possible for any person to declare himself surety for his appearance. [P 319 C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 496 — The bond must be in accordance with form 42—Otherwise no liability arises.

The terms of a bond or bail bond executed under S. 496 should be in accordance with form 42 of schedule. That form indicates what the contents of a bond with sureties should be. In order to be enforceable a bail bond must be in accordance with the form. Where the bond is not in accordance with the form, the person executing the same incurs no legal liability by executing it. [P 319 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 514-B—A bond may be executed on behalf of minor but not of a major.

Section 514-B specifically provides that when the person required to execute a bond is a minor, the Court or police officer may accept in lieu thereof a bond executed by a surety or sureties only. There is no such provision for a major. [P 319 C 1]

Nawal Kishore—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—In the course of a police enquiry under S. 110, Criminal P. C., against one Teja Singh, his uncle Wadhawa Singh at the bidding of the investigating officer gave a bond of Rs. 1,000 for his appearance whenever he should be called upon to attend. It was, however, not stated in the bond where and before whom he was to appear, and no machalka or recognizance was taken from Teja Singh himself for his appearance. This bond is dated 10th February 1927, but the police chalan was sent up on 5th June 1927, and the Mag strate recorded an order under S. 112, Criminal P. C., on 27th June 1927. It was subsequently discovered that Teja Singh had left for China. The Magistrate then proceeded to take action under S. 514, Criminal P. C., and eventually forfeited the bond of Wadhawa Singh. There is no specification of the bond in the order of the Magistrate nor in that of the District Magistrate dismissing Wadhawa Singh's appeal against forfeiture, but presumably the bond described above was the one that was forfeited. Wadhawa Singh now seeks revision of that order.

It is clear that S. 55, Criminal P. C., empowers an officer in charge of a police station to arrest any person who is by repute an habitual thief,.etc., but if such person is prepared to give bail he must be released on bail as laid down in S. 496 of that Code That section in its relation to police officers runs thus :

When any person other than a person accused of a nonbailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station. and is prepared at any time while in the custody of such officer * * * to give bail, such person shall be released on bail ; provided that such officer if he thinks fit, may, instead of taking bail from such person, discharge him on his executing a bond without sureties for his appearance as herein after provided.

The police officer in the present case appears to have acted under S. 496, and what he had the power to do under that section was to demand a bail from Teja Singh or to accept his own bond without sureties. Under no provision of law the police officer could take a third party's bond for Teja Singh's appearance.

Further it is obvious that there can be no surety without a principal. In the present case no undertaking having been given by Teja Singh to appear when called upon to do so, it is not possible for any person to declare himself surety for his appearance. The terms of a bond or bail bond executed under S. 496 should be in accordance with Form 42, of Schedule to the Criminal Procedure Code. That form and form 25 for a bail bond under S 169, Criminal P. C., and forms of bail bonds executed under other provisions of the Code indicate what the contents of a bond with sureties should be. In order to be enforceable a bail bond must be in accordance with these forms. As the bond in question is not, Wadhawa Singh incurred no legal liability by executing it.

In this connexion a reference may be made to S. 514-B, Criminal P. C., which specifically provides that when the person required to execute a bond is a minor, the Court or police officer may accept in lieu thereof a bond executed by a surety or sureties only. There is no such provision for a major.

I, therefore, set aside the order forfeiting the bond.

Mohsin Shah—for Petitioners.

Judgment.—Notice was issued in this case on the ground that it was alleged by the petitioners, which allegation was supported by an affidavit of the counsel, who appeared for them before the lower appellate Court, that counsel was not allowed to argue the appellants' case by the Additional District Magistrate. An explanation has been submitted by the Additional District Magistrate from which it appears that proper opportunity was given by the lower appellate Court to the counsel. There may be a difference of opinion as to the sufficiency of the opportunity given between the counsel and the Court, but having regard to the explanation of the Additional District Magistrate, I must hold that there is no substance in the complaint. The lower appellate Court has discussed the evidence produced in support of the prosecution case and agreeing with the trial Court has held the guilt of the petitioners proved. I am unable to arrive at a different conclusion in these proceedings.

The petition for revision is, therefore, dismissed The petitioners were released on bail pending the disposal of the petition. They must surrender to their bail and serve out the remaining sentence awarded to them.

Though I have accepted as correct the version of the Additional District Magistrate as to what happened in this case, I desire to point out to him that, as appears from his explanation, he holds an opinion about the respective positions of the Bench and the Bar which, to say the least of it, is peculiar; he relies in support of his view upon an extract from some extra-judicial remarks made by a learned Judge of another High Court without regard to the context or the occasion on which it was made. He apparently entertains exaggerated notions as to the alleged tendency of a class of legal practitioners to waste the time of the Courts. The learned Additional District Magistrate must bear in mind that, so long as he is not guilty of unnecessary repetition or of irrelevant arguments a counsel is entitled to present his client's case as he thinks best and it no ground for a Judge to decline to hear him or to cut short his argument merely because he is expected by the superior Courts to turn out a certain amount of work within a fixed time.

An application by husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of wife's adultery, submitted five years after the fact had come to his knowledge should be dismissed even though adultery of the wife has been established.

Anant Ram—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The District Judge of Rawalpindi has dismissed the petition of one Allan Robert Shaw, for dissolution of his marriage with his wife, on the ground that, while the adultery of the wife had been established, the husband has been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting the petition. The evidence on the record shows that the offence complained of was committed in the summer of 1921, and that it came to the knowledge of the husband shortly afterwards. He did not, however, make the application for divorce until after the expiry of five years. It is not disputed that there was unreasonable delay in presenting the petition, and the explanation offered by the husband to account for the delay has been considered by the trial Judge and found to be unsatisfactory.

The learned counsel for the appellant has again put forward the explanation which has already been rejected by the District Judge, but we do not think that any ground has been established, such as would justify our dissent from the conclusion of the trial Judge. We accordingly dismiss the appeal, but as there is no appearance by or on behalf of the respondent we make no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal No. 1375 of 1927, Decided on 19th January 1928, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 19th November 1927.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 337 (1)—Approver's disclosure of facts may be oral.

Section 337 (1) nowhere lays down that the disclosure of facts shall be reduced to writing. If such disclosure is made orally the verbal testimony of the person to whom it has been made will be sufficient to prove the statement. As a rule of caution, however, the approver's statement is always formally reduced to writing, a practice which it is obviously very desirable to observe so that no dispute may subsequently arise as to what the exact terms of the statement were. [P 322 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act. S. 24—Admission under S. 339 (2), Criminal P. C., contemplates a full and true disclosure made upon the inducement or promise of a pardon and not a disclosure induced as a result of undue pressure.—S. 24 does not exclude such statement made under Criminal P. C., S. 339 (2).

An approver's disclosure is in its very nature always the result of an inducement or promise, namely, the inducement to confess upon a promise of pardon; but should it appear that it was extorted as the result of undue duress, such as threats or violence, to that extent the provisions of S. 24 would be applicable and the confessional statement would have to be ruled out of evidence. S. 339 (2) can only contemplate the admisson of a full and true disclosure made upon the inducement or promise of a pardon, and not a disclosure induced as a result of undue pressure. Such a statement is not excluded from evidence by S. 24, Evidence Act: 5 A. L. J. 691, Foll. [P 322 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 337 (2)—Approver's disclosure not true and full—His not being examined at the trial of the persons he has implicated is not a breach on the part of the Crown so far as the trial of the approver himself is concerned.

The fact that the approver has not been examined at the trial of the persons he has implicated is not a breach on the part of the Crown of the conditions upon which the disclosure was made and the pardon granted so far as the trial of the approver himself is concerned. The approver has failed to comply with the condition on which a tender of pardon was made, as soon as it is established that the disclosure is not a true and full one, and that it is not a true and full disclosure becomes apparent as soon as he is shown to have made a statement entirely inconsistent with the one upon the strength of which the pardon was granted. Where a statement made by approver is relied upon by the prosecution as an admission of guilt in respect of the crime for which the approver has been tried, it is a confession and if withdrawn before the Committing Magistrate must be regarded in the light of a retracted confession and must be corroborated by extrinsic evidence. [P 324 C 1]

B. R. Puri, Rattan Lal and Ishar Das—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—The appellant Ram Nath has been tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore, for having on the evening of 4th May 1927, at Machi Hatta Bazar, Lahore, together with other persons murdered one Piran Ditta a tonga driver. He has been convicted of the offence charged and has been sentenced to death, and he now appeals against that conviction and sentence. The facts shortly stated are as follows:

On the evening of 4th May 1927, a police constable named Shahan Khan discovered in the Machhi Hatta, a tonga with a wounded man in it on the point of death. The constable got into the tonga and drove it to the City Kotwali. On the same evening the dead body of this man, who is alleged to be Piran Ditta, was sent to the Mayo Hospital together with three other dead bodies in the charge of police constable Fateh Din. On the following day, that is, 5th May 1927, the post mortem on all these bodies was carried out by A. F. Mathews, Assistant to the Civil Surgeon, Lahore. When the post mortem on these bodies was performed no person identified the corpse of the person now alleged to be Piran Ditta. The statement of the Assistant to the Civil Surgeon on the point is as follows:

> Before commencing post mortem I also asked which constable got the body and in the case of Piran Ditta there was no constable forthcoming.

I may add that all the bodies examined by the Assistant Civil Surgeon on this occasion were those of persons alleged to have been murdered. The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the dying man found in the tonga on the evening of 4th May has not been proved to be Piran Ditta. The learned Judge in the course of his judgment says that there is no satisfactory proof that the body examined by Dr. Mathews was the same body that had been taken from the tonga. This conclusion appears to be quite justified by the state of the evidence. It is of course not necessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether or not the man found injured in the tonga was named Piran Ditta, but it is necessary for the purpose of proving the nature of the injuries which that man is alleged to have received to establish that the body examined by Dr. Mathews was the body of that man in the tonga. The lack of satisfactory evidence on this point leaves us in the position of being unable to conclude what are the exact injuries which that man received. But one point is clear and that is that the dying man found in the tonga, whatever may be his name or the nature of the injuries which he received, was murdered on the evening of 4th May. The question which we have to decide is: Has the appellant Ram Nath been satisfactorily proved to have had a hand in that murder.

No clue to the murder appears to have been discovered until 9th June, when as a result of certain information which the police received, Ram Nath and his brother Baij were called to the investigation.

On the 10th a person called Ganesh Das also appeared, and on that date both Ganesh Das and Ram Nath alleged to have made some statements in connexion with the affair. Ram Nath was then arrested and detained in the C. I. D. barrack. On 14th June, Ram Nath is alleged to have expressed a desire to become an approver, and he was thereupon brought before Mr. Keough, then acting as Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, who offered him a pardon conditional upon his making a full and true disclosure of all he knew about the crime in question. This tender of pardon was accepted by Ram Nath who, on the following day, i. e., 15th June, was brought before Mr. Phailbus, a Magistrate of the first class, who recorded his statement. The document recording this statement has been put in evidence and it is upon the admissions appearing therein that the prosecution principally rely to convict the appellant.

On 23rd June, Ram Nath was brought before the committing Magistrate as a witness against the persons whom he implicated in his statement, but when put in the witness-box he alleged that that statement was totally false, that it was extorted by police pressure and that in fact he knew nothing about the death of Piran Ditta, the tonga man. The trial of the persons whom he implicated was proceeded with and resulted in their acquittal. Thereupon the public prosecutor having granted a certificate that Ram Nath had not complied with the condition on which the tender of pardon was made, the latter was committed to trial for the offence in respect of which that pardon was tendered, in accordance with the provisions of S. 339, Criminal P. C. It is in respect of the conviction and sentence at this trial that the present appeal has arisen.

Mr. Puri for the appellant has contended that the statement made by the appellant to Mr. Phailbus referred to as Ex. P. A., is not admissible in evidence, becuase, it is a confessional statement and the document recording it does not comply with the provisions of S. 164, Criminal P. C., and the departure from those provisions has not been cured by the evidence of the Magistrate who recorded the statement. His second contention is that the pardon has not been forfeited and may be pleaded in bar, as the appellant not having been examined before the Sessions Judge at the trial of the other accused, the terms upon which the disclosure was made and the pardon granted have not been fulfilled by the prosecution. So far as the first point raised is concerned, I have no doubt the statement made by the appellant to Mr. Phailbus is admissible in evidence under the provisions of S. 339 (2), Cr. P. C., provided it has not been shown to have been induced as aresult of threats or of violence. S. 337 (1), Cr.P.C., provides that certain Magistrates may > at any stage of the investigation or enquiry into, or the trial of the offence, with a view to obtaining the evidence of ony person supposed to have been directly concerned in, or privy to, the offence under enquiry, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to such offence, and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof.

The section nowhere lays down that such disclosure shall be reduced to writing. I have no doubt that if made orally the verbal testimony of the person to whom it has been made will be sufficient to prove the statement. As a rule of caution, however, the approver's statement is always formally reduced to writing, a practice which it is obviously very desirable to observe so that no dispute may subsequently arise as to what the exact terms of the statement were. The section contemplates that the "full and true disclosure" may be made anterior to the enquiry before the committing Magistrate and may also be made at the enquiry or at the trial. It is the disclosure inducing the pardon which is the statement referred to in S. 339 (2). The pardon may be offered before any enquiry has been commenced before the Committing Magistrate (as in the present case), or it may be offered when the person is himself an accused person at the enquiry or it may be offered when he is under trial. It is not made under the provision of S. 164, Criminal P. C., and in my judgment that section in no way governs such a statement. I also agree with the view expressed in Emperor v. Sultan Khan (1), that such a statement is not necessarily excluded from evidence by the provisions of S. 24, Indian Evidence Act. Sub-S. (2), S. 339, Criminal P. C., in my opinion makes by necessary implication a statement of this nature an exception to the rule of evidence enacted in S. 24, Indian Evidence Act, as far as that section excludes confessions made as the result of the inducement or pardon An approver's disclosure is in its very nature always the result of an inducement or promise, namely, the inducement to confess upon a promise of pardon; but should it appear that it was extorted as the result of undue duress, such as threats or violence, I have no doubt that to that extent the provisions of S. 24 would be applicable and the confessional statement would have to be ruled out of evidence. S 339 (2) can only contemplate the admission of a full and true disclosure made upon the inducement or promise of a pardon and not a disclosure induced as a result of undue pressure. This appears to have been the view taken by the Court in Emperor v. Sultan Khan (1), for the learned Judges, after holding that the approver's confession was not excluded by S. 24, Evidence Act, proceeded to discuss the further question whether or not the statement had been made of his own free will and accord.

The learned Sessions Judge, in regard to this aspect of the case, has made the following remarks in his judgment :

(1) [1903] 5 A. L. J. 691=(1908) A. W. N. 259.

Ram Nath alleges that Ganeshi's statement was read over to him and used to influence him. Faiz Ullah denies this. There is no evidence which I regard as satisfactory to prove whether this was so or not. I think it very likely that the two men were played off against each other.

Ram Nath alleges that Hargopal was beaten, and that he was threatened. There is no proof of this on the record.

The learned Judge in the next line says :

Reference to the Zimnis does not lead me to disbelieve this statement; that is to say, that Hargopal was beaten and that Ram Nath was threatened. The learned Judge further remarks :

I find that there is no reason to support any undue influence by the police before Ram Nath gave a statement purporting to be a disclosure, except : (1) that he may have been told that Ganeshi had implicated him and others and that a statement by him might lead to his pardon; and (2) he may have been threatened with a beating.

I find that Ram Nath was certainly kept under direct police control both before and after his acceptance of pardon, and that he may well have been in fear (justified or not justified) of some form of reprisal, if he did not repeat the statement already made by him.

I am not prepared to disagree with the above expressions of opinion of the learned trial Judge. There was undoubtedly material before him upon which he was justified in coming to the conclusion at which he arrived. As I am unable to disagree with that conclusion I think I am bound to reject the statement of the approver as having been induced by undue pressure ; that is to say, I cannot regard it as a voluntary statement made solely upon a promise of pardon.

So far as Mr. Puri's second argument is concerned, namely, that the conditional pardon granted to the approver is a bar to the present trial as he was not examined before the Sessions Judge I am of opinion that that argument cannot be sustained. The provision contained in S. (2), S. 337, Criminal P. C., that every person accepting a tender under that section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial if any, no doubt makes it essential that at the trial of the persons against whom the approver is testifying the approver must be examined as a witness. The decisions cited by the Public Prosecutor to the effect that the approver need not be examined in the Sessions Court were arrived at before the amendment to S. 337. Sub-S. (2) formerly ran as follows :

Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case.

and the authorities cited by Mr. Sawhney decided that it was a sufficient compliance with this provision if the approver were examined in the Court of the committing Magistrate. The amendment in the Act appears to have been introduced for the purpose of making it clear that the approver must be examined both in the Court of the committing Magistrate and in the subsequent trial. Whether non-compliance with this statutory provision renders trials of the persons against whom the approver's evidence is to be tendered illegal is a question which need not be decided here as those persons have been acquitted. But when it comes to the trial of the approver himself for the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered, I do not think that the fact that he has not been examined at the trial of the persons he has implicated is a breach on the part of the Crown of the conditions upon which the disclosure was made and the pardon granted. The approver has failed to comply with the condition on which a tender of pardon was made as soon as it is established that his disclosure is not a true and full one, and that it is not a true and full disclosure becomes apparent as soon as he is shown to have made a statement entirely inconsistent with the one upon the strength of which the pardon was granted. That situation was reached in the Court of the committing Magistrate when Ram Nath declared that his statement of the 15th June was entirely false and that he knew nothing about the affair in respect of which he purported to have given a true account. The conclusion of the learned trial Judge that the pardon cannot now be pleaded in bar is in my judgment sound.

Although I am of opinion that the confessional statement of the approver should be excluded from consideration in view of the circumstances under which it was obtained, yet assuming it may be admitted it undoubtedly requires corroboration by extrinsic evidence. The learned Public Prosecutor has not contended that such corroboration is not required and, indeed, I do not think that it could be so contended. As I have already said the statement in question is relied upon by the prosecution as an admission of guilt in respect of the crime for which the appellant has been tried. In other words it is a confession, and having been withdrawn before the committing Magistrate it must be regarded in the light of a retracted confession. It therefore becomes the duty of the Court to satisfy itself before acting upon them that the incriminating admissions of the appellant are true. This the prosecution has sought to establish by the evidence of Shamas Din, Allah Bakhsh, Muhammad Hussain, son of Karim Bakhsh, Muhammad Hussain, son of Karim Bakhsh, Muhammad Hussain son of Fazal Din, and Muhammad Taqi, P. Ws., 12, 13, 14, 15 and 24. The appellant in his statement first of all describes certain attacks made by himself and others upon certain Mahomedans who happened to be in the Machhi Hatta Bazar. (After discussing the evidence of prosecution witnesses the judgment continued).

On the whole I am not satisfied that the approver's story, even if it may be admitted in evidence, has received that corroboration in material particulars which as a rule of caution the Courts require in cases of retracted confessions. The circumstances under which that disclosure was obtained, added to the fact that it was retracted on the first moment that the appellant was brought before a Court, make it essential that the corroboration relied upon should be free from doubt which is far from being the case here. For the reasons which I have given I am of opinion that the guilt of the appellant has not been proved with that degree of certainty which the law requires, and I would accordingly accept his appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence.

Jai Lal, J.—I agree.

DALIP SINGH, J.

G. P. C. Holmes—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 1786 of 1927 Decided on 16th December 1927 by Sess. Judge, Ambala.

Penal Code, S. 225-B—Resistance — Knowledge of the accused that he is being arrested is essential.

An offence under S. 225-B is committed only when the resistance to arrest is intentional and that can only be when the person who makes the resistance knows that he is being or is about to be arrested. [P 324 C 2]

Report.—On Sunday, 22nd May 1927, at Kasauli, the accused, G. P. C. Holmes, came out of the church after the service and as the military church party were preparing to move off he took up a position in the centre of the road near the church gate and he began to preach in a loud voice and obstructed the departure of the military party. The District Magistrate ordered the arrest of the accused under S. 118, Cantonment Act. The European Inspector of Police, Mr, Phillips, being in plain clothes ordered Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh to make the arrest. The latter went up to the accused and took him by the hand and tried to remove him but he struggled. With the help of a head constable, Zakka Husain, and Sergeant Grundy he then removed the accused to a bench on the side of the road where he sat and continued shouting. Captain Hepburn then came up to the accused because he was delaying the marching off of the church party and succeeded in persuading the accused to go down a side road. Captain Hepburn accompanied him for some way and then advised him to go home. Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh then followed the accused and informed him that he had been arrested and ordered him to come to the police station. The accused then turned and went back with the Sub-Inspector to the police station without any further trouble. The Magistrate has held that during the episode at the church gate Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh arrested the accused by placing his hand upon him and saying in Urdu: "I arrest you;" and that by continuing to struggle after his arrest had thus been effected the accused committed an offence under S. 225-B, I. P. C.

An offence under S. 225-B, I. P. C., is committed only when the resistance to arrest is intentional; that can only be when the person who makes the resistance knows that he is being or is about to be arrested.

In the case under consideration the whole trend of the evidence strongly suggests that the accused had no understanding of the fact that he was being arrested, but supposed that he was merely being pushed aside to allow the troops to march away. That statement of the accused himself to the Magistrate was also to the effect that he had no knowledge of any arrest of himself at the church gate, but that he was arrested later on his way home and that he offered no resistance to that arrest.

The trend of the evidence referred to above is apparent from the following extracts :

Mr. Phillips, Inspector (P. W. No. 1) :

Kuldip Singh caught the accused by the arm and said : ' I arrest you '.

Sergeant Grundy, P. W. No. 2 :

I never heard the Sub-Inspector utter the words ' I arrest you. '

I and the Sub-Inspector caught hold of the accused and tried to remove him. He was still preaching when sitting on the bench. He was very much agitated. He was swinging his arms about and nearly knocked me over.

Zakka Hussain, Head Constable P. W. No. 3:

The Sub-Inspector took the accused by the hand and said : ' I arrest you. ' He said it in Urdu.

Sub-Inspector Kuldip Singh, P. W. No. 4.

" I placed my hand on the accused and said: " Holmes Sahib, I arrest you, ' but he took no notice owing to his excitement. His arrest was ordered after he started preaching. "

Captain Hepburn, D. W. No. 1 :

I should not say that the accused intentionally wished to resist the police as he was engrossed in his message to the public. The reason why I went up to the accused was because he was delaying the marching off of the church party and I thought I could persuade him to move out of the way. I think the accused was sitting on the bench on the side of the road when I went up to him. He continued to speak loudly. It was I who suggested that the accused be taken down the road. I had no idea that the accused had been lawfully apprehended, otherwise I should not have interfered. I was ten yards away when the police went up to Mr. Holmes in the first instance outside the church.

The accused in his revision petition had laid particular stress on the evidence of Captain Hepburn.

In my opinion, it is clear from the evidence that the accused was so engrossed in his preaching that he continued to preach even when forced on to a bench by the side of the road and that he was in a state of considerable excitement. In such a condition it is very probable that the words " I arrest you " spoken by the Sub-Inspector in Urdu made no impression on his attention and that he attributed the handling, which he received from the Police Officer to a desire to move him out of the way of the troops rather than to an attempt to arrest him.

It is recommended that the conviction of G. P. C. Holmes under S. 255-B, I. P. C., be quashed and that the fine be remitted. The fine has not yet been paid. The imprisonment in default of of payment has been undergone.

Order.—The case has been referred by the learned Sessions Judge. The accused was convicted under S. 225-B, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and in default to suffer one month's simple imprisonment.

For the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge I agree in thinking that the intention which constitutes the essence of the offence under S. 225-B has not been proved against the accused. He has already undergone the imprisonment in default. I accept the reference and quash the conviction and sentence.

TEK CHAND AND BHIDE, JJ.

Dial Singh—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Gurdwara Sri Akal Takht—Defendant—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 692 of 1927, Decided on 29th February 1928, from order of Sikh Gurdwara Tribunal, Lahore, D/- 16th December 1926.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 17—Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925), S. 12.

The provisions of O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., apply to the trial of cases before the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal. [P 327 C 1]

(b) Sikh Gurdwaras Act (1925), S. 2 (4) (iv) —The person holding the office on 1st January 1920 should have been holding it by hereditary right.

The definition of "hereditary office" in S. 2 (4) (iv) of the Act does not contemplate that the office should have devolved on the applicant himself according to hereditary right or by nomination, but it means that the office should have devolved on the person who was holding it on the first day of January 1920 (whether he be the applicant himself or his ancestor or guru) by hereditary right or by nomination. [P 328 C 1]

(c) Sikh Gurdwaras Act (1925), S. 2 (7)—Presumptive successor—Meaning explained.

Where the succession to office descends from father to son, the son is a "presumptive successor," even though the father had died on the date of application by the son, under S. 6.

In common legal parlance an "heir presumptive" or a "presumptive successor" is a person, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be his heir, but whose right to the inheritance may be defeated by the birth of a near relation or by some other contingency, but this is not the sense in which this expression is used in the Act. [P 328 C 2]

(d) Interpretation of Statutes—Word defined in an Act must be deemed to be used in the Act only in that sense.

When a word or phrase is defined as having a particular meaning in an enactment, it is that meaning alone which must be given to it in interpreting a section of the Act, unless there be anything repugnant to the context. [P 328 C 2]

(e) Interpretation of Statutes—Construction leading to anomaly should be accepted only if no other construction is possible.

A construction which leads to an anomaly can be given effect to only if the words of the statute are clear and unambiguous and admit of no other interpretation. [P 329 C 1]

Sardha Ram—for Appellant.

Bhagat Singh and Man Singh — for Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—This is an appeal under S. 34, Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925) preferred by one Dial Singh against the order of the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal rejecting his claim for compensation on the preliminary ground that he had no locus standi to apply under S. 6 of the Act.

The relevant facts are, that by Notification No. 892 dated 28th April 1926, the Punjab Government, acting under the provisions of sub-S. (2), S. 3, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, declared Akal Takht Sahib (Akal Bunga) as a "Sikh Gurdwara" and this notification was published in the Punjab Gazette of the 30th April 1926. On the 23rd July 1926, the appellant Dial Singh presented to the Punjab Government through the Secretary, Transferred Departments, a petition under S. 6 alleging that from the time of the Mughal Emperors his ancestors had held the office of manager and lambardar of Sri Akal Takht Sahib and had been enjoying the offerings and emoluments connected therewith, that the said office had descended in the family from father to son, that in 1920 he (applicant) was unlawfully and illegally removed from the office by the Akalis and the possession of the Gurdwara passed into the hands of the Shromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, that pecuniary loss to a very large extent (was caused) for which he was entitled to be compensated under S. 6 of the Act, and that he assessed the amount of compensation at Rs. 1,52,762-8-0.

On the application coming up for hearing before the Tribunal on the 16th December 1926, the appellant's counsel made a statement modifying the averments in the application in several material particulars. He stated that it was not the appellant but his father, Sunder Singh, who had been forcibly removed by the Akalis, that the alleged removal took place in 1922 and not in 1920 as stated in the application and that Sundar Singh had died on 7th April 1926. On these allegations counsel claimed that the applicant Dial Singh was entitled to apply for compensation under S. 6, being a "past hereditary office-holder" as well as a "presumptive successor." He later on took up the somewhat inconsistent position that his client could also apply as a "present hereditary office-holder." The respondent does not seem to have objected to the applicant modifying his allegations in the manner above mentioned, and the Tribunal proceeded to decide forthwith, whether on the case as put forward before it by counsel, the applicant had a locus standi to claim compensation under S. 6. The President and the two members were agreed that the applicant was neither a "past" nor a "present hereditary office-holder" as defined in the Act, but they differed on the question whether on the allegations made by him, he was "presumptive successor" to such office-holder. Mr. Kharak Singh held that as the applicant's father had died before the date on which the application was made, he was not "a presumptive successor," but was "an actual heir" and, therefore, not entitled to apply under S. 6. Mr. Munna Lal concurred with the learned colleague in this view and also expressed the opinion that the office, to which the applicant lay claim, could not be called an "hereditary office" within the meaning of that expression as used in the Act, because, if did not devolve upon him before the first day of January, 1920, when his father was himself admittedly alive.

The President, Coldstream, J. held, on the other hand, that assuming the statement of facts as given by the applicant's counsel on the 16th December 1926, to be correct, the applicant was a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder" and as such had a locus standi to apply under S. 6. He, therefore, recorded the opinion that the case should be proceeded with and the applicant's allegations enquired into on the merits. In accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Tribunal the application was, however, dismissed in limine.

At the hearing of the appeal Mr. Man Singh, on behalf of the respondent, raised the objection that the appellant should be confined to the claim as laid in his application of the 23rd July 1926, and that he should not be allowed to argue on the basis of the position taken up in the oral statement made before the Tribunal on the 16th December 1926. There is no doubt that the allegations in the application materially differed from those subsequently made, inasmuch as the appellant originally alleged that it was he himself who had been unlawfully removed by the Akalis in 1920, whereas later on he stated that it was his father who was so removed and that the removal took place in 1922 and not in 1920. It would have been much more satisfactory if, on the 16th December 1926, when the appellant wanted to modify the allegations in the original application, he had been directed to present an amended application or to file a better and further statement as provided for in the Civil Procedure Code. If the respondents objected to the proposed amendment their objections should have been noted on the record, and a formal decision given. It is clear, however, that though this was not done, the Tribunal allowed the case to proceed on the basis of the allegations made in the statements dated the 16th December 1926, and there is no doubt that the decision of the President and the members was given on those allegations. Under O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C., the provisions of which apply to the trial of cases before the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, it was competent to the Tribunal to allow a party to alter or amend his pleadings in such manner and on such terms as it thought just and this alteration or amendment could be made at any stage of the proceedings. By adopting the course it did, the Tribunal must be presumed to have acted under this Rule and to have allowed the amendment. The preliminary objection must, therefore, be overruled and the locus standi of the appellant determined on the allegations as put forward before the Tribunal on 17th December 1926.

Before us it was very fairly and properly conceded by Sardha Ram for the appellant that as his client never held the "office" himself, he could not claim as a "past" or a "present hereditary office-holder" as defined in the Act, and that he was unable to support the case on these grounds. He, however, strenuously argued that on the case as put forward before the Tribunal, the appellant is a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder" and as such entitled to apply for compensation under S. 6.

Now in order to bring his claim within S. 6 the applicant must allege and establish:

(a) That the Sri Akal Takht is a Sikh Gurdwara in respect of which a notification has been published under the provisions of sub-S. (2). S. 3, of the Act declaring it to be a Sikh Gurdwara;

(b) that in this Gurdwara there was an "hereditary office";

(c) that this office was held by his father Sundar Singh on the 1st January 1920, by hereditary right;

(d) that Sundar Singh was unlawfully removed from the office after the 1st day of January, 1920, and before the date of the publication of the notification mentioned in (a) above;

(e) that the applicant is the "presumptive successor" to Sundar Singh in the aforesaid office; and

(f) that he has suffered or will suffer pecuniary loss in consequence of Sri Akal Takht having been declared to be a Sikh Gurdwara.

There is no dispute as to (a), it being admitted that the required notification in respect of this Gurdwara has been properly issued by the Local Government. For the respondent it is also conceded that the allegations made by the applicant cover (c), (d) and (f). But it is contended that the office to which the applicant lays claim is not an "hereditary office" within the meaning of the Act and that on the date when he presented the application he was not a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder." It is accordingly argued that (b) and (e) are not satisfied and consequently the applicant had no locus standi to file the application. In support of the first of these contentions the respondent's learned counsel has relied upon the opinion recorded by Mr. Munna Lal that this office:

cannot be said to be a hereditary office because it did not devolve upon him (applicant) before 1st day of January 1920 when his father himself was admittedly alive.

In my opinion this contention is unsound and is based on a misreading of the definition of "hereditary office" in S. 2 (4) (iv) of the Act, according to which "hereditary office" is an office the succession to which before the first day of January 1920 devolved according to hereditary right or by nomination by the office holder for the time being.

This does not contemplate that the office should have devolved on the applicant himself according to hereditary right or by nomination, as aforesaid; but what it means is that the office should have devolved on the person who was holding it on the first day of January 1920 (whether he be the applicant himself or his ancestor or guru) by hereditary right or by nomination. The wording of Cl. (iv), S. 2 (4), is plain and explicit and cannot possibly bear the interpretation sought to be put on it by the respondent. The allegation on behalf of the plaintiff is that his ancestors held the office of a manager and a lambardar of Sri Akal Takht from the time of the Mughal Emperors, that succession has all along devolved in the male line from father to son and that, on the 1st day of January 1920, his father Sundar Singh was the holder of this office. If he succeeds in proving these allegations there can be no doubt whatever that Sundar Singh was an "hereditary office-holder" as defined in the Act.

The next question to be decided is whether the applicant is "presumptive successor" to Sundar Singh who was ex hypothesi a "past hereditary office holder." The expression "presumptive successor" is thus defined in S. 2 (7):

Presumptive successor, where the succession to the office devolves according to hereditary right, means the person next in succession to an hereditary office-holder, or, where the succession to the office devolves by nomination, made by the hereditary office-holder for the time being, means any chela so nominated before the first day of December 1924.

Now there can be no doubt that if the allegations of fact made by the applicant are correct, he is the person next in succession to his father Sundar Singh, and, but for the alleged unlawful dispossession of Sundar Singh and the declaration of Sri Akal Takht as a Sikh Gurdwara under the Act, he would have succeeded to the office on Sundar Singh's death. He is, therefore, clearly a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder," as defined in the Act and as such entitled to apply for compensation under S. 6. The majority of the Tribunal seem to think, that as on the date on which the application was made Sundar Singh had died and succession had opend out the applicant had stepped into the shoes of his deceased father, and could no longer be regarded as a "presumptive successor," but had become an "actual heir." This argument is, however, fallacious and loses sight of the fact that the expression "presumptive successor" has been given a peculiar meaning in the Act. It is no doubt true that in common legal parlance an "heir presumptive" or a "presumptive successor" is a person, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be his heir, but whose right to the inheritance may be defeated by the birth of a near relation or by some other contingency (Wharton's Law Lexicon). But as pointed out already this is not the sense in which this expression is used in the Act. When a word or phrase is defined as having a particular meaning in an enactment, it is that meaning and that meaning alone which must be given to it, in interpreting a section of the Act, unless there be anything repugnant in the context. No such repugnancy is pointed out in this case.

It is clear that the view taken by the majority of the Tribunal is supported neither by the plain and explicit phraseology used in S. 6, nor by the general scheme of the Act. Indeed, it seems to me that the interpretation of S. 6, which has commended itself to them will lead to startling results. According to that interpretation, if Sundar Singh had been alive on the date on which the application was made, he and his son (appellant) would both have had the concurrent right to apply for compensation, the former as a past "hereditary office-holder" and the latter as his "presumptive successor." But as Sundar Singh died in the interval between the date on which the Act came into force and that on which the notification under S. 3 (2) was issued, entitling him to apply for compensation, his death had the effect of not only putting an end to his own right to apply but also of depriving his son of the right which the latter formerly possessed to claim compensation. A construction, which leads to such an anomaly can be given effect to only if the words of the statute are clear and unamiguous and admit of no other interpretation. The members of the Tribunal do not state that this is so, and the respondent's learned counsel has not been able to urge any valid ground to support this construction.

I have no doubt that if the allegations of fact, made by the appellant be on enquiry found to be correct, he would be a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder" and as such entitled to be compensated under S 6. He must, therefore, be given an opportunity to substantiate these allegations. I would accordingly hold that the conclusion arrived at by the majority of the Tribunal (Messrs Kharak Singh and Munna Lal) cannot be sustained, and upholding the view taken by the President (Coldstream, J.), I would accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Tribunal and remit the case to it for decision in accordance with law. The Court-fee on appeal shall be refunded and other costs shall be costs in the cause.

Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 5—Decree-holder a woman possessed of no property—Execution cannot be stayed on that ground.

Order.—The plaintiff-respondent, Mt. Jan Bibi, has obtained a money decree against the defendant-appellant carrying future interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. She having applied for execution of the decree the appellant has moved this Court to stay execution on the ground that the decree-holder is a woman possessed of no property. This, however is no ground for stay of execution. The appellant's interests can be amply safeguarded by taking security for restitution from the respondent.

Accordingly I direct that Mt. Jan Bibi, plaintiff-respondent, shall execute the decree under appeal only after she has furnished security to the satisfaction of the lower Court for the refund of the deceretal amount together with interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem, in the event of the appeal being accepted.

There will be no order as to costs of today's hearing.

Judgment.—These six appeals (Nos. 108, 109, 255, 256 and 286 and 287 of 1927) are connected and will be disposed of together.

Six persons, viz., Gagi Santa Singh, Chanan Singh, Pala Singh, Bachan Singh and Mohan Singh, were prosecuted for two dacoities committed by them on the evening of the 7th October 1925. The trials were held separately, but the facts being connected, the learned Magistrate has disposed of the cases in one judgment. In each case, all the accused except Mohan Singh were convicted under Ss. 395/397, I. P. C, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years, the sentences to run concurrently. From this decision Santa Singh, Bachan Singh, Pala Singh, and Gagi have appealed in each case Bachan Singh and Pala Singh having filed a joint appeal there are thus six appeals before me for disposal.

The facts are briefly as follows :

(1) On the evening of the 7th October 1925, Harnam Singh of Mandi accompanied by Kundan Singh and Fauja Singh, when on the way near Purana Kahna he was set upon by five or six dacoits. He was belaboured with lathis and was robbed of his gun and a belt of cartridges. Harnam Singh went on to the village and lodged a report at the Thana. Harnam Singh's skull was injured and the injury appearing serious he was sent to the Mayo Hospital for treatment. He eventually died from the effects of the injury after some four months, but before the culprits could be traced. This will be referred to hereafter as the "gun" case.

(2) On the same evening one Bhag Singh of Ladhoke Bhullar was returning to his village on his mare from the same Mandi. He was followed at a short distance by two men Sadar Din and Khuda Bakhsh. When Bhag Singh came near the road to the village Sajjada, he was attacked by four men. He was dragged down from the mare and belaboured with lathis. When he raised an alarm one of the robbers fired a gun and hence none came to his rescue. The robbers eventually decamped with the mare, saddle and a blanket. Bhag Singh went to the thana to report the matter, but the munshi at the Thana wanted money and as Bhag Singh was not willing to bribe him he merely recorded a report about the mare having gone astray. This will be referred to hereafter as the "mare" case.

No trace of the culprits in the above two cases was forthcoming till Gagi, appellant, who was arrested on the 5th January 1926, in connexion with certain dacoities gave information relating to them. Gagi mentioned the present appellants and Mohan Singh as having been responsible for the two robberies committed on the 7th October 1925. The gun and the mare were found and after investigation six persons were prosecuted under Ss. 395/397, I. P. C., as stated already.

The commission of the robberies as alleged appears to have been established beyond any doubt. The report as regards the "gun" case was recorded immediately after the occurrence and Harnam Singh's story was supported by the injuries on his person. In the case of Bhag Singh no report as regards the robbery was taken down by the Police, but there seem no good reasons to doubt the genuineness of the story put forward by Bhag Singh. The report about the astraying of the mare seems rather suspicious for reasons given by the learned Magistrate. The identity of the mare has been established beyond any doubt. If the mare had really gone astray, it does not appear why a false story as to dacoity should have been concocted either by Gagi or the police. There was another case against Gagi and the appellants and the Police had no motive for setting up a false case at all.

The guilt of the appellants in these cases rests mainly on the evidence of certain eyewitnesses who are alleged to have seen them at the time of the commission of the offences and identified them after their arrest and in the case of Pala Singh also on a retracted "confession." I shall first deal with the cases of Santa Singh, Bachan Singh and Gagi, who have not made any confession.

Santa Singh.—In the "gun" case, Harnam Singh died before the culprits were traced as already mentioned. The only two persons who were on the spot and might have been expected to identify the assailants were the companions of Harnam Singh, Fauja Singh and Kundan Singh. Neither of these witnesses was able to identify Santa Singh. Fauja Singh is said to have identified Santa Singh at an identification parade, but he has definitely stated in Court that he could not identify him and hence the previous identification, if any, is of no assistance. The only other evidence to which counsel for the Crown drew my attention was the retracted confessions of Pala Singh and Chanan Singh co-accused. I shall discuss the admissibility and value of these confessions presently, but assuming that the confessions are genuine and admissible, it seems clear that the mere retracted confession of a co-accused cannot be sufficient to sustain the convictions of Santa Singh. Santa Singh's conviction in the "gun" case cannot, therefore, be upheld : Jawan v. Emperor (1).

In the "mare" case, Bhag Singh (P.W. No. 7), identified Santa Singh as one of the dacoits who struck him with lathis. Bhag Singh had opportunity of seeing him at close quarters and has no motive for implicating him falsely. The name of Santa Singh was disclosed by Gagi and it has not been shown that Gagi or any other person had any motive for implicating Santa Singh. In fact he has offered no explanation of the evidence against him. (His Lordship then discussed the cases against Bachan Singh and Gagi and proceeded.)

Pala Singh.—Lastly, I come to the case of Pala Singh. This appellant was not identified by anyone in the "gun" case. Not only this, but Bhag Singh has definitely stated that he did not see Pala Singh amongst his assailants. In the "mare" case also, there is no evidence as regards his identification. The learned Magistrate has solely relied upon the retracted confession of Pala Singh, and it is, therefore, necessary to examine it carefully.

There is no doubt that it is not illegal to base a conviction even on the retracted confession of an accused person ; but as pointed out in Jawan v. Emperor (1) :

> Experience and common-sense show that, in the absence of corroboration in material particulars, it is not safe to convict on a confession unless, from the peculiar circumstances in which it was made and judging from the reasons, alleged or apparent of the retraction, there remains a high degree of certainty that the confession, notwithstanding its having been resiled from, is genuine.

Now, looking at the facts of this case, I do not think, this is one of those exceptional cases, wherein a conviction may be justifiable even on a retracted confession. Pala Singh, accused, is aged only about twenty. In the story put forward by him, he has denied having taken any active part in the commission of the offence. Bhag Singh denies in the "mare" case that he was amongst the persons who attacked him. He withdrew the confession not long after it was made. The learned Magistrate has held that the confession was not withdrawn at the earliest possible opportunity, but I am not satisfied on this point. The confession was made on the 12th March 1927, but (according to the Magistrate) was not retracted in Court till the 6th October 1926, when the statements of the accused were recorded. But the learned Magistrate concedes that from the trend of the prosecution witnesses it was apparent that the confessions were going to be withdrawn. There are actually two applications dated 3rd June 1926, retracting the confession on the record, but the learned Magistrate considers that these were smuggled in some time and his order "shamil misl howe" thereon was obtained thereon somehow without his knowledge. But when it is apparent from the cross-examination of the Magistrate who took down the confession on 12th March 1926, that the confessions were going to be withdrawn, I do not see why it should be considered improbable that the applications were put in about that time. The papers on a judicial record are placed in chronological order and entered in the index, and I am not at all convinced that these applications were antedated and "smuggled" at a later date. The accused were not questioned till the 6th October 1926, and had, therefore, no other opportunity of retracting the confessions.

The circumstances of the retracted confession are, therefore, by no means so exceptionally free from suspicion as to justify a conviction based upon that confession alone.

For reasons given above I accept the appeals of Bachan Singh and Pala Singh and acquit them in both the cases. I accept the appeal of Santa Singh in the "gun" case (Criminal Appeal No. 256 of 1927) and acquit him.

As regards the "mare" case, I have found that there is sufficient evidence to justify the convictions of Santa Singh and Gagi, but the convictions should have been under S. 395, I. P. C., as, according to Bhag Singh's own statement, only four persons attacked him. I accordingly set aside the order of the learned Magistrate and alter the convictions of Santa Singh and Gagi in the "mare" case to those under S. 394, I. P.C. I sentence Gagi, who appears to have played a prominent part, to seven years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement under S. 394, I. P. C. I sentence Santa Singh to four years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement under the same section.

In the "gun" case, I alter Gagi's conviction to one under S. 414, I. P. C., and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for three years including three months' solitary confinement. The sentences of Gagi in the two cases will run concurrently.

Judgment.—A complaint against the petitioner for erecting a small portion of their new building on public land was preferred by the Small Towns Committee of Kahror. It was under S. 447, I. P. C. It was dismissed and the petitioners were acquitted under the provisions of S. 247, Criminal P. C. On the same facts the Committee decided to institute a fresh complaint but to change the section to 291 I. P. C. The petitioners have been sentenced after trial on the new complaint to Rs. 10 fine each under S. 38, Small Towns Act, the maximum penalty under that section being Rs. 20. It is clear that a conviction could have been had under S. 38, Small Towns Act, on the first complaint. That being so, the petitioners could not be tried again, as laid down in S. 403, Criminal P. C. I accept the petition, set aside the convictions of the petitioners, and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Faqir Chand—for Petitioners.

Mulkh Raj for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioners have been convicted under S. 225-B, I. P. C., for having offered illegal obstruction to their apprehension by certain tahsil peons in execution of warrants issued for their arrest and have been sentenced each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two weeks and pay a fine of Rs. 50.

The facts found by the lower Courts are as follows : In May 1924, the District Board, Jullundur, with the permission of the Local Government, imposed a haisiyat tax on the total annual income derived by all persons carrying on any trade or following any profession or calling within that district. Notification No 3162 was issued on 30th April 1924, and will be found printed at p. 280 and 281 of Part I-A of the Government Gazette, Punjab, published on 2nd May 1924. The assessment was not fixed at a flat rate for a particular profession, calling or trade, but to vary according to the income of each individual assessee. Three of these assessees, Dasondhi, Dheru and Basanta, goldsmiths of village Uchha, refused to pay the tax on demand and under S. 70, District Boards Act, steps were taken to recover it as if it were arrears of land revenue. Accordingly, on 14th August 1926, the Tahsildar, Jullundur, issued warrants under S. 69, Punjab Revenue Act, for the arrest of the defaulters. Five tahsil peons accompanied by a number of zaildars and safedposhes went to the village to effect the arrest. The execution of the warrants was, however, obstructed by the persons named in the warrants and their friends and relations all of whom offered resistance to the peons, with the result that the persons apprehended escaped. Accordingly they and their companions who had rescued them were prosecuted under S. 225-B, I. P. C and convicted as described above. Their appeal having been dismissed they have come up on revision to this Court.

The first point urged on their behalf is that the haisiyat tax for the nonpayment of which the warrants for the arrest of the assessees had been issued, had been illegally imposed by the District Board, Jullundur. It was argued that the tax was in substance a tax on income and, as such, it could not, under S. 30, District Boards Act, be imposed by a local body without the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, which had not been obtained in this case. It is conceded for the Crown that the District Board had imposed the tax with the sanction of the Local Government only. There is, therefore, no doubt that the tax imposed under the notification aforesaid was ultra vires. The question has been recently considered by a Division Bench of this Court (Addison and Coldstream, JJ.) in District Board, Sialkot v. Sultan Muhammad Khan (1), decided on 31st October 1927, where the legality of a similar tax imposed by the District Board, Sialkot, was involved. The learned Judges, in an exhaustive judgment held that the haisiyat tax imposed in Sialkot District under a notification the terms of which were identical with those of the notification now before me, was in the nature of a tax on income and could only be imposed with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council and as this had not been done, the assessees were not legally liable to pay it. Following that authority I hold that the action of the District Board, Jullundur, in assessing haisiyat tax on Dasondhi, Dhera and Basanta, petitioners was illegal and ultra vires and they were not legally liable to pay it. It follows, therefore, that the warrant under which it was sought to apprehend these petitioners had not been legally issued and the act of the petitioners in offering resistance to the execution of such warrants did not constitute an offence under S. 225-B. Under that section resistance or obstruction to the apprehension of a person is made punishable only if the apprehension was "lawful" but where (as here) the imposition of the tax for the nonpayment of which the warrants were issued was itself illegal and ultra vires the resistance to their execution cannot be punishable.

Various other defects in the warrants were pointed out by the learned counsel for the petitioners, but I think it necessary to refer only to one of these, namely, that the warrants in this case did not bear the seal of the Court issuing them. Under S. 75, Criminal P C., every warrant must bear the seal of the Court and there is authority for holding that the omission of the seal on a warrant renders it void and a person offering resistance to apprehension on such a warrant does not commit an offence under S. 225-B, I. P. C. Reference may in this connexion be made to Mahajan Sheikh v. Emperor (2) and Alter Caufman v. Government of Bombay (3) and to the decision In re Phipps (4), on which the rulings were based. For this reason also I hold that the petitioners were not guilty under S. 225-B, I. P. C.

Accordingly I accept the petition for revision set aside the conviction and direct that the petitioners be acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 255 of 1927, Decided on 13th January 1928, for transfer of the case from 1st Class Magistrate, Rohtak.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Magistrate conducting a trial on a gazetted public holiday in compliance with the request of a police officer constitutes sufficient ground for the case being transferred.

It is highly objectionable on the part of the Magistrate to commence the trial on a gazetted public holiday and to examine all the prosecution witnesses on a public holiday. And when he does so in compliance with the request of a police officer, it is sufficient to create an impression in the mind of the accused that they will not have a fair and impartial trial at his hands and it is a fit ground for transfer. [P 334 C 2]

D. C. Ralli—for Petitioner.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for the transfer of a case which is now pending in the Court of Sardar Dilbagh Singh, Magistrate, 1st Class, at Rohtak.

As appears from the record of the case, the petitioners are charged with an offence punishable under S. 304, I. P. C. They were produced before the said Magistrate for the first time on 4th October 1927, which was a public holiday. He proceeded to record evidence because a police officer asked him to do so. After examining one witness he adjourned the case to the next day i.e., the 5th October, which was also a public holiday being the Dashera day and he examined the remaining witnesses on that day.

It was highly objectionable on the par of the Magistrate to commence the tria on a gazetted public holiday and to examine all the prosecution witnesses on a public holiday. As he did so in compliance with the request of a police officer it was sufficient to create an impression in the mind of the accused that they would not have a fair and impartial trial at his hands.

I, therefore, accept this application and direct the District Magistrate to send the case to some other Magistrate subordinate to him who may be competent to try it.

Civil Revn. Petn, No. 411 of 1927, Decided on 10th January 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 2nd April 1927.

Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 77—Suit for possession against co-tenant — Civil Court has jurisdiction.

A suit for possession by one of the occupancy tenants against another occupancy tenant is cognizable by civil Court though the occupancy tenant in question is one of the landlords. [P 335 C 1]

Fakir Chand—for Petitioners.

Sundar Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs and one Lalu were joint occupancy tenants of land. According to the plaint the tenancy was partitioned between them and an area of 251 kanals 3 marlas was allotted to the plaintiffs. Though the plaintiffs claim to have been in possession of this area yet the khata entry continued to show joint possession of all the occupancy tenants in the revenue records. Lalu died and was succeeded as heir by one Lal Chand, who is also one of the proprietors of the land. Lal Chand's name was mutated in the revenue records in place of Lalu's the occupancy holding still being shown to be possessed jointly. The plaintiffs' case is that this Lal Chand has taken possession of the area allotted to them in his capacity of occupancy tenant.

They have, therefore, sued in the civil Court for a decree against him for possession of the land in question, and in the alternative they have prayed that, if this cannot be granted, they should be given their proper share of the whole khata. The two Courts below have held that this is a case of dispossession of an occupancy tenant by a landlord and that the suit is, therefore, cognizable by the revenue Courts. Against this finding this revision petition has been preferred,

It is quite clear that the case of the plaintiffs is that Lal Chand, one of the occupancy tenants has dispossessed the plaintiffs, who are the other occupancy tenants. It is not their case that they have been dispossessed by the landlords though the occupancy tenant in question is one of the landlords. It is obvious that he does not represent the body of landlords. The suit is against him alone in his capacity of a joint occupancy tenant in the same khata with the plaintiffs. As such it is clearly cognizable by the civil Courts.

In the circumstances I accept the revision, set aside the order of the Courts below and direct the Subordinate Judge, 4th Class, to receive the plaint and proceed with the suit in accordance with law.

Shamair Chand—for Appellant.

Mackay for the Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—Chhajju, son of Mangu, a Teli of Chak No. 256 G. B. has been found guilty of the murder of one Mali of the same village and, under S. 302, I. P. C., has been sentenced to death. He has appealed through Mr. Shamair Chand and the case is also before the Court for orders as to the confirmation or otherwise of the death penalty.

The facts of the case are given in great detail in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and need only be briefly recapitulated here. It is said that one Dulla had a sister named Mt. Jaina who was married to a man named Buta who some twenty-five years ago migrated to Australia and has not been heard of for several years. Latterly Mali, the deceased, who lived in this village, and who had a wife and some five children, began to pay attentions to Mt. Jaina, his wife having become blind. Dulla objected to the friendship between Mt. Jaina and Mali and removed the former to Haripur in the Jullundur District where her father-in-law lived. Mali, however, followed her there and took up his abode at Haripur for some time. About two years before this occurrence, however, he took Mt. Jaina to Chak Makhdum, a village some two kos from Chak No. 256 G. B. and made her his wife. At the same time he used to pay visits to his former hak No. 256 G. B. In addition to cultivation he plied a cart for hire. On the night of 13th February 1927, he was driving his cart from Chak No. 256 G. B. to Toba Tek Singh. Behind him another cart was being driven by Wir Din and Rahmat Ullah. After going a few miles, the night being a moonlit one, two men suddenly appeared, and, it is said, attacked Mali. One of these men was armed with hatchet and the other with a dang. Wir Din and Rahmat Ullah at first are said to have attempted to assist but, on being threatened, they ran away. Wir Din returned to the village and informed Nizam Din, brother of Mali, that the latter had been attacked by two men of whom he had identified Dulla, brother of Jaina, as one, and as the one armed with a hatchet, and, when they had collected the lambardar Abdullah and a party of other men, they proceeded to the spot. There, according to Abdullah and Nizam Din, they found Mali lying on the road by the side of his cart. Nothing in the cart had been taken away, and it is therefore, clear that robbery was not the motive of the attack. After a little time Nizam Din was sent to make a report at the police station, which is some five or six miles away, and in this report Nizam Din clearly mentioned the fact that he had been told by Wir Din that he (Wir Din) had recognized Dulla alone. It is also stated in the first report that Wir Din and Rahmat Ullah, cartmen, had stated that Dulla had threatened them that if any one of them would move a pace forward his death would be certain. For this reason they did not go near him. From this it is apparent that Rahmat Ullah was present at the spot when Abdullah and Nizam Din, etc., arrived and was questioned by them. When the police arrived at the scene they found the appellant Chhajju in the custody of the lambardar and others and it then transpired that Rahmat Ullah claimed to have identified not only Dulla but Chhajju as well, Chhajju being the man who attacked Mali, armed with a dang.

The police investigation proceeded, and 16th February 1927, Chhajju was sent to the doctor for examination as he was said to have received injuries. The usual statement of injuries prepared by the police is dated 14th February 1927, but the Sub-Inspector admits that no mention of any injuries or of the preparation of this statement of injuries was made in the zimni or police diary of the 14th February. Nor is there any mention of it on the 15th February, and it is only on the 16th February that the police diary shows that Chhajju was sent for examination by the doctor on account of his injuries. This omission is said to have occurred owing to the large amount of work which the Sub-Inspector had to do. During the enquiry Chhajju also is said to have pointed out a heap of tury belonging to some zamindar and from it were recovered a hatchet and a dang which turned out to be bloodstained. Gennu tracker was also examined and says that he compared the tracks and found one of the tracks coincided with those of the aplant. Dulla was absconding, and, as Wir Din and Rahmat Ullah had mentioned the fact that there was a third man lurking in the bushes on the wayside when the attack on Mali was made and as the tracker had discovered the tracks of three persons and claimed to identify one of those tracks as being those of a man named Kaka, Chhajju and Kaka were sent up for the murder of Mali. Kaka was acquitted but Chhajju was convicted and sentenced as already stated.

Now, admittedly the case against Chhajju rests mainly on the testimony of Rahmat Ullah, supported by the fact that he is said to have produced a hatchet and a dang and that he had injuries on his person. So far as the injuries are concerned, a reference to the medical evidence, to my mind, clearly shows that they were not received as suggested or alleged by the prosecution. The fact the appellant was not sent for medical examination till the 16th February lends considerable support to his assertion that he received these injuries in the course of the investigation when efforts were being made to force him to disclose the whereabouts of Dulla in whose ihata the appellant resides and has resided for some two years or more.

So far as motive is concerned: it is true that in 1925 Mali lodged a complaint under S. 107, Criminal P. C., asking the Court to take security from Dulla and three other persons including the appellant. That complaint was, however, allowed to be dismissed in default. Whatever motive there may have been on the part of Dulla, the motive so far as the appellant is concerned, is a very meagre one indeed.

Turning next to the question of discovery by him or through his instrumentality of the hatchet and the dang: the first point to be noticed is that the tury heap was situated in the field of a zamindar whose name has not been given Obviously the place was one accessible to anybody, and it is quite possible that Chhajju saw Dulla or some other person placing these articles there and on being pressed by the police told them so. The fact that he was instrumental in obtaining the discovery of these articles is not, in my opinion, sufficient in this case, to prove him guilty of being concerned in this murder. The real case against him rests on the testimony of Rahmat Ullah and, after due consideration, I am of opinion that this witness's evidence as against this appellant cannot be accepted. He accounts for his silence between the attack and the departure of Nizam Din to the police station by saying that, after he had been threatened by Dulla and Chhajju, he ran away towards the village, that on the way he fell into a water-course and got wet, with the result that he became very benumbed through cold, and although he has a reputation in the village, and has had it since his childhood, of being a gappi or a person addicted to telling stories and somewhat of a gossip and a liar, he asked us to believe that it was not until Nizam Din had gone away and he was on his way back with the lambardar from the scene of the occurrence to the village that the lambardar mentioned to him that Dulla's name was to be given in the report and that he then said that he had also recognized Chhajju I cannot believe that, had Rahmat Ullah recognized Chhajju, he would not have stated that fact to the lambardar and others on the spot prior to the departure of Nizam Din for the thana. Abdullah and Nizam Din were well aware from Wir Din's statement that Rahmat Ullah was an eye witness and they naturally would have questioned him. The fact that Nizam Din stated in the first information report that both Vir Din and Rahmat Ullah had named Dulla shows that Rahmat Ullah had, as a matter of fact, been questioned by the people before Nizam Din went to make a report.

In these circumstances I am of opinion that the case against the appellant cannot stand. The evidence of Rahmat Ullah was not accepted by two of the four assessors and I agree with them in their estimate of this witness's testimony. I would, therefore, accept the appeal, set asid the conviction and sentence and direct the release of Chhajju forthwith

Central Board and Local Committee, Sri Darbar Saheb, Amritsar—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 910 of 1927, Decided on 30th March 1928, from order of Gurdwara Tribunal, Lahore, D/- 17th January 1927.

* (a) Sikh Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925), S. 6—Tribunal can enquire as to custom of succession set up.

There is nothing in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act or in any other Statute to support the view that in determining whether a claimant to compensation under S. 6 is the presumptive successor to a hereditary office-holder the Tribunal is not "expected by law" to make an enquiry into a special custom under which he claims to succeed On the other hand if such a custom is set up by one party and denied by the other, it is the duty of the Tribunal to enquire into its existence and validity and record its findings thereon. [P 339 C 1]

* (b) Gurdwaras Act (8 of 1925), S. 2 (4) (iv) —Prevailing rule of descent should be determined in each case.

The words "devolved by hereditary right" in S. 2 (4) iv) have not been assigned any special meaning and must, therefore, be interpreted literally as signifying "descended and capable of descending by inheritance from an ancestor to an heir at-law." The section does not prescribe any particular rule of inheritance and it is a matter for determination in each case as to what the prevailing rule of descen is. [P 339 C 1]

(c) Sikh Gurdwaras Act (1925), S. 2 (7)—Succession opening before application—Applicant is not debarred from applying under S. 6.

The expression "presumptive successor" has been given a peculiar meaning in the Act and the mere fact that succession had actually opened out before the application was made by the applicant does not deprive him of his right to apply for compensation under S. 6: A I R. 1928 Lah. 325, Foll. [P 339 C 2]

 (d) Sikh Gurdwaras Act (192), S. 6—Office holder continuing in office till death—Successor prevented from succeeding—S. 6 does not apply.

Section 6 does not and cannot cover the case in which the office holder continued in office till his death, and immediately after his death but before the person next in succession could actually get himself installed, the S. G. P. C. or some other such body intervened and unlawfully prevented him from succeeding. That section is so worded as to make unlawful removal of office holder a conditio precedent for the maintainability of an application for compensation. [P 340 C 1; 2]

(e) Interpretation of Statutes—Courts cannot supply omission in an Act.

Courts cannot aid the legislature's defective phrasing of the Act; they cannot add and amend, and by construction make up the deficiencies which are left there. Whether an omission in an Act flowed from forgetfulness of the draftsman or was intentional is no concern of the Courts and it is well-settled that a casus omissus cannot be supplied by a Court of Law for that would be to make laws: Crawford v. Spooner, (6 Moor. P. C. 1), Foll. [P 340 C 2]

(f) Interpretation of Statutes—Debates in Council cannot be referred to.

Courts, while interpreting an Act, cannot seek the assistance of the debates in the Legislative Council or the report of the Select Committee: Rex v. West Riding of Yorkshire County Council, (1906) 2 K. B. 676 (716) Ref. [P 340 C 2]

Nihal Singh—for Appellant.

Man Singh and Bhagat Singh—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—On 23rd July 1926, the appellant Gurdial Singh presented to the Local Government through the Secretary, Transferred Departments, a petition claiming compensation under S. 6, Sikh Gurdwaras Act. In the petition it was alleged that the office of Granthi of the Sri Darbar Sahib (Golden Temple), at Amritsar had been held by hereditary right by members of the applicant's family for several generations, succession being governed by a special custom according to which the office descended on the eldest adult male member of the family living at the time. It was stated that the last holder of the office was the applicant's elder brother Bhai Gurbachan Singh, who died in May 1923, leaving him surviving two minor sons and a younger brother (applicant). As the applicant was at the time the only adult male member in the family he was the "legal heir" to the gaddi. But the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, which had taken over the management of the Sri Darbar Sahib, appointed an outsider to the office and installed him as the Granthi in derogation of the old custom and the claims of the applicant. He, therefore, claimed to be the "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office holder" and as such applied for compensation under S. 6 of the Act.

This application was in due course forwarded to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal for disposal in accordance with the provisions of the Act. The Tribunal after examining the applicant has dismissed the application in limine. One of the Members Rai Bahadur Munna Lal was of opinion that the applicant had no locus standi to apply under S. 6, inasmuch as (i) he claimed to succeed to his deceased elder brother under a special custom "into which this Tribunal is not expected by law to make an enquiry," and (ii) on his own showing, the applicant was neither an "office holder" nor a "presumptive successor." The other Member, Sardar Kharak Singh, agreed in dismissing the application, and in doing so thus expressed himself :

> He (applicant) is neither a presumptive successor as the succession has actually opened out in the year 1923, when his brother died and he is actual successor nor he is an office-holder because he did not participate in the public worship in the management of rituals or ceremonies observed therein.

The President Coldstream, J., was > not satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt that the intention of S. 6 was to exclude a presumptive successor whose predecessor was not removed from but died in an office.

He, however, did not think it necessary to pursue the matter further as the "case was decided by the orders of his colleagues." The application was accordingly dismissed, and against the order of dismissal Gurdial Singh has preferred an appeal to this Court.

It may be mentioned at the outset, that as in the application it was not specifically stated that the S. G. P. C. had "unlawfully removed" the last office-holder, the Tribunal examined the applicant on 17th January 1927, when he made contradictory statements on the point. He, however, ultimately admitted that Gurbachan Singh had not been unlawfully removed from his office but had continued to hold it till he died in 1923, and that after Gurbachan Singh's death, but before the applicant could get himself installed on the Gaddi the S. G. P. C. intervened him from succeeding to the office. This position has been adhered to before us by the applicant's learned counsel, who has conceded that in this case there has been no unlawful removal of an "office-holder," but that what has really happened is that the S. G. P. C. has unlawfully prevented the rightful heir from succeeding to a "hereditary office" after the death of the last incumbent.

On appeal three points have been argued before us by Mr. Nihal Singh. It has been contended :

(a) that it is incorrect to hold that in order to determine the applicant's right to succeed by hereditary right to his brother in the office of Granthi, the Tribunal is not "expected by law" to make an enquiry into the alleged custom by which he claims to succeed ;

(b) that the majority of the Tribunal are in error in rejecting the application on the ground that on his own showing the applicant is not a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder" ; and

(c) that the view which the learned President was inclined to take that under S. 6 compensation can be claimed by a "presumptive successor" whose predecessor was not removed from, but who died in office, was correct.

He has accordingly argued that the application ought not to have been dismissed without enquiry into the allegations of fact made by the applicant.

After hearing counsel for the respondent at length, I am of opinion that contentions (a) and (b) are wellfounded and must prevail. I can find nothing in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act or in any other statute to support the view that in determining whether a claimant to compensation under S. 6 is the presumptive successor to an hereditary office-holder the tribunal is not "expected by law" to make an enquiry into a special custom under which he claims to succeed. On the other hand, it seems to me that if such a custom is set up by one party and denied by the other, it is the duty of the tribunal to enquire into its existence and validity and record its findings thereon. In Cl. 4 (iv), S. 2 of the Act "hereditary office" and "hereditary office-holder" are defined as follows:

Hereditary office means an office the succession to which before "the first day of January 1920 devolved according to hereditary right or by nomination by the office-holder for the time being; and hereditary office-holder means the holder of an hereditary office."

In this clause the words "devolved by hereditary right" have not been assigned any special meaning and must therefore, be interpreted lit rally as signifying descended and capable of descending by inheritance from an ancestor to an heir-at-law.

It will be seen that the section does not prescribe any particular rule of inheritance and it is a matter for determination in each case as to what the prevailing rule of descent is. To take a few examples, in some Gurdwaras the rule of primogeniture may be recognized; in others succession may be according to the personal law. To some offices females may be eligible to succeed, while they may be excluded from others. In some shrines minority might be a bar to succession, the adult male member of the family being preferred as the fittest person to perform the religious duties pertaining to the office; in others the minor heir may be permitted to succeed and have the duties performed through a duly qualified Sarbrah. In all such cases succession devolves by hereditary right, though the mode of hereditary descent is different in each case. The legislature has purposely refrained from prescribing a particular mode of descent, the only limitation which it has laid down being that the person who held the office on the 1st June 1920 should not have been the first incumbent of the office, but should have succeeded to the office "by hereditary right or by nomination by the holder for the time being," It is, therefore, clear that in cases in which special custom, regulating the rule of succession to an "office" is set up by the claimant and it is alleged that succession had devolved according to that custom on the person who held it on 1st January 1920, and the opposite party doubts the existence of such custom, the tribunal is bound to frame an issue on the point and try it in the ordinary way.

Coming now to point (b) there can be no doubt that if the allegations of fact made by the appellant are established, he, being ex-hypothesi the next in succession to Gurbachan Singh, would certainly be a "presumptive successor" to a "past hereditary office-holder," as defined in the Act. The question has been recently discussed at length in Dial Singh v. Gurdwara Sri Akal Takht Amritsar (1), in which case also the same view had been taken by the majority of the tribunal, but was dissented from by this Bench. As pointed out in that judgment "presumptive successor" has been given a particular meaning in the Act (vide Cl. 7, S. 2), and the mere fact that succession had actually opened out before the application was made by the applicant does not deprive him of his right to apply for compensation under S. 6.

The decision of the majority of the tribunal is, therefore, erroneous on the grounds on which it proceeds, but I do not think it proper to remand the case for decision of the other points, as I am of opinion that the petition must fail on another ground which is not relied upon by either of the members of the tribunal but which is mentioned in the order of the President (Coldstream, J.). Assuming that the appellant succeeds in establishing the facts necessary to make him the "presumptive successor" of a "hereditary past office-holder" of the Gurdwara in question he can be allowed compensation under S. 6 only, if he further alleges and proves that the office-holder of whom he is the presumptive successor had been "unlawfully removed" from the office after the first day of January 1920, and before the date of the publication of the notification and that he has suffered or will suffer pecuniary loss in consequence of the Gurdwara having been declared to be Sikh Gurdwara.

Now, as stated above, the plaintiff's case is that the last office-holder, Gurbachan Singh, was not unlawfully removed from but died in office, and what really happened was that the person next in succession was unlawfully prevented by the S. G. P. C. from succeeding to him. The learned President (Coldstream, J.) was inclined to hold that S. 6 of the Act would cover the case of such a person. But, with all deference, I find myself unable to agree. S. 6 runs as follows:

> Any past or present hereditary office-holder of a Gurdwara in respect of which a notification has been published under the provisions of Sub-S. (2), S. 3 declaring it to be a Sikh Gurudwara or a presumptive successor of such office-holder may forward to the Local Government, through the Secretary to Government, Transferred Departments, so as to reach the Secretary within 90 days from the date of the publication of such notification, a petition claiming to be awarded compensation on the grounds that such office-holder has been unlawfully removed from his office after the first day of January 1920 and before the date of the publication of the notification, and that such office-holder or his presumptive successor has suffered or will suffer pecuniary loss in consequence of the Gurdwara having been declared to be a Sikh Gurdwara.

It will be seen that one of the grounds, which the applicant, who is the presumptive successor of a past or present office-holder, must establish in order to succeed in his claim under this section is that such office holder should have been unlawfully removed from the office after the first day of January 1920, and before the date of the publication of the notification. The section does not and cannot cover the case in which the office holder continued in office till his death, and immediately after his death but before the person next-in succession could actually get himself installed, the S. G. P. C. or some other such body intervened and unlawfully prevented him from succeeding. It is, no doubt, highly anamalous that in a case in which the last office-holder had been unlawfully removed from office one day before his death, the person next-in succession to him should have a valid claim for compensation, but where, as here, the trespasser steps into office immediately after his death and before the successor could have possibly obtained charge of the office, his claim should be barred. But in view of the clear and unambiguous phraseology used by the legislature in S. 6, there seems to be no help for this conclusion. That section is so worded as to make unlawful removal of office-holder a condition precedent for the maintainability of an application for compensation, and we have to construe the statute as we find it and not as it ought to have been.

Mr Nihal Singh has been constrained to admit that if S. 6 is literally interpreted, his client's case does not fall within its purview. But he points out that there seems to be no good reason for the legislature making any distinction between unlawful removal of the last male-holder and unlawful prevention of his successor from succeeding immediately after his death and that the omission must have been unintentional. He urges, therefore, that we should take notice of this fact and so interpret the Act as to avoid an obvious hardship. I am, however, unable to accept this contention, for even if it is a casus omissus and does, in fact, lead to great hardship, we shall be going beyond our legitimate functions, if we were to appropriate to ourselves the duty of supplying the deficiencies of the legislature. As laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Crawford v. Spooner (2).

> We cannot aid the legislature's defective phrasing of the Act; we cannot add and amend, and by construction make up the deficiencies which are left there.

Whether the omission flowed from forgetfulness of the draftsman or was intentional is no concern of the Courts and it is well-settled that a casus omissus cannot be supplied by a Court of Law for that would be to make laws.

Mr Nihal Singh, further, asked us to refer to the debates in the Punjab Legislative Council the report of the Select Committee and to a speech made by His Excellency the Governor of the Punjab in the Council on 10th November 1924, where (it was alleged), the principles on which the Gurdwara legislation was to proceed had been outlined, and assurances given that provision would be made to compensate a person in the position of the claimant. In interpreting the

(2) [1864] 6 Moo. P. C. 1 (9).

Act we, cannot, however, seek any assistance from these proceedings or speeches. The law on this point is not open to any doubt and I do not think it necessary to discuss the question at any length It will be sufficient to refer to the remarks of Farwell, J, in Rex v. West Riding of Yorkshire County Council (3).

It was suggested that the view taken by us of the Act is not in accordance with the intention of the House of Commons or with public understanding of the effect of the Act; and reference was attempted to be made to the debates; but we have only to deal with the construction of the Act as printed and published. That is the final word of the legislature as a whole, and the antecedent debates and subsequent statements of opinion or belief are not admissible.

Considerations such as these cannot possibly prevail with Courts, and as pointed out at pages 10 and 11 of Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes (Sixth Edition):

Nothing could be more dangerous than to make such considerations the ground for construing an enactment that is unambiguous in itself. To depart from the meaning on account of such views, is, in truth, not to construe the Act, but to alter it But the business of the interpreter is not to improve the statute; it is, to expound it. The question for him is not what the legislature meant, but what its language means; i. e., what the Act has said that it means. To give a construction contrary to, or different from that which the words import or can possibly import, is not to interpret law, but to make it, and Judges are to remember that their office is jus dicere, not jus dare.

The result may be unfortunate and may, in some cases, lead to obvious hardship, but the remedy of the aggrieved person is not to appeal to the Courts of Justice, but to approach the legislature to amend the Act.

The result is that while the decision of the majority of the Tribunal cannot be sustained on the grounds (a) and (b) on which it proceeds, the view which the learned President was inclined to take on the third point (c) is also unsound, and on the appellant's own allegations, there being no unlawful removal of the office holder, of whom he claims to be the presumptive successor, his application for compensation under S 6 must fail. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal, but in the peculiar circumstances of the case would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout Judgment * In this case the appellate Court remanded the case under O 41, R 23, Civil P. C., in a judgment, which is perfectly impossible for me to follow.

So far as the counsel for the respondent has been able to support it, he says that certain persons have not been made necessary parties to the suit and that the question is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant is proved and that there are certain documents which are to be legally proved and others whose admissibility is in question. So far as the necessary parties are concerned there is no reason why they should be considered necessary parties at all The other reasons given are questions of fact or law which the appellate Court decided without any question of remand arising. It has been urged by counsel for the respondent that the remand is not under O. 41, R. 23, but under S. 151 and, therefore, no appeal lies. But the right of appeal is determined by what the Court purported to do, and not by what the Court should have done and, therefore, this objection has no force

I accept the appeal. The respondent will pay the costs of this hearing. The case is sent back to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge to dispose of according to law.

Agha Haidar, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for redemption. The trial Court has decreed the suit conditional upon the plaintiffs paying a sum of Rs. 8,791-12-3, in default whereof the suit is to be dismissed. The plaintiffs have come up to this Court in appeal. The facts are briefly these:

One Sultan Ahmad, the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs, executed a mortgage on 18th June 1900 in favour of defendant 1 for a sum of Rs. 600. The mortgage-deed in suit has not been printed and we are obliged to look into the vernacular document on the record. The main condition of this document which are relevant for the purpose of deciding this appeal, are as follows: Possession was to remain with the mortgagor and he was to pay the land revenue and appropriate the produce. It is further provided that on the mortgage money interest at the rate of Re. 1-4-0 per cent. per mensem shall be payable at the end of each year and, on default, interest shall be compoundable at the same rate. Further, it is provided that when the mortgage money with interest and compound interest due shall be paid then the mortgagor shall be entitled to have the mortgaged property redeemed. The term of the mortgage was fixed at eight years and it was stipulated that within that period on payment of the principal sum of money together with interest and compound interest, the mortgagor shall be entitled to redeem the property. If within that period the property is not redeemed then on the expiry of that period, the mortgagor shall put the mortgagee in possession and the mortgagee also shall be competent to obtain possession from the mortgagor. And when the mortgagee shall have obtained possession of the mortgaged property, then whatever may be the balance (due) as regards the principal mortgage-money together with interest and compound interest, interest on the same shall be counterbalanced with the produce of the land. The document ends with the important clause that until the mortgagee obtains formal possession, interest shall continue to run as heretofore.

Nothing was paid during the first eight years of the mortgage and possession was neither given nor obtained by the parties concerned at the expiry of the period of eight years. The plaintiffs brought the present suit on 19th April 1921 and claimed that they were entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of the mortgage money together with simple interest for the period expiring with the termination of the first eight years. They stated that they had paid Rs. 329-8-0 to defendant 1 on various occacasions on account of the mortgage. They further alleged that they had paid a sum of Rs. 500 to the mortgagees in respect of the interest on the mortgage money. Consequently they claimed redemption of the mortgaged property on payment of Rs. 990. They also added a prayer for possession of the property although it is admitted that possession has all along been with them. Defendant 1 filed a written statement in which he pleaded that the sum of Rs. 500 was not paid to him but he was prepared to allow credit for the sum of Rs. 329-8-0 which he admits having received from the mortgagors. He pleaded that according to the terms of the mortgage deed he was entitled to recover interest and compound interest on the principal sum from the date of the mortgage-deed till the acquisition of the possession of the land mortgaged.

He said that up to the time of the institution of the suit, the sum due to him was Rs. 7,351-4-0 which ought to be treated as a charge upon the property and on payment of which only the plaintiff could be entitled to redeem the mortgage. In para. 7 he stated that he was not bound under the terms of the mortgage to take possession of the land mortgaged, after the expiry of the eight years and he further claimed that he was entitled to interest and compound interest according to the terms of the document, seeing that the plaintiffs had been enjoying the produce of the land. As already stated the learned Judge of the trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit on payment of the sum of Rs. 8,791-12-3.

So far as the sum of Rs. 500 is concerned the evidence on the record is very flimsy and the learned Judge of the trial Court did not believe it. The learned counsel for the appellants at the very outset properly stated that he was not prepared to press his appeal with respect to this sum of Rs. 500. So far as this finding of the Court below is concerned it cannot, therefore, be disturbed.

The learned counsel for the appellants raised three points in his arguments. At first he contended that for the period of the first eight years his clients were not liable to pay compound interest, but subsequently he had to admit in the course of his arguments that this contention could not be seriously pressed. His second contention was that after the expiry of the first eight years of the mortgage it was incumbent upon the defendant-mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged property and since he had not done so, he could not claim any interest whatsoever for any period subsequent to the first eight years. We have considered the contents of the document and in our opinion the document does not bear the construction which the learned counsel for the appellant has sought to place upon it. We do not see any words in it which would show that it was incumbent upon the defendant to take immediate steps on the expiry of the first eight years to obtain possession of the property. On the other hand, we have the fact that the plaintiffs have remained all along in possession of the property without ever having made any offer to deliver possession to the mortgagee. Under this contention the learned counsel for the appellants, raised two subsidiary points. In the first place he urged that no interest should be charged on the amount which was due under the mortgage at the expiry of the period of eight years. His argument was based upon the contention that the amount of interest and compound interest could not technically be treated as "mortgage money" and therefore it was not a charge upon the mortgaged property This argument cannot be accepted, in view of the leading case on the subject Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh (1). There, their Lordships held that a mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property, in the absence of any contract to the contrary. In the present case there is no contract to the contrary which would take it out of the principle laid down in the above-noted Privy Council case.

His second point was that there was no express stipulation in the document that after the expiry of the first eight years, simple interest or compound interest should be paid, and in any case he claimed that his clients were not liable to pay compound interest. I cannot accede to this contention as I find that this point is covered by the Full Bench decision in Mohan Mal v. Muhammad Bakhsh (2). In this connexion I may also refer to the case of Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (3). The terms of the deed are given at p. 46 in their Lordships' judgment and are in substance the same as those in the deed in the present case. The judgment of their Lordships on the point before us is to be found at pp. 48-49 and is as follows :

The covenant to pay within a year ties up the hands of the mortgagee for that year and protects the mortgagor ; but it rarely happens, and is rarely contemplated that the mortgagor should actually pay by that time. The provision for applying payments to reduction of interest points strongly to the expectation of the parties that the transaction will not be closed

(1) A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 183=5 Lah. 425=51 I. A. 377 (P. C.).
(2) A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 254=3 Lah. 200 (F.B.).
(3) [1896] 19 All. 39=23 I.A. 138=7 Sar. (P.C.).

when the fixed day of payment arrives. The construction of the High Court ascribes to the parties an intention that, however payment may be delayed beyond the fixed day the debt shall carry no interest, that the creditor shall have no remedy provided by contract but shall be driven to treat the contract as broken, and to seek for damages, which lie in the discretion of a jury or a Court, and are subject to a different law of prescription. It appears to their Lordships that though contracts are not unfrequently found to be of that imperfect nature, it is more reasonable to ascribe to the parties the intention of making a perfect contract, especially when such a contract is of a very common kind, and suitable to the ordinary expectations of persons entering into a mortgage transaction.

Having regard to these authorities, it is, in my opinio , not open to the appellants to challen e the finding of the Court below on this point and the mortgagee is therefore entitled to charge compound interest on the amount due at the xpiry of the period of eight years

The third contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellants is based upon the following facts :

On 4th October 1920 the mortgagee obtained a decree against the mortgag r for possession of the mortgaged property. After the obtaining of that decree and up to this moment it does not appear from the record that the mortgagee decree-holder took any steps whatsoever to execute the decree and to obtain possession of the property.

The contention of the learned counsel for the appellants is to the effect that since the mortga ee in spite of obtaining his decree for possession of the mortgaged property has not taken any steps to obtain possession of that property, he is not entitled to any interest for the period subsequent to 4th October 1920. There is some force in this argument and the learned counsel for the respondent could not give any satisfactory answer to this contention except that the plaintiffs have been in possession and cannot keep back the interest and at the same time enjoy the usufruct of the property This argument does not really meet the situation created by the defendant's sleeping over the decree which he obtained, about seven years ago

After considering the fa ts and circumstances of the case I think that the mortgagee after 4th October 1920, the date when he obtained the decree for possession, is entitled only to simple interest at the rate of Re 1-4 0 per cent. per mensem on the amount which was due to him on that da e, till the payment in full by the plaintiffs-mortgagors of the same. We have calculated the amount ourselves and rougnly speaking it comes to Rs 6,520. He is, therefore, entitled to simple interest at Re 1 4 0 per cent. per mensem on this sum from 4th October 1920 onwards. I, therefore, allow the appeal to this extent only and order that a preliminary decree for redemption be passed in terms of O. 34, R. 7, Civil P. C. As the appeal has succeeded only to a small extent I order that the defendant-respondent shall get his proportionate costs in both the Courts

Tek Chand, J.—I agree with the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother.

Criminal Appeal No. 1112 of 1927, decided on 16th December 1927, from order of Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 8th September 1927.

(a) Penal Code, S. 302—Blow aimed at one killing another—Murder is committed.

Where a blow aimed at one person alights upon another and kills him the offence committed by the assailant is the same as it would have been if blow had struck the intended victim. 8 W. R Cr. 78, Foll. [P 346 C 1]

Nihal Singh—for Appellant.

The Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Tek Chand, J.—The appellant, Suba, an Indian Christian of Chak No. 68/10 R, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Multan, under S. 302, I P C. for having committed the murder of Mt Fini, of the same village and has been sentenced to death He has appealed and the record is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C.

The facts are very simple. The wedding of a daughter of Labhu Ram Jhiwar (P. W No 2) was being celebrated in the village and on the evening of 8th May 1927, a number of women had assembled in the court-yard of Labhu's house and were singing Among those present were Mt. Barkati, the wife of the appellant and Mt. Fini deceased, a woman 18 years of age, who had been married to Tabu (P. W. No. 5). The appellant came to Labhu's house and asked his wife to go back to her own house as the children were crying. She said that she would go after a short time. He repeated his request three times but she gave the same reply. He accordingly went back. About an hour after, he returned to Labhu's house with a toka in his hand and again asked Mt. Barkati to go along with him. She replied that she would go after the sweetmeats had been distributed He repeated his request and she said "go and I will come" On this he got excited and struck the toka at Mt. Barkati, but she evaded it by ducking her head and the blow struck Mt Fini, who was sitting close to her. Mt Fini lost consciousness at once and about 10 p m she was taken to her own house. On the third day she was removed to the hospital at Khanewal and on 12th her statement (Ex. P D) was recorded by Altaf Hussain, Sub-Divisional Officer. She remained in the hospital till her death on 15th May.

The post-mortem examination was conducted by Dr. S C Lal (P W. No. 1) who found the following injuries on her body.

(1) An incised wound on the left side of the head above the temple cutting through the skull.

(2) A granulating incised wound on left forearm.

(3) An incised wound on the left thigh skin deep.

(4) A fresh incised wound on the bend of the right elbow.

The witness expressed the opinion that death was due to an abscess in the brain following upon a compound fracture of the skull caused by injury No. 1. It was found that the skull had a cut under the wound 3¼ inches long and there was also a small loose piece of bone lying embedded in a small thin blood clot on the outer surface of the dura. The witness was of opinion that this injury (No. 1) had been caused by a direct blow struck with a fair amount of force, but that the other injuries were of a simple nature and were probably caused by the falling of the chopper from the assailant's hand on the body of the victim.

The main facts of the story are fully established by the evidence of Labhu Ram (P. W. No 2) and Mt. Jhandi P. W. No. 3) and the dying declaration of Mt. Fini (Ex. P-D) recorded on 12th May. Both these witnesses are absolutely disinterested persons and counsel could not urge anything against their veracity It is not necessary to discuss their evidence at length as the appellant in the grounds of appeal which he submitted to this Court from jail practically admitted all the facts. After describing his first visit to Labhu's house, he states that as Mt. Barkati had not returned to the house after having promised to do so he felt much excited and made a search for a lathi but as he could not find one he picked up a toka and left for Labhu's house so that he might fetch her a ter holding out threats to her. On her refusing to return he got still more excited and was about to strike her with a back side of the toka when Labhu came behind him and seized him. In the course of the struggle he tried to strike his wife with the back side of the toka out she escaped and it hit Mt. Fini deceased with the sharp side.

It will be seen that the appellant's version of the occurrence differs from that of the prosecution in one particular only, viz., that he suggests that he aimed a blow at his wife with the back side of toka but that Labhu seized him and in the struggle Mt. Fini was hit. There is, however, no reason to suppose that the prosecution witnesses have not told the truth on this point The nature of the injury caused to the head puts the matter absolutely beyond doubt that the appellant struck the blow with blade of the toka with considerable force. The sole question to be decided is whether on these facts the appellant has been rightly convicted under S 302, I P C There is no doubt that the appellant had no intention to cause the death of Mt. Barkati but at the same time, it is clear that he attacked her with a heavy lethal weapon in such a manner that he must be presumed to have known that he was likely to cause such bodily injury as would result in death. If, therefore, Mt. Barkati had not ducked her head and the blow had struck her, the appellant would have been guilty of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C. The fact that Mt. Barkati evaded the blow and it fell upon the unfortunate woman, Mt. Fini, who was sitting next to her, does not in any way affect the guilt. Such a case is provided for in S. 301, I. P. C., which embodies a well-established principle of criminal jurisprudence based on the doctrine of "transferred malice." It is settled law that where a blow aimed at one person lights upon another and kills him, the offence committed by the assailant is the same as it would have been if the blow had struck the intended victim. The case is very similar to Queen v. Phomonee Ahun (1) where the accused aimed a blow with a sharp dao to B but instead of killing B it struck the child in his arms and killed it and it was held that the offence was of murder punishable under S. 301, I. P. C.

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the conviction under S. 302, I. P. C. must be maintained. But I think that the circumstances of the case are such that the lesser penalty should be imposed on the appellant. He did not strike the blow with the intention of killing his wife and had been provoked by her repeated refusal to go home and take care of the children. I would, therefore, commute the sentence to one transportation for life.

John Vectis Carew Wyllie—Plaintiff—Appellant.

Secretary of State—Defendant—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 925 of 1924, Decided on 29th February 1928, from decree of the 1st Cl. Sub-Judge., Lahore, D/- 11th March 1924.

* Tort — Public nuisance — A gate out of repair by the side of a playground—was held to be a public nuisance.

Two wings of an old gate, which had fallen into disrepair were allowed by defendant to stand by the side of a public garden used by children as a playground. The lower hinge had ceased to exist and the gates hung by the upper hinges only. The plaintiff was playing inside the garden. While he was so playing, one wing of the gate fell and broke his leg. The leg was set immediately by a doctor. Plaintiff, however, left for England and there got his leg reset. Plaintiff claimed damages together with the travelling expenses for England.

Held : that the gate was a public nuisance and the cause of the injuries to the plaintiff.

Held : further, that the plaintiff was not entitled to charge the party responsible with the expense of a journey to London to consult an eminent specialist. [P 347 C 1, 2]

O'Conner and Obedullah—for Appellant.

Carden Noad and Jagan Nath Bhandari—for Respondent.

Harrison, J.—The plaintiff in this case is Master John Wyllie and the suit is one for damages assessed at Rs. 5,050/- and claimed on account of the injury caused to him by the falling of a gate in the Lawrence Gardens, Lahore, which fractured his leg. At the time the accident occurred he was nearly eight years of age The leg was set by Major Bott immediately after the accident. He, the plaintiff, went home to England in the following February, was admitted to St. Thomas Hospital on 18th April 1922, and was operated on by Sir Percy Sargent who rebroke and reset the leg. The suit has been dismissed on the finding that although the gate which fell on the boy's leg had been in need of repairs and the defendant's servants had been negligent, yet there was such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as to defeat his claim to damages. On appeal it is urged by Mr. O' Conner that it is not as much a question of negligence as of the gate in question having been a public nuisance, that the plaintiff merely touched it and it fell and broke his leg, that the place where this occurred, namely, the Bandstand in front of the Lawrence Hall, is a place which for many years has been frequented by children and treated as a playground and that he has proved the items which constitute his claim for damages.

The admitted facts are that there is a railing surrounding the circular platform on which the band plays in the Lawrence Gardens, Lahore. To this there is a gate which is always kept open. Facing that gate there are the two wings of an old gate, which has fallen into disrepair, and since the accident these are kept together with a piece of wire. The lower hinges admittedly had ceased to exist and the gates hung by the upper hinges only. The plaintiff boy was playing inside the Bandstand. There were other children outside. There was a little girl playing with him, as he says himself, and one wing of the gate fell and broke his leg.

The story put forward by the defendant is that the gate could only have been moved by the use of considerable force, that several boys were playing there, that the plaintiff was sitting astride the gate and this must have brought it down. On the one side we have the evidence of the boy himself and Miss North, a nurse who was sitting near the Bandstand, on the other, the evidence of Ghulam Kadir as to what actually happened, and the evidence of Mr. Hardie as to the condition of the gate. The trial Court has accepted the statement of this man Ghulam Kadir as to what he saw when he passed the Bandstand and what he heard of the accident, which took place forty feet behind him, as against the statements of the boy himself and of Miss North. It is true that there is a contradiction between Miss North's statement and the boy's which admits of an obvious explanation, but there is no reason in our opinion for discrediting it and accepting the evidence of Ghulam Kadir, as the trial Court has done. We find that the story told by the plaintiff is true, that he came inside the Bandstand through the usual open gate, touched this old broken down gate and one wing of it fell and broke his leg. We find that he did not sit astride it and that he and others did not pull it down. We have studied the authorities relied on by both sides and are of opinion that this gate, in the condition in which it was at the time, was a public nuisance. The facts are practically identical with those of 2 Q. B. 1898, 320, and as there laid down the gate was a nuisance and the cause of the injuries to the plaintiff. This Bandstand and the ground round it forms playground in the public gardens used by children when not occupied by the band. The gate was in a dangerous state and we are of opinion that the official in charge should have known the fact and therefore the defendant is liable.

The question of the measure of the damages is far from easy. In the plaint Rs. 2,000/- have been claimed on account of travelling expenses, whereas in her statement Mrs. Wyllie puts the figure as Rs. 3000/-. The child's leg was at once set by Major Bott and either soon after or at a later stage crookedness developed as portion of the smaller bone did not join correctly, and although the child could run about, the foot was not straight. Major Bott saw him last at the beginning of January and he was taken to England on 27th February or some two months afterwards It would appear that at the time the seriousness of the state of things was not realised for he was not taken to Major Bott within a month and a half of going to England, and allowing some 24 days for the journey he must have arrived in England about the 23rd March but he was not taken to St. Thomas Hospital until the 18th April. This does not agree with the statement that immediately on arrival in England he was taken to the Hospital. This boy being destined for the Navy, it appears that he must have been taken home anyhow at about the time when he did go, that is to say, when about eight years of age. Not only is there a discrepancy between the figures and dates but throughout the charge has been for going home and not for Mrs. Wyllie's return journey which is now included in the claim by counsel. The further question arises of whether any parent in the circumstances is entitled to charge the party responsible with the expense of a journey to London to consult an eminent specialist, and, if the most eminent specialist on the particular trouble be in America or Madagascar, would the injured party be entitled to charge the expense of going to either place. We think not, unless and until it is positively shown that the trouble could not have been put right in India. We have been struck by the absence of important particulars and important evidence on both sides and we find it impossible to supply the gaps. We have held that the statements of Miss North and the plaintiff are sufficient to establish what actually happened, but we have ignored that portion of the evidence of Miss North which consists of a wholly inadmissible written statement put in by her. The claim in the plaint is divided as follows :

Medical charges and Doctor's fees.	Rs. 278-3-0
Hospital charges	Rs. 106-0-0
Travelling expenses and other charges	Rs. 2000-0-0
Damages	Rs. 2665-3-0

Out of the first item, Rs 200/-, the fees of Major Bott, have admittedly not been paid, though six years have elapsed. If we allow the other small charges for hospital, X Rays etc, they amount to Rs 247/-. The general damages of Rs. 2,665/- for a badly fractured leg are not by any means excessive and there can be no doubt that other expenses were incurred although the surgeon of St Thomas' Hospital gave his services free

We, therefore, allow Rs. 3,500- damages to the plaintiff and accept the appeal to the extent of giving a decree for this amount with proportionate costs throughout.

Judgment.*—Badri Nath, the defendant in the suit from which this appeal arises, took on lease from Ram Nath, the plaintiff, a house, a kothri and a vacant site with effect from 9th October 1923. He executed a deed providing that the rent Rs 9 per mensem., would be paid monthly and that if the landlord wished to have the house vacated he should give two months' previous notice. The deed of lease ended with a statement that the lessee had executed the deed of rent for 11 months

On 21st July 1924 the plaintiff served a notice on the defendant asking the latter to vacate the house within two months from the date of the receipt of the notice at the risk of being charged double rent The defendant did not vacate the premises.

In May 1925 the plaintiff sued the defendant for ejectment and arrears of rent. The defendant contested the suit on the grounds inter alia that he had never been given possession of the vacant plot and that the notice was invalid because it did not mention the kothri and the vacant site and because it did not expire with the end of a month of the tenancy The trial Court decreed the rent but refused a decree for ejectment holding that the notice was invalid because it did not expire with the end of the month of the tenancy. On appeal the Additional District Judge, Lahore, confirmed this order agreeing with the trial Court's view regarding the invalidity of the notice. The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal contesting the correctness of the lower Courts's decision on this point.

The Courts below have based their decision on the Single Bench judgment of this Court in Chuni Lal v. Chuni Lal reported as A I. R 1923 Lah. 659. Mr. Kapur for the appellant questions the correctness of this judgment and relies on the Nagpur judgment in Saik Kasim v Jasif Karim Abu (A. I. R. 1924 Nagpur 220) which dealt with a case on all fours so far as the point at issue here is concerned with the present case.

The Transfer of Property Act has not been extended to this Province and neither in Pirbhu v Ramchand (1) nor in Radha Kishan v Ratan Lal (2) referred to in Chuni Lal v. Chuni Lal do I find authority for the strict application in the Punjab of the technicalities required by S 106 of the Act Assuming, however, that S 106 of the Act did govern the matter of notice here, the present case appears to me to be one in which the matter of notice is provided for by the contract itself and therefore, one to be decided according to the agreement between the parties Read as a whole the lease is one terminable at any time on two month's notice, that is to say, similar, so far as the point at issue is concerned, to the lease in the Punjab case Rure Khan v Ghulam Mohammad A I.R. 1924 Lah 643, decided by Campbell, J. In that case, as here the lease was for 11 months, a provision in the present case obviously intended to avoid the necessity of registration (the rent in the present case being Rs. 99 for 11 months) and the lessor was to give the lessee notice of a fixed period. In that case the period was one week. There too the rent was payable monthly and the lessor had asked the lessee to vacate the property within one week. It was held that the stipulation for the monthly payment of rent had no effect upon the condition by which the lessor could serve the lessee with notice at any time and that a week's notice to vacate given on 3rd June 1921, (the 11 months' term of tenancy having begun on 8th August 1920) was not invalid merely because it did not expire on the 7th of any calendar month Following this ruling and the Nagpur ruling cited above I accept this appeal holding that the notice given by the plaintiff appellant was not invalid because it did not expire with the end of a month of the tenancy, and on this finding remand the appeal to the lower appellate Court for disposal after decision of the points left undetermined. The suit and appeal remained pending in the lower Courts for two years and the appeal should be disposed of as soon as possible. The appellant will get his costs of this appeal in this Court.

Nawal Kishore (for Moti Sagar) and Bishen Narayan—for Appellants

Kishen Dayal and Bishen Narain—for Respondents

Tek Chand, J.—The suit, which has given rise to this appeal, was instituted on 1st October 1921, by the firm Rahim Ullah-Ilahi Bakhsh, fruit merchants, Sabzimandi, Delhi, against (1) the Secretary of State for India in Council, as owning the E B. S Ry , and (2) The E. I. Ry. Co., Calcutta, claiming the sum of Rs 6,000 as damages for loss caused to the plaintiffs by "careless handling and detaining for an undue length of time" a consignment of 300 maunds of green cocoanuts despatched on 11th August 1920, from Akra railway station on the E. B. S Ry , to Katni and thence rebooked to Sabzimandi (on the E I. Ry.,) near Delhi. The cocoanuts admittedly arrived at Sabzimandi on 2nd October 1920, in a rotten condition and the consignees (plaintiffs) refused to take delivery.

The defendants resisted the suit on various grounds pleading inter alia that the suit was barred by time and that the consignment having been booked under Risk-Notes A and B they were protected from liability. The plaintiffs in their replication did not admit the execution of the Risk-Notes and traversed the other pleas raised by the defendants.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim in full against the E. I. Ry., holding that the execution of the Risk-Notes had not been proved, and that the loss resulted from the negligence of this defendant. He found that the E. B. S. Ry., being the contracting party was technically liable, but he dismissed the suit against it, as the goods had left its jurisdiction within four days.

The E. I Ry., has appealed and the case has been fully and ably argued before us by Mr. Nawal Kishore for the appellant and Mr. Kishen Dayal for the respondents.

The first contention raised before us is that the suit is barred by time, being governed by Art. 30 and not Art. 31 as held by the lower Court. It has also been argued that the E. B. S. Ry., was not a necessary party, and the plaintiffs cannot take advantage of the additional period of two months requisite for a notice to the Secretary of State under S. 80, Civil P. C. There is no controversy now as to the facts bearing on the question of limitation. It is admitted by both counsel that the goods were delivered to the E. B. S. Ry., at Akra on 11th August 1920, for being carried to Katni on the E. I. Ry On the 13th August the wagon containing the consignment arrived at Naihati Junction and on 15th August 1920, it started on the E. I. Ry., for Katni reaching there on 15th September 1920. The next day it was rebooked from Katni to Sabzimandi in accordance with the telegraphic instructions sent by the plaintiff beforehand. The wagon reached Delhi Junction on the E. I. Ry. on the 29th September and as it was found in a damaged condition the goods were transhipped into another wagon which arrived at Sabzimandi on 2nd October 1920. It is admitted that the cocoanuts were in a rotten condition and the plaintiffs refused to take delivery. The usual notices followed and the suit was instituted against both the Railways on the 1st October 1921.

On these facts I am of opinion that the suit is clearly within time. It was instituted within 14 months of the despatch of the goods and as one of the defendants was a State Railway the plaintiffs were under S 15 (2), Lim. Act entitled to deduct the period of two months required for nctice to the Secretary of State for India in Council under S. 80, Civil P. C. Mr. Nawal Kishore contends that the E. B. S. Ry., was not a necessary party as the consignments had left the jurisdiction of the E. B. S. Ry., within four days of its despatch and that the telegram (Ex. D. 5) sent by the plaintiffs to the E. I. Ry., on 15th September 1920 indicates that the plaintiffs knew that the loss had occurred on the line of the latter railway. In my opinion this contention is devoid of all force. In view of the fact that the E. B. S. Ry., was the contracting party and that the plaintiffs could not at the time of the institution of the suit be sure as to where the loss had occurred and which of the defendants was really responsible for it, it was necessary for them to implead both the railways. The circumstance that ultimately the Court found that the E. B. S. Ry., was not guilty of any undue delay or negligence in carrying the goods or that the loss occurred when the goods were in the possession of the E. I. Ry., cannot deprive the plaintiffs of the benefit of S. 15 (2), Lim. Act. It is settled law that in a single suit probably brought against several defendants, if the plaintiff is entitled to deduct a certain period from the period of limitation in respect of one defendant, he is also entitled to the same period of limitation in the case of the other defendants. If authority were required for this proposition it will be found in A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 549 and A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 344. In this view of the case it is not necessary to decide whether Art. 30 or 31 governs the suit as brought. I hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

The next question to be decided is whether the goods were booked under Risk-Notes A and B and if so, whether the Risk-Notes covered the entire journey or only the portion between Akra and Katni. The appellant relies upon Exs. D. 1 and D. 2 which are respectively Risk-Notes in the approved Forms A and B, purporting to have been signed by one Abdul Ghaffar Khan, who had delivered the goods to the station master at Akra for despatch to Katni. Abdul Ghaffar Khan was admittedly the agent of the plaintiffs and if the signatures are proved to be his, the plaintiffs are clearly bound by the Risk-Notes : Ardeshir Bhikaji v. G. I. P Ry (1).

(1) A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 24.

The plaintiffs, however, deny that the signatures on Exs. D. 1 and D. 2 are those of Abdul Ghaffar Khan and the lower Court has found in their favour on this point. Mr. Nawal Kishore has addressed us at length on this point but after giving full consideration to his arguments I am of opinion that the finding of the lower Court must be sustained. Abdul Ghaffar Khan, the person who is alleged to have signed the Risk-Notes, is dead, and the appellant in order to prove that the Risk-Notes in question were signed by him, has relied on the testimony of Narendra Nath Bannerjee, Station Master, Akra, who booked the goods. He gave evidence $2\frac{3}{4}$ years after the alleged execution of the Risk-Notes and cannot be expected to remember as to who had actually signed them. The lower Court has given good reasons for rejecting his evidence and I do not think it necessary to recapitulate them. The other witness Abdul Wahid admittedly was not present when the Risk-Notes were signed and his evidence is of no assistance in coming to a decision on this point. The plaintiffs have, on the other hand, produced three persons, Fakir Muhammad, Abdul Ghani and Ahmad Hussain, who were acquainted with the handwriting of Abdul Ghaffar Khan and who stated that the alleged signatures are not his. I have examined the signatures on the Risk-Notes and also the admitted signatures of Abdul Ghaffar Khan and agree with the lower Court in holding that they appear to be in a different handwriting.

The appellant's counsel next relied upon the document Ex. D. 3, which is the forwarding note of the consignment in question. This document has not, however, been proved. The proper person to prove it was Narendra Nath Bannerjee, the station master of Akra and though this document was sent to the local commissioner at Calcutta, who examined that witness, no question was put to him in respect of it. After fully considering the evidence I agree with the lower Court in holding that the execution of the Risk-Notes by Abdul Ghaffar Khan has not been proved.

This finding is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but I may point out that even if the Risk-Notes D. 1 and D. 2 had been found to be duly executed by the plaintiffs, the appeal would still have failed. The Risk-Notes covered the journey between Akra and Katni and could have protected the Railway only if the loss had occurred between these two stations. The learned counsel for the appellant has admitted that there is no proof that any risk-note was executed by or on behalf of the plaintiffs when the goods were rebooked from Katni to Sabzimandi. He has also conceded that there is no evidence on the record to show that the loss occurred between the two stations covered by the Risk-Notes in question. In my opinion the suit has been rightly decreed and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1371 of 1927, Decided on 22nd November 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 19th February 1927.

Landlord and tenant—Encroachment upon adjoining land by tenant during continuance of tenancy—Presumption is that the land so encroached upon forms part of the holding and on termination of tenancy the tenant must render it up to the landlord.

Where during the continuance of the tenancy a tenant encroaches upon land belonging to a third person, his possession of the land so encroached upon is prima facie for the benefit of the landlord. In such cases the presumption is that encroachments made by the tenant are a part of the holding and on the termination of the tenancy the tenant must render them up to the landlord whether he has directly undertaken to do so or not: Andrews v. Judgment— This dispute relates to a small plot of 14 marlas in area, being a part of Khasra No. 1057 which represents the abadi of the village. The facts found by the learned District Judge are as follows:

The plaintiffs-appellants are the owners of Khasra Nos. 1512, 1513 and 1514 the last of which adjoins the abadi. In 1914 they leased these fields to one Fazal Din tenant for cultivation and it appears that at that time Fazal Din encroached upon the adjoining portion of the abadi This encroachment was, however, removed soon after Later, Fazal Din ceased to cultivate the land and the plaintiffs let fields Nos 1512, 1513, and 1514 to Gaman respondent as tenant under them Gaman also encroached upon the abadi which adjoined these fields and took possession of the plot measuring 14 marlas which is now in dispute. Gaman has since been ejected by the plaintiffs from fields Nos 1512, 1513 and 1514 but he still continues in possession of the portion of the abadi encroached upon.

The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of this plot from Gaman but the learned District Judge has dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs had acquired no proprietary right in it and cannot oust the quondam tenant even though his possession is unlawful

In my opinion the learned District Judge's decision cannot be sustained as on the findings of facts arrived at by him the plaintiffs were legally entitled to a decree. The proposition of law is firmly established that where during the continuance of the tenancy a tenant encroaches upon land belonging to a third person, his possession of the land so encroached upon is prima facie for the benefit of the landlord. In such cases the presumption is that encroachments made by the tenant are a part of the holding and on the termination of the tenancy the tenant must render them up to the landlord whether he has directly undertaken to do so or not. See Andrews v Hailes (1) where Lord Campbell has elaborately discussed the principles underlying the rule and the judgment of Willes, J., in Earl of Lisburne v Davies (2). The law on the subject is thus summed up by Woodfall in his standared work on Landlord and Tenant (20th Edition) at page 891:

> Encroachments made by a tenant from the adjoining waste during the term are prima facie for the benefit of the tenant and afterwards of his landlord, unless it appears by some evidence that the tenant at the time they were made intended them for his own exclusive benefit.

The view taken by the Indian Courts is in accord with this rule See Tepu Mahammad v. Tefayit Mahammad (3) and Ammu Ammal v. Puthiaparambath Moidin (4). In this case Gaman respondent has led no evidence to displace this presumption and there are no materials on the record from which it can be inferred that he intended to make the encroachments for his sole benefit I, therefere, accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge, decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Civil P. C. S. 100—Suit compromised in appeal—Judgment omitting certain terms of compromise—Order correcting the omission can be made under S. 152 and is not appealable.

In an appeal from the dismissal of a suit by certain reversioners challenging a sale, the parties came to terms and the appellate Court recorded judgment as follows: "Plaintiff's suit and appeal are dismissed without costs of both Courts, defendants having promised to pay plaintiffs one hundred rupees within four months from today". Subsequently an application was filed by the plaintiffs in which it was pointed out that the whole terms of the compromise had not been given effect to in the judgment and the appellate Court was asked to exercise its powers under S. 151 to correct the omission. Accordingly in the presence of the parties the Court passed an order in which it added to its judgment the following words: If payment is not made within four months the defendants shall have no claim left to the land and the appeal shall be considered accepted

Syed Mohammad Amin — for Petitioners.

Broadway, Ag. C. J.—Certain reversioners instituted a suit challenging a sale. It was held by the trial Court that the sale was for necessity and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. An appeal was filed by the plaintiffs which was heard by the District Judge of Attock. On 9th November 1922 an application was filed by the parties in the Court of the District Judge alleging that the parties had come to terms and stating what those terms were. On 10th November 1922 the learned District Judge recorded a brief judgment in which he stated the parties had compromised and in accordance with those terms he accepted the appeal in part and modified the decree of the lower Court. He went on to say :

> Plaintiffs' suit and appeal are dismissed without costs and parties are to bear their own costs of both Courts, defendants having promised to pay plaintiffs one hundred rupees within four months from today.

The sum of Rs. 100 was not paid within the prescribed period. On 29th May 1923 an application was filed before the learned District Judge by the plaintiffs in which it was pointed out that the whole terms of the compromise had not been given effect to in the judgment and the learned District Judge was asked to exercise his powers under S. 151, Civil P. C., to correct the omission. Accordingly on 16th July 1923 in the presence of the parties the learned District Judge passed an order in which he added to his judgment the following words :

> If payment is not made within four months the defendants shall have no claim left to the land and the appeal shall be considered accepted.

Against this order the defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

Obviously the learned advocate had doubts in his own mind as to whether an appeal was competent, for at the foot of the memorandum of appeal he added a note asking that in the event of it being held that no second appeal lay, this should be treated as a revision. The first point for decision is whether a second appeal was competent or not. In this connexion Mr. Syed Muhammad Amin referred to Visvanatham Chetti v. Ramanathan Chetti (1) which is undoubtedly an authority in his favour. On the other hand, a contrary view was taken in Sourindra Mohun Tagore v. Siromani Debi (2) ; Surta v. Ganga (3) ; Hasan Shah v. Sheo Prasad (4) and Bai Vaktuba v. Agarsangji Raisingji (5), and after hearing the learned advocate I am unable to see any reason to take a view contrary to that taken by the Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay High Courts. I would, therefore, hold that the second appeal is not competent.

The next question for determination is whether treating this as an application for revision, there is any force in the contentions urged by Mr. Syed Muhammad Amin. It has been urged that in the case of a consent decree no clerical or arithmetical mistakes, etc., can be rectified either under S. 151 or 152, Civil P. C., In support of his contention the learned advocate referred to Ram Lagan Sahu v. Ram Birich Koeri (6). A reference to that authority, however, appears to me to support the contrary view. At p. 207 occurs the following :

> No doubt as long as the decree remains in the form of a memorandum on the minutes of the Court it is open to the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction to make any amendment it thinks fit in the minutes. But once the decree has been passed and signed then the remedy is except in cases to which S. 152, Civil P. C. applies to institute a suit to set aside that decree on one of the grounds for said.

Section 152, Civil P. C., provides

> Clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties.

It is obvious that in the present case there was an accidential omission, in the judgment of the learned District Judge—an accidental omission which he had the power to remedy under S. 152, Civil P. C., and which he did actually remedy in the order now attacked. In my judgment therefore the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to make the order he did and I would therefore dismiss this petition but as there is no appearance on the opposite side I would pass no order as to costs.

Misc. First Appeal No. 888 of 1927, Decided on 6th February 1928.

Provincial Insolvency Act. S. 7— Members of joint family can be adjudged insolvents only for a joint debt or joint act of insolvency.

Members of joint family can be adjudged insolvents in respect of debts for which they are jointly liable. Members of a joint Hindu family can be adjudicated insolvents in single petition by a creditor if they are liable on a joint debt or have been guilty of a joint act of insolvency but the debts must be debts due by the family : A. Judgment.— One Amir Chand applied to adjudicate a father and two sons, namely, Paras Ram, Kanhaya Ram and Sajan Ram, who were alleged to be members of a joint Hindu family, insolvents on the ground that they could not pay their debts and that the father had committed an act of insolvency by selling his land in order to prefer certain creditors and defeat other creditors. The father and sons claimed that the debt was due by Kanhaya Ram, only, who was not a member of a joint Hindu family with the others. while Kanhaya Ram, who admitted that he could not pay his debts, denied that he had committed any act of insolvency. The District Judge framed three issues as follows :

(1). Has Paras Ram, separated his sons from him ?

2. If not, was the sale of the land by Paras Ram, made with a view to defeat the creditors ?

3. If the first issue is found against the respondents, has the petitioner a locus standi against the joint family ?

The District Judge held that separation had not been proved, that the father had committed an act of insolvency and that, therefore, the petitioning creditor could proceed against the entire family. He, therefore, adjudged the father and two sons insolvents. Against this decision the father Paras Ram, and one of the sons, Sajan Ram, have appealed. Kanhaya Ram has not appealed, though he denied in the Court below that he had committed an act of insolvency.

There is no doubt an entry in a bahi dated 4th of Katak, Sambat 1977, corresponding to 19th October 1920, by which a separation took place. It is, however, unnecessary for me to go into the question whether the father and two sons are still joint, as the appeal can be disposed of on another ground namely, on the third issue. It will be best in the interest of all parties that I should not go into the question of jointness of the family in the present appeal as better evidence might well be adduced by both sides. This question is left open.

It is clear from the record that the petitioning creditor Amir Chand, is, according to his own books, a creditor of Kanhaya Ram, only. The copy of the account, which has been put in, shows that his account is headed : "Lekha Kanhaya Ram" and every balance struck after 19th October 1920 has been struck by Kanhaya Ram. It is true that Amir Chand, has said that the account was once in the name of the father Paras Ram, but he has not produced the account which was in the name of Paras Ram, before October 1920. In any case, it is clear that the substitution of Kanhaya Ram's name meant that the account became that of Kanhaya Ram alone and had no longer anything to do with the father.

Another creditor, who has given evidence, is Amar Singh who has produced his account with the father Paras Ram, from Sambat 1973. He has also produced the subsequent account, headed "Lekha Kanhaya Ram," after the date of the alleged separation, i. e., after the 19th October 1920. All balances after that date were struck by Kanhaya Ram and the account is headed as his account. The same remarks, therefore, apply in the case of this debt also.

The only other debt proved is that of Prem Singh. In his case also there was first an account with Paras Ram, the father, and later the account became that of Kanhaya Ram only. The balances have been struck by Kanhaya Ram alone after October 1920.

It follows that all that has been proved in this case is that Kanhaya Ram, owes certain creditors some money

* [Letters Patent Appeal No. 84 of 1928 against this judgment, was dismissed on 5th April 1928.

There is no proof anywhere on the record that his father and brother are liable for that debt as members of a joint Hindu family with Kanhaya Ram. It was held in Khazana Mal v. Jagan Nath (1), and Sotam Ram v. Purchuman Ram (2) that there is no presumption that a debt contracted by a manager of a Hindu family is contracted for the benefit of the family. A case very similar to the present is that reported in Baru v. Balla (3). There a suit was brought against the father and son on book account. The dealings started in the name of the father but ceased in his name and continued in the name of the son only for a certain period. The suit was brought against father and son on the allegation that the son had struck the balance as manager of a joint Hindu family. The District Judge held that no separation had been proved between them and decreed the claim. This Court accepted the appeal on the ground that even if separation had not been proved, the finding of jointness was insufficient to make the father liable until it was further established that the debt had been incurred by the son as manager of the family and for family purposes. The present case is much stronger, for the father is treated as the karta of the family for the purpose of committing the act of insolvency, while the son is treated as the manager for purposes of incurring the debts, and there is no proof of any kind that the debts were incurred for family purposes by the son.

The same view is taken in Rustomji's Insolvency and Bakruputcy, 2nd edition, at p. 64, where it is said :

> Members of a joint family may be adjudged insolvents in respect of debts for which they are jointly liable. Members of a joint Hindu family can be adjudicated insolvents in a single petition by a creditor if they are liable on a joint debt or have been guilty of a joint act of insolvency.

Again,

> the debts must be debts due by the family.

An attempt was made to argue that an insolvency case was different from an ordinary suit and that though the plaintiff must prove in an ordinary suit the liability of the whole family, it was sufficient to prove jointness in the case of an insolvency petition. This is clearly wrong and there is no such distinction. It has, therefore, not been established in the present case that the debts are debts due by the joint family, that is for which the joint family is liable. The District Judge, therefore, erred in adjudicating Paras Ram and Sajan Ram, insolvents.

For the reasons given I accept the appeal with costs throughout and set aside the order of adjudication in the case of Paras Ram and Sajan Ram.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Bishan Narain for Gopal Chand—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage. On 27th February 1925 a preliminary decree was passed directing the plaintiff to pay to the mortgagees a certain sum within six months and declaring that in case of default the plaintiff shall be debarred from all rights to redeem the land in dispute. The plaintiff having failed to pay the amount accordingly an application was made by the mortgagees on 30th March 1926 under O. 34, R. 8 (2), Civil P. C., praying for a final decree debarring the plaintiff from redeeming the land. To this application a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the plaintiff that the plaintiff could not be debarred from redeeming the land as the mortgage was an 'usufructuary' one. It was contended on his behalf that the preliminary decree passed was not in accordance with law and that according to the provisions of R. 7 as well as R. 8, O. 34, no decree declaring that the plaintiff shall be debarred from redeeming the land could be passed in the case of such a mortgage. This contention was upheld by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and the application was dismissed. From this decision the present appeal has been filed.

A preliminary point was raised that no appeal is competent, the order in question not being included in the appealable orders specified in O. 43, Civil P. C. On behalf of the appellant reliance was placed on Subbalakshmi Ammal v. Ramalinga Chetty (1) in which it was held that an appeal lies from an order refusing to pass a final decree under O. 34, R 5. It was argued that on the analogy of that ruling an appeal will lie in the present case also inasmuch as the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has refused to pass a final decree and there has thus been a final adjudication of the matters in dispute between the parties. But the facts of the present case are distinguishable to some extent inasmuch as the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has merely refused to pass a final decree in terms of the preliminary decree. He left it open to the mortgagee to file another application under O. 34, R. 8 (2), Civil P. C., for a final decree in some other form according to law. The point is not free from doubt, and we do not think it necessary to express any definite opinion on it, as the appellant has also put in an application for revision and it is clear that an application for revision, at any rate would be competent as the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has failed to exercise jurisdiction vested in him by law.

On the merits, it was argued that the order under appeal was clearly wrong inasmuch as the mortgage in this case was not a 'usufructuary' one. It appears that the mortgage charge was created by two different mortgage deeds. The first deed was dated 10th June 1896 and by virtue of it the land in dispute was mortgaged for Rs. 200. The profits of the land were taken to be equal to interest on Rs. 100, while the balance was to cerry interest at Rs. 1-9-0 per cent per mensem. The mortgage was with possession and the mortgagor was at liberty to redeem the land by paying the principal and interest in the beginning of any year. The second mortgage deed dated 5th May 1897 created a further charge of Rs. 65 on the same land. Out of this additional charge only a sum of Rs. 50 carried interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent per mensem. The amount of the further charge was payable by Katak 1964 and in case of default the mortgagee was entitled to realise the same by a sale of the mortgaged property as well as other property belonging to the mortgagor. It will thus appear that the mortgagee was not left to realize the mortgage charge merely from the rent and profits of the mortgaged land. The definition of usufructurary mortgage as given in S. 58, T. P. Act runs as follows:

> Where the mortgagor delivers possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and authorizes him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage money, and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property and to appropriate them in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage money, or partly in lieu of interest and partly in payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is called an usufructuary mortgage.

It will appear from S. 67 of the same Act that an usufructuary mortgagee is not entitled to institute a suit for foreclosure or sale. The essential feature of a purely 'usufructuary' mortgage would thus appear to be that the mortgagee cannot sue for the payment of his debt, but is only entitled to remain in possession of the mortgaged property till the principal and interest are defrayed according to the terms of the agreement. Soman Mull v. Kanhchund (2) Ghose's Law of Mortgage in India, Vol. I, p. 99.

(1) [1919] 42 Mad. 52=35 M. L. J. 552=8 M. L. W. 526=48 I. C. 298=(1918) M. W. N. 792.

(2) [1870] 15 P. R. 1870.

In the present case the mortgage was clearly not a purely 'usufructuary' one inasmuch as the mortgagee had a right of sale in respect of the mortgaged property, at least with reference to the further charge created by the second deed. The mortgage was thus of a mixed or anomalous character referred to in S. 98, T. P. Act. Consequently the provisions of Rr. 7 and 8, O. 34, Civil P. C. were no bar to the passing of a decree debarring the plaintiff from redeeming the land.

We accordingly accept the revision with costs, set aside the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, and remand the application for disposal on the merits.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1638 of 1927, Decided on 3rd February 1923.

Criminal P. C., S. 481 (2)—Record silent as to state and nature of the proceeding interrupted—Conviction under S. 228, Penal Code, is not proper.

Section 481, Criminal P.C., provides that in the case of an offence under S. 228, Penal Code, the record shall show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in which the Court interrupted or insulted was sitting, and the nature of the interruption or insult. [P 357 C 1, 2]

Where, therefore, the record does not comply with the provisions of S. 481, Criminal P. C., conviction under S. 228, is not proper. [P 357 C 2]

Shambu Lal Puri—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 228, I. P. C., of having intentionally insulted and interrupted a public servant sitting in judicial proceedings. The public servant in question is the Subordinate Judge of Bhillour, and the petitioner is a decree-holder who had appeared before the Subordinate Judge on the occasion in question, in response to an order directing him to appear and bring a receipt for the payment to him of a certain decretal sum. The petitioner on arriving in the Subordinate Judge's Court apparently behaved in an improper manner. The only question is whether this impropriety constituted contempt of Court under the Criminal Procedure Code. S. 481, Criminal P. C., provides that in the case of an offence under S. 228, I. P. C., the record shall show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in which the Court interrupted or insulted, was sitting, and the nature of the interruption or insult. But the record does not show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in the course of which the interruption was made. All that the learned Subordinate Judge says in his order on this point is "I was at that time busy with execution cases." The Ahlmad who was examined stated:

I was busy with my own work. I do not know when Jattu Mal appeared. I came to know only when the Court gave orders to send for a constable. I might be at a distance of 3 yards from the seat of the presiding officer of the Court. I was, however, busy arranging records.

The Reader of the Court has described the incident as follows:

Jattu Mal appeared today. The Naib Shariff asked him to bring a receipt and take his cheque. In reply, however, he said, 'Nobody listens to me in Court. Lawlessness prevails here.' Both the Subordinate Judge and I remonstrated with him but he did not mind this and made noise all the more. And at the "time he repeated such words as above, and went on talking impertinently."

The grievance of Jattu Mal appears to be that he could not get a hearing, but nowhere can I find what exactly was the stage of the proceedings and what particular proceedings the Subordinate Judge was engaged in when the incident in question occurred.

The result is that the record does not comply with the provisions of S. 481, Criminal P. C., and for that reason the conviction must be set aside. The fine, if realized shall be refunded to the petitioner.

* Pre-emption — Covenant to indemnify vendee is personal and the pre-emptor cannot enforce it—T. P. Act S. 55.

The remarks as to the nature of the right of pre-emption to the effect that the right of pre-emption is not a right of repurchase either from the vendor or from the vendee involving any new contract to sell, but it is simply a right of substitution entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendee in respect of the rights and obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title, are to be deemed to be limited in their operation to the property actually conveyed by means of the sale-deed and the covenant to indemnify the vendee either by cash compensation or by delivery of other property of the vendor is not enforceable at the instance of the pre-emptor, because a covenant running with the land is to be distinguished from a personal covenant such as a covenant of indemnity entered into by the vendor in favour of the vendee and so, though the pre-emptor may be entitled to enforce the covenants running with land, he is not entitled to the same right with regard to covenant of indemnity which is deemed to be a personal covenant: 141 *P. M. L. Puri—for Appellant.

Ghulam Rasul—for Respondents.

Jai Lal, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession 4 kanals and 7 marlas of land bought by plaintiff under the following circumstances: One Jamun sold 5 kanals and 3 marlas out of shamilat land to Mia Lal. The plaintiff instituted a suit for pre-emption of that sale and obtained a decree and apparently executed it. Partition proceedings were thereupon taken in respect of the entire land of which the land sold was a part and it transpired in those proceedings that Jamun had only 11 marlas of land in the shamilat land sold by him to Mia Lal. In the sale-deed executed by him he had covenanted with the vendee that if the area belonging to him in the land sold be found to be less than 5 kanals 3 marlas then he would make good the deficiency in such area to the vendee out of the other land belonging to him.

The plaintiff, the successful pre-emptor, instituted the present suit for the recovery of the deficiency out of the remaining land of Jamun. This suit has been dismissed by the trial Court and also on appeal by the District Judge on the ground that the covenant to make good the deficiency was a personal one between the vendor and the vendee and that the pre-emptor who was neither a legal representative of the vendor nor the assignee of the vendee, was not entitled to take advantage of that covenant. In arriving at the conclusion the Courts below have relied upon 141 P. R. 1907. In that case the covenant which the pre-emptor sought to enforce against the vendor was that the latter would pay damages to the vendee if any part of the land sold was lost to him owing to any defect of title of the vendor and the suit was dismissed on the ground that a personal covenant of the above nature does not enure for the benefit of the pre-emptor. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the view taken in 141 P. R. 1907 is incorrect and in support of this contention relies upon a number of authorities the principal of which is Gobind Dayal v. Inayatullah (1), and in which it has been held that the right of pre-emption is not a right of re-purchase either from the vendor or from the vendee involving any new contract to sell, but it is simply a right of substitution entitling the pre-emptor by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes, of the vendee in respect of the rights and obligations arising from the sale under which he has derived his title. These remarks have been cited with approval in several other cases decided afterwards where it has further been remarked that pre-emption is a right of substitution as if the name of the vendee had been rubbed out and that of the pre-emptor substituted in the sale-deed. With this statement of the law as to the nature of the right of pre-emption we have no quarrel.

The question that really arises in this case is to what property the right of pre-emption extends: whether the plaintiff is entitled to exercise it only with regard to the property described in the sale-deed or also with regard to the other property of the vendor that may not have been so described and which the vendee may under certain circumstances have become entitled to claim from the vendor. As it may happen in some cases that such property may not be initially subject to any right of pre-emption or the pre-emptor may not have a superior claim to that of the vendee with regard to it, I consider, that the remarks quoted by me from previous authorities are to be deemed to be limited in their operation to the property actually conveyed by means of the sale-deed and that the covenant to indemnify the vendee either by cash compensation or by delivery of other property of the vendor is not enforceable at the instance of the pre-emptor.

In Bishan Singh v Mt. Bishni (2) some doubt was expressed about the correctness of the view taken in 141 P. R.

(1) [1885] 7 All. 775 = (1885) A. W. N. 182 (F. B.).

(2) [1919] 103 P. R. 1919=53 I. C. 566.

1907. The matter was not, however, finally decided and the remark appears to be in the nature of an obiter dictum. In my opinion a covenant running with the land is to be distinguished from a personal covenant, such as a covenant of indemnity entered into by the vendor in favour of the vendee. While the pre-emptor may be entitled to enforce the covenants running with land he is not entitled to the same right which regard to covenant of indemnity which is deemed to be a personal covenant. Another way to put the same proposition is this. A pre-emptor when instituting a suit to pre-empt the land asserts that the vendor had good title to the land sold by him but that he, the pre-emptor, had a prior right to purchase it as compared with the vendee. The very nature of the suit for pre-emption, therefore, implies that there is no doubt as to the title of the vendor in the land described in the sale-deed, while in a suit for compensation, as in this case, a contrary assertion has to be made by the plaintiff. Such a situation is not permitted by law. Moreover, suppose the deficiency in area had been discovered by the vendee before the sale to him was pre-empted and such deficiency had been made good to him by the vendor by giving him some land which was not initially subject to the pre-emptor's right of pre-emption, could the latter claim such land in his suit for pre-emption. The answer to this question, in my opinion, must be in the negative. I hold, therefore, that for reasons already given the view taken by the Courts below is correct and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Ram Chand Manchanda for Jivan Chand and G. C. Narang for S. R. Laul—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—In proceedings before revenue officers for partition of the shamilat deh of Mauza Harnoli, District Mianwali, the plaintiff claimed a share proportionate to his khewat holding. The revenue officers disallowed the claim, holding that he was a malik Qabaz and not entitled to any share in the shamilat deh. On 24th October 1923, the plaintiff instituted the present suit in the civil Court for a declaration that he was not a malik qabza but was entitled to a share in the shamilat deh. In this suit he impleaded 1288 persons as defendants. The case came up for hearing before the Senior Subordinate Judge, Mainwali, on 4th December 1923, when it was pointed out that Zaman Khan, defendant 25, had died on 27th July 1922, i. e., about 16 months before the institution of the suit. On this, the Court following a decision of the Madras High Court reported as Veerappa Chetty v. Tindal Ponnen (1) held that "the suit should abate," and that as it was being "dismissed for a defect, parties should bear their own costs." The next day, on 5th December 1923, some of the defendants filed an application that the documents which the plaintiff had filed in Court with the plaint should not be allowed to be taken away from the record, as the order of 4th December 1923, was appealable and the documents should be kept in Court till the expiry of limitation for the institution of the appeal. On this the learned Subordinate Judge passed an order on 6th December 1923 stating that the word "abate" had been incorrectly used in the order of 4th December 1923 in lieu of "dismissal" and that what he had actually announced to the parties in open Court and what he really intended to do was to "dismiss the suit." He accordingly directed that the usual decree sheet should be prepared and the documents filed by the plaintiff with the plaint be not returned till the expiry of limitation for filing the appeal.

(1) [1903] 31 Mad. 86=17 M. L. J. 551.

Against the orders passed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on 4th and 6th December 1923 the plaintiff has preferred a first appeal to this Court. Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda for the respondents has raised a preliminary objection that the appeal is incompetent as the order of 4th December 1923, did not amount to a "decree" and that of the 6th December 1923, did not really decide any matter in controversy between the parties, but was merely explanatory of the former order and was passed under a misapprehension of the law. In our opinion this preliminary objection is devoid of all force. The order passed by the Court on 4th December 1923, as explained by it in its order of 6th December 1923, clearly determined the rights of the parties to the suit and amounts to a "decree." The suit was dismissed and a decree formally passed. An appeal, therefore lay to this Court.

On the merits, the order of the lower Court holding that the suit "abated" against Zaman Khan and should be dismissed against the surviving defendants is obviously wrong. It is admitted by the plaintiff-appellant that Zaman Khan had died long before the suit was instituted, and that he was impleaded as a defendant by mistake. But the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in supposing that the suit would "abate" as against him. A suit or appeal "abates" under O. 22, R. 4 against a defendant or respondent if he was alive at the time when the suit or appeal was instituted and has since died. Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda for the respondents concedes that the case of a person who had died before the institution of the suit or the appeal and who was erroneously impleaded as a party does not fall within the purview of O. 22, Civil P. C. and that in such circumstances no question of "abatement" arises. In such a case the suit cannot proceed against the dead person and the proper order for the Court to pass is to strike off his name from the record and then to see whether the suit can or cannot proceed against the other defendants beause of nonjoinder of the deceased. If the deceased was a mere pro-forma party the suit might proceed against the other defendants in the ordinary way. If, however, the deceased was a necessary party, the Court should see whether amendment of the plaint can be allowed to bring his heirs on the record, and if this cannot be allowed, it should determine whether the suit can proceed against the other defendants. It cannot dismiss the suit forthwith without examining this aspect of the case. As pointed out by Campbell, J, in Palamal v. Fauja Singh (2) where a suit is brought against two defendants, one of whom happens to be dead at the time of the suit, the Court ought not to dismiss the suit against the other defendant but should strike off the name of the former under O. 1, R, 10, and proceed against the other defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied on Veerappa Chatti v. Tundal Ponnen (1), but in that case the suit had been brought against one defendant only who had admittedly died before the institution of the suit. The sole defendant on the record being a dead person, there was really no suit properly constituted and it was held that there was nothing in the Civil Procedure Code to authorize a Court to allow the plaint in such a case to be amended by substituting the names of the representatives of the deceased, even though the suit had been instituted bona fide and in ignorance of the death of the defendant. The position, however, is quite different where the deceased person is not the sole defendant but is one out of a large number of defendants.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the order passed by the lower Court cannot be sustained. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. for disposal in accordance with law. Court-fee on appeal shall be refunded and other costs shall be costs in the cause.

Referring Order

Bhide, J.—One Dewa Singh filed a petition for insolvency on 25th January 1923, and was adjudged insolvent on 12th November 1923. Two transfers of immovable property made by the insolvent on 13th May 1921, and 2nd June 1921 have been set aside by the District Judge, Jhelum, under S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act. It was contended before the learned District Judge that the sales having been made more than two years before the date on which the transferor was adjudged insolvent could not be set aside under S. 53, but the contention was overruled on the authority of Rakhal Chandra v. Sudhindra Nath Bose (1), and it was held that S. 53 was controlled by S. 28 (7), and that the order of adjudication was to be deemed to have been passed for purposes of that section on the date on which the petition of insolvency was presented.

The question of law which requires decision in this appeal is whether S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, authorizes the annulment of transfers of immovable property made by an insolvent more than two years before the actual date of adjudication, but within two years of the presentation of the petition of insolvency. The decision on this question in its turn depends on the question whether S. 53 is controlled by sub-S. 7, S. 28, and whether a person who is adjudged insolvent is to be deemed to be so adjudged for purposes of S. 53 on the date of the presentation of the petition. The authorities on the point appear to be divided. While the Calcutta and Madras High Courts and the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, have held that S. 53 is controlled by sub-S. 7, S. 28, the Bombay High Court and the Judicial Commissioners of Sind and Oudh have taken the contrary view. The latter view was also adopted by a Division Bench of this Court to which a case involving this very question was referred, in Ghulam Mahomed v. Panna Ram (2). The case dealt with in that appeal was one under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, but there is no material difference between the relevant sections of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, and the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920, so far as the question of law now before us is concerned.

The earlier authorities were reviewed and fully discussed in that case. Since that case was decided there have been two decisions of the Madras High Court, Rangiah v. Appaji Row (3) and Venkatanarasayya v. Official Receiver (4), in which that Court has adhered to the view taken in an earlier decision by a Division Bench of that Court in Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (5).

(5) [1918] 35 M. L. J. 296=9 M. L. W. 281=43 I. C. 283=(1918) M. W. N. 487.

The Bombay High Court and Judicial Commissioner of Sind, on the other hand, have adopted the contrary view in two recent decisions Nagindas Dahyabhai v. Gordhan Das (6) and Official Receiver v. Tirath Das Mewa Ram (7).

After carefully considering the argument advanced before us and the authorities cited I am inclined to agree with the view taken by the Bombay High Court, by the Judicial Commissioners of Sind and Oudh and by this Court in Ghulam Mahomed v. Panna Ram (2) referred to above. There can be no doubt that the plain wording of S. 53, as it stands, supports this view. According to that wording, the transferor must be "adjudged insolvent" within two years of the date of the transfer. It seems to my mind clear that a person cannot be said to be "adjudged insolvent" till the date on which the order of adjudication is passed. It is true that sub-S. 7, S. 28, lays down that an order of adjudication shall > relate back to and take effect from the date of the presentation of the petition on which it was made, but that sub-section seems to deal with the "effect of adjudication" as given in the section. If the intention of the legislature were that sub-S. 7 should govern the whole Act its provisions might have been expected to be embodied in a separate section rather than in a sub-section of S. 28. It is important to note in this connexion that while S. 28 deals with certain effects of an order of adjudication, the effect of such an order on antecedent transactions, have been separately dealt with in Ss. 51 to 55. These latter sections prescribe different points of time for determining the 'antecedent' character of the transactions referred to therein. S. 51, for example, refers to the "admission of the petition," S. 53 to the time when the transferor is "adjudged insolvent," S. 54 to the time when a "petition is presented," and lastly S. 55 to "the date of the order of adjudication." It may, therefore, be safely presumed that the legislature carefully chose the language according to the precise object in view in framing these sections. The wording of Ss. 53 and 54, which are analogous, deserve special attention. If the intention of the legislature had been that the provisions of sub-S. 7, S. 28, should govern the whole Act and the words "is adjudged insolvent" had been advisably used in S. 53 with reference to those provisions, it is difficult to understand why the legislature should have lost sight of those provisions in the very next section and adopted a different wording to convey the same intention. According to the ordinary rule of construction of statutes the legislature is presumed to use the same language and express the same intention, and variation of language suggests change of intention: (c.f. Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 6*th Edn. p.* 560).

I am unable to find any clear indication in the language of the relevant sections or in the scheme of the Act that the provisions of sub-S. 7, S. 28, were intended to govern those of S. 53. To take these provisions to govern the effects of adjudication throughout the Act might lead to serious anamolies. It could scarcely have been intended, e. g., that the disqualifications from adjudication as given in S. 73 should take effect from the date of presentation of the petition so as to invalidate the acts of members of local bodies or of Magistrates, etc., between that date and the actual date of adjudication, in the event of such persons becoming insolvent. The rulings which adopt the contrary view appear to proceed mainly on analogies drawn from the English Bankruptcy Act or speculations as to the intention of the legislature or the inconvenience likely to result if a different view were adopted. The analogy of the English Act is, however, misleading as the language employed in the English Act is different to that used in the Indian Act as pointed out in Ghulam Mahomed v. Panna Ram (2) and Nagindas Dahyabhai v. Gordhan Das (6).

Although the law of Insolvency in India is based to a large extent on that in England, there can be no doubt that the legislature has made a departure therefrom in several particulars. It has been recently laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council that when there is a positive enactment of the Indian legislature, the proper course is to examine the language of that statute and to ascertain its proper meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the English Law on which it may have been founded: (A.I.R. 1928. P. C. 2). It is equally well-settled that when the wording of a statute is plain it should be given effect to irrespective of any considerations as to possible inconvenience or as to the intention of the legislature as gathered from debates in the Legislative Council. It may, however, be remarked that the argument as regards inconvenience is possibly somewhat exaggerated; for the cases in which adjudication is delayed so as to bar the operation of S. 53, will be comparatively few and even in those few cases the receiver will not be left absolutely without a remedy as it will be still open to him to institute a regular suit to set aside a fraudulent transfer: see Official Receiver of South Kanara v. Bastiao Sowza (8). Lastly it must be remembered that S. 53 affects the rights of third parties and it seems scarcely equitable to import the doctrine of "relation back" into that section, unless this is clearly warranted by the language of the section.

(6) A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 480=49 Bom. 730 (731).
(7) A. I. R. 1927 Sind 66.

However, as the question of law involved is important and there is a sharp conflict of authorities, and as the ruling of this Court has not been published in the authorized report and was recently expressly dissented from by the Madras High Court, the following question might if my learned brother agrees, be referred to a Full Bench.

Can a transfer of property of the description given in S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act 1920, made by an insolvent more than 2 years before the date of the order of adjudication but within 2 years of the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency be annulled by the Court under that section.

Tek Chand, J.—The question of law involved in this case is of great importance and there is a sharp conflict of judicial opinion on it. It is necessary to have an authoratative pronouncement on the subject, so that the law may be settled, at any rate, so far as this province is concerned. I accordingly agree that the question of law formulated by my learned brother be referred to a Full Bench. The papers will be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for constituting the Bench.

Opinion

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The following question has been referred to a Full Bench for decision:

Can a transfer of property of the description given in S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 made by an insolvent more than two years before the date of the order of adjudication but within two years of the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency be annulled by the Court under that section?

In other words, suppose, a person makes a transfer of his property and is subsequently adjudged an insolvent. The insolvency Court has to decide whether the transfer is voidable as against the receiver and should, therefore, be annulled. The decision depends upon the answer to the question whether the period of two years prescribed by S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, 5 of 1920, is to be counted back from the date of the order of adjudication or from the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency. S. 53, so far as it is relevant to the present discussion, is in these terms:

> Any transfer of property . . . . shall, if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer, be voidable as against the receiver and may be annulled by the Court.

The language of the section, if interpreted literally, without any reference to any other provision of the statute, furnishes only one answer, namely, the terminus for counting the period of two years is the date of the order of adjudication; and, if the transfer was not made within two years prior to the date of that order, it would be immune from attack under that section. There is, however, another provision of the law which has an important bearing upon the matter under discussion. S. 28 deals with the effect of an order of adjudication, and sub-S. (7) of that section provides that an order of adjudication shall relate back to, and take effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition on which it is made. If S. 53 is controlled by the aforesaid sub-section, then the date from which the period of two years is to be counted is the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency.

We have, therefore, to choose between the date of the presentation of the petition for bankruptcy and the date of the order of adjudication, and there can be no doubt that it is, by no means, easy to make a choice. Cogent arguments can be advanced in favour of either view, indeed, the cases cited at the Bar reveal a sharp conflict of judicial opinion on the subject. The High Courts at Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad have decided that S. 53 must be read in the light of S. 28, sub-S. (7); and that the determining date is the date of the presentation of the application for insolvency, vide, Rakhal Chandra Purkait v. Sudhindra Nath Bose (1); Rangiah etc. v. Y. V. Appaji Rao (3): and Sheonath Singh v. Mushi Ram (9). On the other hand, the Bombay High Court has favoured the opposite view: Nagindas Dahyabhai v. Gordhan Das Dahyabhai (6); and that view has been affirmed by a Division Bench of this Court in an unreported judgment in Ghulam Mohamad v. Panna Ram (2).

(8) A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 826.

I have bestowed upon the matter my careful consideration and reached the conclusion, though not without considerable hesitation, that the date of the order of adjudication, and not the date of the presentation of the application for insolvency should determine the fate of the transfer made by an insolvent. I do not propose to dwell upon an examination of the arguments which have been, or may be, urged on both sides; but I must say that, while the application for insolvency is, in many cases, influenced by the transfer of his property made by the prospective insolvent, there is no such connexion between the date of the order of adjudication and the transfer. It is a matter of common knowledge that a person, who is unable, or does not desire, to pay his debts, often transfers his property to his relatives or friends, and subsequently he himself or his creditors move the Court to adjudge him insolvent. He has no desire to expedite the proceedings. Indeed, he frequently retards their progress, with the result that an order of adjudication is not made until after the expiry of a long period. In some cases the order of adjudication might be delayed for a long time on account of the congested state of the judicial business pending before the Court, or by reason of the failure of the presiding officer to cope with the work or to understand the law on the subject. In the meanwhile, two years prescribed by S. 53 might expire, and if that period is to be counted back from the date of the order of adjudication, fraudulent transfers might be excluded from the operation of S. 53 by a mere lapse of time. Indeed, it would be within the power of a debtor to prevent the Court from exercising its jurisdiction under that section in respect of the annulment of a voluntary or fraudulent transfer made only a few days before the presentation of the application for insolvency, if he could succeed in delaying the order of adjudication for a sufficiently long time.

It is obviously absurd that the jurisdiction of the Court to annul a transfer should depend upon a mere accident, namely, whether the order of adjudication would be made promptly or would be delayed owing to causes which might be beyond the control of the Court. But when we compare the language of S. 53 with that of S. 54, we cannot say that the doctrine of relation back, which is embodied in sub-S. (7), S. 28, was intended to be a universal rule governing and controlling all the other provisions of the statute. It is significant that S. 54 lays down in express terms that the period of three months prescribed by it for deciding whether a certain transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference is to be calculated from the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition. Now, if the order of adjudication should, for all purposes, be deemed to have been made on the date on which the petition is presented, there is no reason why the Legislature should not have adopted the same phraseology in S. 54 as in S 53. If the framers of the statute intended that the terminus in both the cases should be the same, namely, the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency, I do not understand why they should have referred in one case to the order of adjudication, and, in the other case, to the presentation of the petition for insolvency, for the purpose of counting the period. It is to be observed that S. 51, which deals with the effect of insolvency on the rights of a decree-holder executing his decree against the property of an insolvent-debtor, prescribes the date of the admission of the petition as the determining date. It is clear that the three sections lay down three different dates for deciding how antecedent transactions are affected by insolvency, and the difference in the phraseology cannot be attributed to a mere oversight on the part of the draftsman.

(9) [1920] 42 All. 433=55 I. C. 941=18 A.L.J. 449.

In view of the language employed by the Legislature in S 53 for prescribing the determining date and contrasting it with the corresponding phraseology of S. 54, I am not prepared to disent from the judgment of this Court in Ghulam Muhammad's case which lays down that the terminus for the purposes of the former section is the date on which the order of adjudication is made. It is true that the delay in making the order of adjudication might take some objectionable transactions out of the ambit of S. 53, but they would not acquire complete immunity from attack. It would be open to the receiver or the creditors to impeach their validity by bringing an action, though that remedy is neither cheap nor expeditious.

While I hold that S. 53 is not controlled by S. 28, sub-S. (7), and that the period of two years should be counted backwards from the date of the order of adjudication, I cannot help remarking that, in view of the great divergence of judicial opinion on a matter of such importance, it is the duty of the Legislature to step in and remove the uncertainty by amending the statute.

Broadway, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is as follows :

> Can a transfer of property of the description given in S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, made by an insolvent more than two years before the date of the order of adjudication but within two years of the presentation of the petition for insolvency be annulled by the Court under that section ?

There is a conflict of opinion on the point involved, the Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad High Courts with the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur giving an answer in the affirmative, while our own Court, the High Court of Bombay and the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh and Sind have answered it in the negative. The answer to the question depends on whether S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, is governed and controlled by S. 28 (7) and the cleavage of opinion between the Courts is due to their different interpretations of these sections.

The corresponding sections of Act, 1907, S. 36 and 16 (6), are in the same terms and, therefore, decisions relating to the old Act are in point. The first of these is Bhagwant v. Munim Khan (10), in which it was held that having regard to the provisions of S. 16 (6) and S. 36 of the Act of 1907 the Court had power to annul a transfer of property made by the insolvent within two years from the date of presentation of the petition. In arriving at this conclusion the learned Judicial Commissioner referred to "the discussion in the Legislative Council" which was not permissible and therefore his opinion loses some weight.

The next case is that of Jokhan Singh v. Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad (11), when Piggott, J.C., Oudh, held unequivocally that the terminus a quo was the date of adjudication and not the date of presentation of the petition.

This view was, however, not accepted by the Madras High Court in T. V. Sankaranarayana Aiyer v. Alagiri Aiyar (5), where it was held that S. 36 was controlled by S. 16 (6) and that the terminus a quo was the date of presentation of the petition.

To this view the Madras High Court has consistently adhered in Rangiah v. Y. V. Appaji Rao (3), and Venkatanarasayya v. Official Receiver Godavary (4), reference being made to Rakhal Chandra Purkait v. Sudhindra Nath Bose (1), which was followed, and Nagindas Dahyabhai v. Gordhan Das Dahyabhai (6), as well as to Ghulam Muhammad v. Panna Ram (2), which were dissented from.

In the Bombay and Lahore cases the question was discussed, and, as has already been said, the conclusion arrived at was that the two years must be taken to date back from the actual date of adjudication, S. 53 not being controlled in this connexion by S. 28 (7).

This also was the view taken by the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in the Official Receiver v. Tirath Das Mewa Ram (7), (Sind 1926) after an elaborate discussion.

In Sheonath Singh v. Munshi Ram (9) the point under discussion was not directly in issue but Piggott and Walsh, JJ. appear to have approved of Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (5), no reference, however, being made to Piggott, J's clear decision in Jokhan Singh v. Deputy Commissioner Fyzabad (11). The force of their approval is also somewhat reduced by remarks to be found in Hari Chand Rai v. Moti Ram (12) though here again this point was not directly in issue.

(10) [1910] 6 N. L. R. 146=8 I. C. 1115.

(11) [1914] 23 I. C. 924.

This being the state of the case law on the point it is necessary to examine the Act itself which, it will be seen is divided into various parts.

Part 2 deals with "proceedings from Act of Insolvency to discharge" and is again divided into sub-heads, S. 28 appearing under the sub-head "order of adjudication" and after dealing with the vesting of the insolvent's property concludes with sub-S. 7 which runs :

(7) An order of adjudication shall relate back to, and take effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition on which it is made.

Section 53 is to be found in Part 3 "Administration of Property" under the sub-head "effect of insolvency on antecedent transactions" and runs :

Section 53—any transfer of property * * shall if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer, be voidable as against the receiver and may be annulled by the Court.

It has been contended that this section is based on S. 42, English Bankruptcy Act, and should be construed accordingly. The English Act is, however, phrased somewhat differently and S. 42 runs Any settlement of property * * shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years after the date of the settlement, be void against the trustee in bankruptcy * *.

The language here is plain and clearly lays down that the terminus a quo is the becoming bankrupt. We have been asked to hold, however, that the intention of the Indian Legislature was to adopt the English rule and that the expression "becoming bankrupt" is adjudged insolvent should be treated as synonymous.

It seems to me that to do this would be to transgress against the ordinary canons of interpretation. Whatever the intention of the Indian Legislature may have been (and I am afraid that intention is not too apparent to me) we have to construe and interpret the actual words enacted and give them their ordinary meaning unless and until some other meaning can fairly and reasonably be deduced. As I have said this section appears under the sub-head dealing with the "effect of insolvency on antecedent transactions" which contains six sections viz., Ss. 51, 52, 53, 54 54A and 55, and a reference to these will show that the legislature has thought it expedient to fix the terminus a quo differently as occasion demanded. And some of these differentiations appear to be irreconcilable with the claim that S. 28 (7) was intended to control the rest of the Act. In Ss. 51 and 52 the terminus a quo is fixed as the date of the admission of the petition and, being a departure from the rule contended for, this is comprehensible.

In S. 54 a three months period of limitation is provided for the avoidance of the transfers referred to therein, the time to date back from the date of the petition on which the transferor is adjudged insolvent.

If it was argued, S. 28 (7) controlled the other sections of the Act and by the doctrine of "relation back" the effect of the adjudication was to make everything date back to the date of the petition what was the necessity to enact specifically that the three months limitation provided for here was to have for its terminus a quo the date of the petition. It seems to me that there is force in this contention.

Section 54-A is irrelevant to the matter under consideration, but in S. 55 again the legislature has enacted a proviso which lays down that for the avoidance of the transactions mentioned in this section a limitation is fixed, the starting point being the date of the adjudication.

In view of these various starting points can it be definitely stated that by using the words "adjudged insolvent" in S. 53 it was intended that the terminus a quo for that section should by the operation of the doctrine of "relation back" as enacted in S. 28(7) be the date of the petition.

Under the English Law a man becomes bankrupt when he commits an act of bankruptcy thus rendering himself liable to be adjudged or declared a bankrupt, and under the English Act the doctrine of fiction of "relation back" operates so as to make the act of bankruptcy (i. e., when a man becomes bankrupt) the point from which the prescribed period of limitation is to run.

(12) A. I. R. 1926 All. 470=48 All. 414.

In India the "relation back" as provided for by S. 28(7) refers only to the date of the presentation of the petition on which the order is made and not [except in cases covered by S. 6 (f)] to the acts of insolvency themselves as enumerated in the said section.

Here then at the outset is a notable departure from the scheme of the English Bankruptcy Law.

If it was the intention of the Indian Legislature to make S. 28(7) control the rest of the Act the variations referred to in Ss. 51, 52, and the proviso to S. 55 are reconcilable—being departures from the general scheme—but it does not appear possible to reconcile the language of S. 54.

This section provides that the starting point for limitation shall be the date of the presentation of the petition on which the person referred to is adjudged insolvent. This is merely a repetition of the provisions of S. 28(7) though worded a little differently, and there appears to be no reason why this section should have been so worded if S. 28(7) was to control the rest of the Act. If by the operation of S. 28(7) the adjudication order was to take effect as though it had been made on the date of the presentation of the petition on which it was made then there seems to be no reason why that fact should have been repeated here. And again if it was necessary to do so here then why was it not so in S. 53? Further I find it difficult to see how S. 28 (7) could apply to and control S. 73 of the Act.

I fully realize that this construction may, at times, enable an insolvent by prolonging the proceedings, to evade the consequences of S. 53, but I do not think it justifiable to put a different meaning on the words for that reason. In any event the creditor and the receiver are not left without a remedy. Though they cannot avoid the transaction by having it annulled under this section they are still free to take proceedings under the ordinary law, vide Official Receiver South Kanara v. Bastiao Sowza (8) and possibly S. 4 would afford them assistance. After a careful consideration of the authorities referred to and the arguments advanced at the Bar it seems to me that the view taken by the High Court of Bombay is more in consonance with the correct interpretation of the sections and I would, therefore, answer the question referred to us in the negative.

Tek Chand, J.—I have read the judgments prepared by the learned Chief Justice and my brother Broadway and have very little to add.

After carefully considering the provisions of the Act, the relevant decisions of the various High Courts and the arguments addressed to us at the Bar, I am of opinion that the point of time from which the period of two years prescribed in S. 53, Provincial Insolvency Act, is to be counted is the date on which the order of adjudication was passed and not the date on which the application to have the transferor declared insolvent was made. That section contains the substantive rule of bankruptcy law declaring certain kinds of transfers to be voidable as against the receiver, and also fixed the period within which the transfer must have been made in order to come within the ambit of the rule. It is the latter point alone with which we are concerned here, and it seems to me that the language used by the legislature to express its meanning is not open to any doubt. It is conceded that the words > if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer can only mean that the two years are to be calculated backwards from the date on which the order of adjudication was passed. But it is contended that S. 53 is to be read along with, and subject to, Cl. (7) of S. 28, in which it is provided that an order of adjudication shall relate back to, and take effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition on which it was made. It is urged that the combined effect of the two sections is to push back the terminus a quo to the date of the presentation of the application. I cannot, however, see how S. 28 can be at all brought in to modify the point of time specifically fixed by the legislature in S. 53 for counting the period. The former section is intended to invalidate the debtor's dealings with the property during the period for which the petition to have him declared insolvent remains pending, and provides that in the event of the proceedings materialising into an order of adjudication, the title of the receiver shall "relate back" to the date of the petition. It cannot, in the absence of express words to the contrary, be taken to control all other provisions of the Act, and certainly not S. 53, which in clear and explicit language states that it will be operative only if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer. I have no doubt that in order to attract the provisions of that section the critical date is not the date from which the order of adjudication might, for certain other purposes, be deemed to take effect, but the date on which the order itself came into existence.

It should also be borne in mind that the part of S. 53, which we are construing fixes the period of limitation for the avoidance (subject to certain conditions) of voluntary transfers, and it is a well-settled canon of interpretation of statutes, that a provision of this kind must be construed according to the exact and specific language used in the enactment. Such a restrictive provision ought not to be given an extended construction, and it is not permissible to the Court to strain the wording with a view to bring in its purview transactions which are believed to be within the reason of the statute but which are not covered by the phraseology employed to express it.

The rulings which take the contrary view have (if I may say so with all respect) been unduly influenced by extraneous considerations and have paid greater regard to the principles of English Bankruptcy law, on which the Indian Acts are undoubtedly based. But it must not be forgotten that the Indian Legislature has departed from the English statutes in several important particulars, and its Acts—particularly the Provincial Act—are not mere servile copies of the former. In view of the fact that S. 53 of Act 5 of 1920, and S. 36 of Act 3 of 1907 which it replaced, are materially different from the corresponding provisions of the English statute (S. 42 of 4 & 5 Geo. V. c. 59), I am not prepared to accept as correct the ratio decidendi of the leading Madras judgment in Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (5), where Sadasiva Aiyar, J., observed that the > Indian Legislature in its Act of 1907, enacted for the mofussil, did not intend to depart from the principles and the reasons for the provision made in the English Bankruptcy Act * * * * except in matters of detail.

As pointed out by Lord Sinha in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Mt. Ramanandi Kuer v. Mt. Kalawati Kuer (A I. R. 1928 P. C. 2).

> where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the proper course is to examine the language of that statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law or of the English law upon which it may be founded.

Nor am I pressed by the argumentum ab incovenienti which seems to have influenced the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Rakhal Chandra Purkait v. Sudhindra Nath Bose (1), that if the section is construed according to its plain wording, it is likely to defeat the general policy of the Act and to lend itself to abuse by dishonest and litigious debtors. The danger is no doubt real, but the remedy lies with the legislature which must, as observed by the learned Chief Justice, interevene to remove it.

A great deal has been said about the merits of the doctrine of "relation back." There is no gainsaying the fact that it is a salutary provision of the law, but it must be remembered that even in England, it is now administered in all its original severity as embodied in 13 Eliz. 7 and legislation has been repeatedly undertaken to limit its scope. Indeed an eminent English Judge, Lord Mansfield, has remarked that > the doctrine of the relation of the act of bankruptcy is in all cases extremely hard, and in many, shocking, and it is not to be carried further than we are compelled to carry it (Coles v. Wright: 4 Taunt 198).

For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the reference to the Full Bench must be answered in the negative.

Tek Chand, J. — On the 22nd January 1920, one Nur, an Awan of the Shahpur District, appeared before the village patwari and stated that he had made an oral settlement (tamlik-zabani) of his entire holding on his wife Mt. Sahib Khatun, defendant 1, and his predeceased son's son Ghulam Muhammad, in equal shares. The patwari entered the mutation which was put up before the Tahsildar for sanction on 22nd March 1920. On that date Nur appeared again and made a statement to the following effect :

My heirs after me are my wife Mt. Sahib Khatun and my grandson Ghulam Muhammad, minor. I settle my land by way of tamlik on both of them in equal shares.

No objection was raised by anyone against the above settlement and the mutation was accordingly effected in favour of the two donees in equal shares. Shortly afterwards Ghulam Muhammad preferred an appeal against the order of the Tahsildar sanctioning the mutation urging that the donor had no power to make the settlement on Mt., Sahib Khatun This appeal was rejected but the appellate Court expressed the opinion that the gift in favour of Mt. Sahib Khatun was in lieu of maintenance and directed that in column 9 of the mutation register the words 'hiba biae guzara' be added after Mt. Sahib Khatun. Some time after this, Ghulam Muhammad, the grandson of Nur, died childless.

On the 20th March 1922 Mt. Sahib Khatun describing herself as full owner of the half share which she had received by way of tamlik from Nur, executed a deed of gift in favour of Mt. Nur Bhari, defendant 2, who is the sister of Nur. The plaintiffs who are the collaterals of Nur in the sixth degree have instituted the present suit to contest this second gift. It is contended on their behalf that the tamlik by Nur in favour of Mt. Sahib Khatun dated 22nd January, 1920, did not confer an absolute estate upon her and that consequently she was incompetent to transfer the property to Mt. Nur Bhari. The lower Court has rejected this contention and has held that the tamlik conferred an absolute estate on Mt. Sahib Khatun. The suit has been accordingly dismissed and the plaintiffs appeal.

After hearing the appellants' counsel we are of opinion that there is no force in this appeal. The alienation by Nur is described as a tamlik which connotes that the property alienated has been settled in full ownership on the donee. Again the donor in his statement before the Tahsildar described both Ghulam Muhammad and Mt. Sahib Khatun as his warisan, and made no distinction as to the rights that were being conferred on them. In these circumstances it must be held that Mt. Sahib Khatun had become full owner of the property in suit and could validly gift it to Mt. Nur Bhari : see Suraj Mani v. Rabi Nath (1) and Mohan Lal v. Niranjan Das (2).

Mr. Saunders has laid stress on the opinion expressed by the Assistant Collector on appeal, that the gift to Mt. Sahib Khatun was merely in lieu of maintenance. But his opinion is not relevant and cannot be taken into consideration in ascertaining the real nature of the transaction.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Article 40 (c) deals with a case in which a separate instrument offering additional or substituted security is executed subsequent to the original mortgage transaction, which had been reduced to writing in previously completed instrument. Fakir Chand and Chandra Gupta—for Appellants.

Ghulam Rasul and Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—On 3rd March 1921, Khawaja Ghulam Hassan (predecessor-in-interest of defendants 1 to 7) Khuda Bakhsh (defendant 8) and Mt. Khadija Begum (defendant 9) executed a mortgage-deed (Exhibit P. 1) in favour of the plaintiffs whereby they mortgaged house No. 1587, and a vacant site for Rs. 6,000. The deed contained a clause that if the house and the vacant site aforesaid were found insufficient to pay off the mortgage charge, the mortgagees would be entitled to recover the deficiency from the one-half share of shops Nos. 369, 370 and 371 belonging to Ghulam Hasan and house No. 1846/1847 belonging to Mt. Khadija Begam. This deed was written on a non-judicial stamp for Rs. 60 and was duly registered.

Nothing having been paid by the defendants to discharge their liability, the plaintiffs sued in 1923 for recovery of Rs. 7,437-8-0 due to them on foot of the mortgage and prayed that house No. 1587 and the vacant site be sold in the first instance and the deficiency (if any) be made good by sale of one-half share of shops Nos. 369 to 371 and house Nos. 1846/1847

The defendants raised a number of pleas, of which the only one material for the purposes of this appeal is that the mortgage-deed was not properly stamped inasmuch as an additional stamp of Rs. 5 was payable on the stipulation in the deed by which shops Nos. 369 to 371 and house No. 1846/1847 were offered as collateral security.

The learned Subordinate Judge upheld this contention and held that an agreement to charge these last mentioned properties should have been executed on a properly stamped paper under Art. 40 (c), Sch. 1, Stamp Act and required registration under S. 17, Registration Act and as this was not done it was unenforceable. He accordingly rejected the plaintiffs' claim to proceed against the shops Nos. 369 to 371 and house No. 1846/1847 as collateral security and passed a preliminary decree for the full sum claimed recoverable (a) by sale of house No. 1587 and the vacant site only and (b) if the sale-proceeds were insufficient to pay off the decree, from the other property of defendants 8 to 9.

The plaintiffs appeal and pray that the preliminary decree be modified so as to provide that if the amount recovered by sale of house No. 1587 and the site be found insufficient to discharge the decretal amount the properties excluded by the lower Court may also be sold and the deficiency made good therefrom.

At the hearing Mr. Ghulam Rasul for the respondents raised a preliminary objection that the memorandum of appeal was not properly stamped inasmuch as a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only had been paid. He contended that as the prayer in appeal is to make the properties excluded by the lower Court also liable for the mortgage money, an ad valoram Court-fee was payable. This question was, however, raised by the Deputy Registrar at the time when the appeal was presented and was referred for decision to the taxing officer, who held on 19th September 1923 that the Court-fee paid was sufficient. This decision of the taxing officer is final under S. 5, Court fees Act, and whether it is right or wrong it is not open to this Bench to go behind it. The preliminary objection fails and is overruled.

On the merits the case is a very simple one. As already pointed out, the learned Subordinate Judge has refused to enforce the stipulation offering the shops and the house as additional security on the ground that the document was not properly stamped and that it required registration. We confess we are unable to appreciate the learned Judge's objection on the score of want of registration. The deed (Ex. P. 1) is a registered instrument and Mr. Ghulam Rasul for the respondents has frankly admitted that he is unable to support the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge on this ground. He contends, however, that the deed in question is insufficiently stamped. He urges that in reality it embodies two distinct contracts; one by all the three executants mortgaging house No. 1587 and the site for Rs. 6,000, and the other by Ghulam Hassan and Mt. Khadija Begam only whereby they agreed to make one-half share in the shops Nos. 369 to 371 and house No. 1846/1847 liable as collateral security for the mortgage debt. In support of his argument the learned counsel relies on S. 5 and Art. 40 (c), Stamp Act. We are, however, of opinion that neither of these provisions is applicable to this case. Art 40 (c) deals with a case in which a separate instrument offering additional or substituted security is executed subsequent to the original mortgage transaction, which had been reduced to writing in previously completed instrument. This is admittedly not the case here, as the stipulation as to the original mortgage and the collateral security were made simultaneously and were both embodied in one and the same deed (Ex. P. 1).

Similarly S. 5 is inapplicable as it has not been shown that the deed in question embodies two separate and distinct matters. That section does not apply to a document, which embodies different covenants relating to the same transaction. The test is not whether the instrument embodies distinct contracts, but whether it comprises distinct matters. As pointed out in Stamp Duty In re (1) "distinct contracts are immaterial if they relate to the same transaction". To the same effect are Mura v. Kahan (2) and Secretary to the Commr. of Salt, Abkari and Separate Revenue, Madras (3). In the present case the transaction was one and one only, the subject-matter of the agreement being the repayment of the amount advanced. The mere fact that there were two covenants in the deed, the first making certain properties chargeable in the first instance, and the second providing that in the event of the sale proceeds of the aforesaid properties being found insufficient the mortgagees would be entitled to proceed against certain other properties, does not in any way affect the question. We hold, therefore, that the deed was properly stamped and stipulation entitling the plaintiffs to proceed against the shops and house in question is legally enforceable.

We accordingly accept the appeal, and direct that in the preliminary decree passed by the lower Court it be provided that in the event of the sale-proceeds of house No. 1587 and the site being found insufficient to discharge the decretal amount, the plaintiffs-appellants shall be entitled to bring to sale one-half share of shops Nos 369 to 371 (present No. 393) and house No. 1846/1847. The appellants shall get their costs in this Court.

Barkat Ali and others—Plaintiffs and Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1336 of 1927, Decided on 22nd December 1927, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 21st March 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 32, Rr. 12 and 13—The case of a defendant who becomes major during the pendency of the suit is not provided for—Notice of the case need not be given to him—In his absence Court has jurisdiction to try the case and the decree passed by the Court is not nullity.

Rules 12 and 13, O. 32, Civil P. C. lay down the course that a plaintiff may follow on attaining majority but there is no corresponding rule relating to a defendant who should become major during the pendency of a suit. The reason for this omission obviously is that while a plaintiff on becoming major can put an end to the litigation a defendant on attaining majority cannot do so and the case must proceed. He has notice of the case already and so no further notice of it need be given to him. It is absurd to say that the plaintiff or the Court should give notice to him that he had become major, a fact which he must know. If he should fail to take any action on attaining majority the presumption is that he chose to allow the case to be conducted by his quondam guardian or by the counsel that was engaged by that guardian. It cannot in these circumstances be said that the Court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the case or that the decree passed by it is a nullity. [P 373 C 1]

The decree in favour of a reversioner in a former suit operates as res judicata in the subsequent suit brought by other reversioners against the same defendants if they have a right in common arising out of the same cause of action and are, therefore, litigating under the same title in the later suit. Judgment.*—The two connected appeals Nos. 1336 and 1337 of 1927 which arise out of two separate suits involve same questions of law. The subject-matter of litigation is an occupancy holding which was once in the joint possession of two brothers Shadi and Hadi who were Arain agriculturists. Shadi died leaving him surviving a married daughter named Mt. Jhando. On the death of Shadi his one—half share in the holding devolved upon Hadi. As Hadi was childless he gifted the entire holding to Nur Ilahi, the husband of Mt. Jhando. It so happened that Mt. Jhando as well as the two sons that she had borne to Nur Ilahi died and Nur Ilahi remarried. A son was born of this second marriage whose name is Barkat Ali. When Nur Ilahi died the holding was mutated in the name of Barkat Ali who was then a minor, but the reversioners of Shadi and Hadi contested Barkat Ali's right to succeed on the ground that the gift to Nur Ilahi was only for the benefit of Mt. Jhando and her children, and that as Jhando and her children had all died the property gifted must revert to the collaterals of the donor according to the general rule of custom applying to agricultural tribes. One of these reversioners, namely, Umra brought a suit for possession of his share in the holding. In that suit the rest of the reversioners were impleaded as co-defendants and the two sons of one of these co-defendants figured as co-plaintiffs with Umra. But these two co-plaintiffs had no right of succession as their father was alive, and so the suit was decreed with regard to the one-fourth share of Umra alone. As Barkat Ali was then a minor his mother was appointed his guardian ad litem and she engaged a member of the local bar to defend the action. It appears that Barkat Ali attained majority on 10th January 1924 and the evidence in that case was closed on 28th January 1924. The fact that Barkat Ali had become major was not brought to the notice of the Court and Umra's claim was decreed on 3rd March 1924. An appeal against that decree was lodged on behalf of Barkat Ali by one Ghaus representing him to be a minor. This appeal was dismissed and a further appeal by Barkat Ali himself to the High Court was also dismissed.

That litigation having thus finally ended, some of the remaining reversioners who were co-defendants of Barkat Ali in the former case brought the present suit for possession of their share in the holding. Barkat Ali on the other hand, instituted a counter-suit for a declaration that the decree against him in the former suit was a nullity because he had become major before it had been passed and he was not given notice to appear and defend the action, while his quondum guardian was then "functus officio." The trial Court dismissed Barkat Ali's suit and decreed that of the reversioners. On appeal by Barkat Ali, the learned

* [Letters Patent Appeal No. 48 of 1928 against this judgment was dismissed on 22nd March 1928.]

Additional District Judge of Jullundur has reveresed both these decrees.

Now, as regards Barkat Ali's suit the learned Additional District Judge's finding was that all the proceedings in the former suit against Barkat Ali that took place after the date of his majority were ultra vires, but he cited no law or authority in support of this conclusion. On the other hand, he observed that there is nothing in O. 32 (Civil P. C.,) to show that it was necessary to issue a notice to the appellant on his attainment of majority. On the contrary it would appear that it was his duty on attaining the age of majority to apply to the Court to remove his guardian ad litem and to allow him to conduct the case in person.

Rules 12 and 13, O. 32, Civil P. C., lay down the course that a plaintiff may follow on attaining majority, but there is no corresponding rule relating to a defendant who should become major during the pendency of a suit. The reason for this omission obviously is that while a plaintiff on becoming major can put an end to the litigation a defendant on attaining majority cannot do so and the case must proceed. He has notice of the case already and so no further notice of it need be given to him. It is absurd to say that the plaintiff or the Court should give notice to him that he had become major, a fact which he must know. If he should fail to take any action on attaining majority, the presumption is that he chose to allow the case to be conducted by his quondam guardian or by the counsel that was engaged by that guardian. It cannot in these circumstances be said that the Court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the case or that the decree passed by it was a nullity. Moreover that decree could be impugned and appealed against on that very ground. As it was not impugned on that ground it became final and binding on Barkat Ali.

It was further contended that the decree in the former suit was not binding on Barkat Ali because his guardian had been guilty of negligence in defending the action. But there is no indication of any negligence on her part on the record. On the other hand, it appears that she did all that she could possibly do, that is to say, she engaged counsel and left the case in his hands. The counsel appears to have done his best in supporting the defendant's pleas.

I, therefore, accept the reversioner's appeal in this case and setting aside the decree of the lower appellate Court restore that of the trial Court and order Barkat Ali to pay the appellant's costs throughout.

As regards the other appeal it is clear that the decree in favour of Umra reversioner in the former suit operates as res-judicata in the present. Umra and the other reversioners had a right in common arising out of the same cause of action and evidently the parties in the present case are litigating under the same title. Now Expln. 6 to S. 11, Civil P. C., runs thus:

> Where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others all persons interested in such right shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating.

In view of the above explanation the rule of res judicata appears fully applicable to the present case.

The learned counsel for Barkat Ali contends that this rule does not apply because the decision in the former case was erroneous. The question for decision in the former suit as well as in the present was whether the estate left by Nur Ilahi was heritable by his sons or by the reversioners of the donor, Hadi, or in other words whether the gift to Nur Ilahi was an absolute gift to him or was really a gift to enure for the benefit of Mt. Jhando and her offspring. If it was to enure for the benefit of Mt. Jhando then according to the general rule of custom the estate must revert to the collaterals of the donor on the death of Nur Ilahi. Barkat Ali's counsel contends on the other hand that whatever might have been the object of the donor succession is governed by the rule laid down in S. 59, Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887 and the alleged custom does not apply and alter that rule and he relies upon 52 P. R. 1906 Aisha Bibi v. Azizuddin (1), and Dewan Singh v. Kishen Singh (2). But those rulings are distinguishable. The cases which contain a discussion on this point are Hardit Singh v. Gopal Singh (3) and Baggu v. Mt. Dani (4). In the former case Chatterji, J., observed as follows :

The Punjab Tenancy Act is intended mainly to lay down the law governing the relations of the landlord and tenant in the Punjab. S. 59 of this Act does not embody the whole law applicable to the tenancy, viz., as regards the right of succession to it qua the landlords as well as persons mentioned in the section are concerned, and also as regards the right of alienation possessed by the holder of the tenancy qua the latter class. S. 59 gives the order of succession when such a question does arise. It does not and cannot mean also to say that the question of succession must arise. This section does not create an absolute and indefeasible right of succession in the persons named therein.

In Baggu v. Mt. Dani (4), it was held that the mere fact that the landlords have consented to an alienation of the land by an occupancy tenant does not take away from the reversioners any right which they might otherwise have had to contest it under Customary law.

In view of the principle laid down in the above rulings it cannot be said that the decision in the former case was erroneous. The result is that this appeal is also accepted. The order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the trial Court restored. Barkat Ali will pay the costs of the appellants throughout.

* Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 10—First application for adjudication dismissed for failure to produce evidence—Second application is not barred.

The dismissal of first petition for being adjudicated an insolvent for failure to produce evidence does not bar the second petition on the general principles of res judicata as there is in the case of former application no trial on the merits : 10 A. L.J. 51, Foll. [P 375 C 1]

Bashir Ahmad for Zafar Ullah Khan —for Appellants.

Hazara Singh Uppal (for Ram Rattan) Amar Nath and Dial Das — for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants applied to be adjudicated insolvents but the petition was dismissed on 5th February 1927, on the ground that they were not entitled to a fresh opportunity of proving their inability to pay their debts as they had failed to take advantage of the opportunity already given them i. e., the application was dismissed for failure of the petitioners to produce evidence. Shortly afterwards the appellants put in another application to be adjudicated insolvents. This application has been dismissed by the learned District Judge on the ground that the general principle of res judicata applies and that a fresh application on the same facts did not lie. Against this decision this appeal has been preferred.

Had the first decision been on the merits, there is no doubt that the second application would not have lain on the general principle of res judicata. It was so held in the Full Bench ruling 75 P. R. 1905. In the present case the facts stated in the two petitions are the same ; the only distinction is that Gian Chand instead of being an ordinary creditor had become a judgment-creditor, while Mt. Sardar Bibi had instituted a suit for her debt at the time the second application for insolvency was put in. It makes no difference whether a person is an ordinary creditor or a judgment-creditor. It was argued, however, that the Full Bench ruling is not applicable as the first application was dismissed not on the merits but for failure to produce evidence. This was the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Salig Ram v. Ram Kishen Das (1), where it was held that the matter was not res judicata as the question had never been tried. In Abdul Aziz v. Habid Mistry (2) and Ram Prasad v. Mahadeb Lal (3) the Calcutta and Patna High Courts held that if an insolvency petition was dismissed in default, a second application was not barred on the general principles of res judicata as the first petition had not been dismissed on the merits.

On the whole it seems to me that the petitioners are entitled to a disposal of their case on the merits under the insolvency Act. 75 P. R. 1905 is not in point as the first petition in that case was decided on the merits. I do not think that S. 18, Insolvency Act helps the respondents. I hold, following the Allahabad decision, that the dismissal of the first petition for failure to produce evidence does not bar the second petition on the general principles of res judicata as there was no trial on the merits. I, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the proceedings to him to be decided on the merits. Parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

(1) [1912] 10 A. L. J. 51=15 I. C. 51.
(2) [1919] 49 I. C. 229.

Thakardwara (Pheru Mal of Amritsar) —Plaintiff—Appellant.

Ishar Das and others—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 683 of 1927, Decided on 27th February 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, D/- 10th December 1926.

(a) Hindu Law—Temple—Temple is not a juridical person.

An idol is a juridical person and similarly a Matt but to extend this doctrine to include the building in which the idol is deposited as in some way itself becoming a religious institution is a most unwarranted extension of this doctrine and would result in two juridical persons co-existing in the same institution. [P 375 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C. O. 1, R. 9—Applicability.

Order 1, R. 9, Civil P. C., presupposes that there are certain parties properly before the Court and certain other necessary parties are not before the Court. It has no application to a case where there is no party on the one side present in Court at all. [P 376 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C. O. 6 R. 17—Amendment changing plaintiff's name from temple to idol not applied for in trial Court—Amendment cannot be allowed.

Where in the trial Court there was no question of an application to amend the plaint by changing the name of the plaintiff from the name of the temple to the name of the idol but the question was for the first time raised at the stage of appeal,

Held: that to allow the amendment at the appellate stage might result in all kinds of complications and practically involve a retrial of the suit from the very beginning and so the application cannot be allowed. [P 376 C 1]

Mehr Chand Mahajan and S. R. Laul for Gobind Ram Khanna—for Appellant.

Badri Das and Bhawani Singh Puri for Dev Raj Sawhney—for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—The plaintiff in this case was described as Mandar Thakardwara known as Pheru Mal and sued through Durga Das, the manager of the said temple. The facts are that defendant 1 in the present case, Ishar Das, obtained a money decree against Durga Das, Banarsi Das, Ram Lubhaya and Ram Parkash. In execution of that money decree he attached certain property which forms the subject-matter of the present suit, it being claimed that this land is the property of the Thakardwara, known as Pheru Mal, is Waqf for charitable purposes and that Durga Das is only Manager of the said property. It was objected by the defendants that the Thakardwara could not sue through Durga Das. The learned Subordinate Judge held that while an idol has a judicial status in the sense of being a juridical person, a temple which is merely a religious building or a building for the performance of religious ceremonies is not such a juridical person and therefore cannot be a plaintiff. He next held on the contention that there had only been a misdescription of the plaintiff and that the plaint could be amended, that no such application to amend had actually been made before him and, therefore, no question of amendment arose. On these findings he held that the suit as framed was not maintainable and dismissed the suit.

In appeal before us it has been contended that the Thakardwara is a juridical person and can sue. In support of this it has been urged that the Thakardwara must be taken as equivalent to a Matt and, therefore, is a juridical person as is also shown by the fact that the property dedicated was dedicated to the Thakardwara itself and not to the idol. In the alternative it was contended that the Thakardwara must be considered as equivalent to the idol and, therefore, a juridical person. The case that the Thakardwara is juridical person under either of these contentions has not, in our opinion, been at all made out. It seems to us that the rulings are clear that an idol is a juridical person by reason of the judicial recognition of Hindu religion and custom on this point. Similarly a Matt is a juridical person; but to extend this doctrine to include the building, in which the idol is deposited, as in some way itself becoming a religious institution is to our mind a most unwarranted extension of this doctrine and would result in two juridical persons coexisting in the same institution. We, therefore, repel this contention.

It is contended next that in any event the suit should not be dismissed as this is only a misdescription of the plaintiff. O. 1, R. 9, has been cited in support of this contention, but it clearly does not apply as it presupposes that there are certain parties properly before the Court and certain other necessary parties are not before the Court. It has, therefore, no application to a case where there is no party on the one side present in Court at all.

Next, Nanak Chand v. E. I. Ry. Co. (1) Raghunathji v. Lal Chand (2) and Mahomed Yusuf v. Himalayan Bank Ltd. (3) have been cited in support of allowing amendment, and it is urged that the misdescription in all these cases was similar. The facts, however, of those rulings are quite different, but quite apart from the question of the rulings in this particular case the defendants raised an objection that the Thakardwara could not sue. The plaintiff, however, insisted that the Thakardwara could sue and an issue was framed and parties led evidence on all the issues framed in the case and then the Court decided that the suit as framed could not proceed. In the trial Court it seems that there was no question of an application to amend the plaint. We can only, therefore, hold that it was for the first time at the stage of appeal that an application was made to be allowed to amend the plaint.

In these circumstances we consider that to allow the amendment at this stage might result in all kinds of complications and practically involve a retrial of the suit from the very beginning. It has been admitted by counsel for the appellant that the idol can still sue to have its rights, if any, declared and is not barred by limitation. The matter, therefore, resolves, if this view is correct and we express no opinion on it now, into a question of Court-fee or of costs, and we see no reason why we should allow any indulgence to the plaintiff under the circumstances of this case. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

TEK CHAND, J.

Kanshi Ram—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Hindustan National Bank, Ltd.—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Misc. First Appeal No. 1580 of 1927, Decided on 7th November 1927, against order of Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 12th March 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 38, R. 5—A liquidation Court acting under the provisions of the Companies Act can make an order of attachment.

Proceedings under the Companies Act are proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction. A liquidation Court has therefore in a proper case power to make an order of attachment before judgment in accordance with the provisions of O. 38, R 5. [P 377 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 38, R. 5—Jurisdiction.

A Court can attach before judgment property situate beyond its local limits. [P 378 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 38 R. 5—District Court acting under S. 164, Companies Act, has powers of a High Court—It can order attachment before judgment of property outside its jurisdiction.

Under S. 164, Companies Act, the District Judge is for the purpose of winding up a Company deemed to be the "Court" within the meaning of Act and has, for purposes of such winding up, all the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court and therefore he has power to order attachment before judgment of property situate beyond his jurisdiction. [P 378 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C., O. 38, R. 5—Jurisdiction to attach property before judgment should be sparingly used—Previous notice to the opposite party is necessary.

The jurisdiction of Courts in attaching property before judgment is of an extraordinary nature and must be very sparingly exercised. In such cases the Court proceeds to attach the property of the defendant before the respective rights of the parties are determined and it is absolutely necessary, that in exercising these powers, Court should strictly adhere to the procedure prescribed by the Code and it should issue notice to the opposite party calling upon him to furnish security for satisfying any decree that may eventually be passed against him or to show cause why he should not furnish security and it is only when he had appeared and failed to furnish the security or, show cause that the Court can under R. 6 pass an order attaching his property. The provision of R. 5 can only be invoked if the Court is satisfied that the respondent is about to dispose of the whole or any part of the property. [P 378 C 1]

Mool Chand—for Appellant.

Madan Gopal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—By an order of this Court the Hindustan National Bank, Limited, was ordered to be wound up and Mr. Madan Gopal, Advocate, was appointed as the official liquidator. It was also directed that all subsequent proceedings in winding up be had in the Court of the District Judge, Lahore.

On the 6th January 1927, the official liquidator presented to the District Judge an application under S. 235, Companies Act, praying that an enquiry be made into the conduct of 16 persons who were named in the petition and who were alleged to have committed acts of malfeasance and misfeasance with respect to the property of the Company and that all or such of these persons, as may be found guilty of having committed such acts, may be directed to compensate the Company for the loss so caused. One of these 16 persons was Kanshi Ram, Assistant Engineer, Sukkur, (No. 8). In the application nothing was stated to indicate the position that he held in the Company, nor were any acts of misfeasance or malfeasance specified which he was supposed to have done. Mr. Madan Gopal points out that this was a mere slip of the pen and that really it was intended to proceed against him as one of the promoters of the Company, his son Kanwar Sain being the Managing Director of the Company. He also says that subsequently on the 21st May 1927 he applied for leave to amend the application to make this point clear and this amendment was allowed. It may, therefore, be assumed that the liquidator intended to proceed against Kanshi Ram as one of the promoters of the Company.

On the same day, i. e., the 6th January 1927, an application under O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C. was presented by the liquidator supported by an affidavit praying for the attachment before judgment of a garden situate at Kunjah, district Gujrat, it being alleged that the liquidator had been informed and verily believed it to be true, that the aforesaid Kanshi Ram "was likely to dispose of the property with a view to defeat his creditors." The learned District Judge without issuing any notice to Kanshi Ram or following the procedure prescribed in R. 5, directed that the "attachment order as prayed may issue." On the 11th February 1927, Kanshi Ram appeared and raised various objections to the attachment of the garden. These objections were rejected by the District Judge on the 12th March 1927. Against this order a miscellaneous appeal under O. 43, R. 1 (q), Civil P. C. and S. 202, Companies Act, has been preferred to this Court by Kanshi Ram and I have heard Mr. Mool Chand on his behalf and Mr. Madan Gopal, Liquidator, who has appeared to support the order.

Mr. Mool Chand has argued that the order of the learned District Judge is wrong for the following fou reasons :

(1) that O. 38, R, 5, Civil P. C. is inapplicable to proceedings under S. 235, Companies Act ;

(2) that the District Judge of Lahore had no jurisdiction to attach immovable property situate in the Gujrat District ;

(3) that the proper procedure as laid down in O. 8, R 5, Civil P C., was not followed by the District Judge, and

(4) that on the affidavit of the liquidator and other materials on the record no case had been made out for attaching the property before judgment.

In addition to this Mr. Mool Chand also urged that his client was not one of the officers or promoters of the Company and, therefore, no proceedings under S. 235 could be legally taken against him As to this last point, however, no decision has yet been given by the lower Court and the matter is still under enquiry. I, therefore, did not allow Mr. Mool Chand to argue this point.

In my opinion there is no force in points Nos. 1 and 2 taken by Mr. Mool Chand. Under S. 141, Civil P. C., the procedure provided in the Civil P C., in regard to suits is to be followed as far as it can be made applicable, to all proceedings in all Courts of civil jurisdiction. Now it cannot be denied that proceedings under the Companies Act are proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction A liquidation Court has, therefore, in a proper case, power to make an order of attachment before judgment in accordance with the provisions of O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C.

Nor do I see any force in the second objection, viz., that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to attach immovable property situate in the Gujrat District. Apart from the fact that under the Code as amended in 1908 the jurisdiction of Courts to act under O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6 has been very much extended and a Court can now attach before judgment property situate beyond its local limits, there is in the present case the further circumstances, that under S. 164, Companies Act, the District Judge is for the purpose of winding up a Company deemed to be the "Court" within the meaning of the Act and has for purposes of such winding up all the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court. It cannot be denied that the High Court would have the power to attach immovable property in Gujrat. Therefore, the order of the District Judge attaching property at Gujrat is not without jurisdiction. Accordingly I overrule this objection also.

I am, however, of opinion that the appeal must succeed on objections Nos. 3 and 4. The jurisdiction of Courts in attaching property before judgment is of an extraordinary nature and must be very sparingly exercised. In such cases the Court proceeds to attach the property of the defendant before the respective rights of the parties are determined and it is absolutely necessary, that in exercising these powers, Courts should strictly adhere to the procedure prescribed by the Code, R. 5, O. 3, I. Civil P. C., lays down that if the > Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise that the defendant with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him, is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property . . . . . the Court may direct the defendant, within a time to be fixed by it either to furnish security in such sum as may be specified in the order, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court when required the said property or the value of the same or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security.

It is clear that before an order of attachment of property before judgment is passed, the Court should issue notice to the opposite party calling upon him to furnish security for satisfying any decree that may eventually be passed against him or to show cause why he should not furnish security and it is only when he had appeared and failed to furnish the security or, show cause that the Court can under R. 6 pass an order attaching his property. It is conceded that in this case this procedure was not followed. No doubt, in cases of emergency, the Code empowers the Court under Cl. 3, R. 5 to pass an interim order directing the conditional attachment of the property but in this case, the Court did not act under that section, nor did it subsequently say in its order of the 12th March that it intended to act under that clause. Further the provisions of R. 5 can only be invoked if the Court is satisfied that the respondent is about to dispose of the whole or any part of the property. The affidavit filed by the liquidator on which the Court acted in this case did not make any such allegation. All that was stated was that the appellant was likely to dispose of the garden. Now it is quite clear that a vague and indefinite allegation of this kind is wholly insufficient to justify proceedings being taken under rules 5 and 6. It is conceded that beyond this allegation in the affidavit there were no materials before the Court either on the 6th January 1927, when the attachment order was issued, or on the 12th March 1927, when the Court overruled the appellant's objections against this attachment, to justify a reasonable apprehension that the appellant was about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any order or decree that might be passed against him. I, therefore, hold that the learned Judge acted illegally in passing the order for attachment before judgment of the garden in question.

Accordingly I accept the appeal and set aside the orders of the lower Court dated 6th January, and 12th March 1927, and direct that the property be released from attachment. Having regard to all the circumstences of the case I direct that the costs of the appeal be borne by the parties.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 1417 of 1927, Decided on 10th November 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 11th April 1927.

Waiver—Default clause—Acceptance of overdue instalment amounts to waiver.

It is open to the decree-holder to expressly state when accepting the instalment that he does so without prejudice to his rights which have already accrued owing to the default or to show by his conduct at the time of accepting the instalment that he does not waive his rights under the default clause. But in the absence of proof to the contrary tender by the debtor and acceptance by the creditor of an overdue instalment must be deemed to amount to a waiver and condonation of the default: 101 P. Judgment.—In a decree for the payment of money it was provided that the amount decreed shall be payble in instalments and that in default of payment of any one instalment the whole of the amount due under the decree, would become payable forthwith with the addition of Rs. 50. It seems that the first instalment was paid in Court two days late and the amount so paid was realised by the decree-holder. The second instalment was paid before the due date. The third instalment which was payable on 10th October 1925 was paid by the judgment-debtor to one Shiv Ram, who, it is alleged, was an agent of the decree-holder, on 20th October. It now transpires that Shiv Ram paid this amount on the same date to the decree-holder. There is, therefore, no dispute that the instalment due on 10th October was tendered to the decree-holder on 20th October and accepted by him. The decree-holder, on 26th October 1925, executed the decree for the whole of the balance due thereunder alleging that by paying the third instalment ten days late the judgment-debtor had made a default in the performance of the conditions of the decree. The executing Court declined to entertain the objection by the judgment-debtor to the contrary and hold that there had been a default by the judgment-debtor. On appeal the District Judge without deciding the dispute with regard to the third instalment held that the first instalment was admittedly paid two days late and, therefore, there had been a default and the whole amount due under the decree had consequently become payable.

From this order the judgment-debtor appealed to this Court and I remanded the case on 27th May 1926, holding that the acceptance by the decree-holder of the overdue instalment after the due date amounted, in this case, to a waiver of the default clause and that, therefore, the view of the District Judge was incorrect. It was represented to me at the hearing of that appeal that the third instalment was paid to Shiv Ram before the due date, and as it was not stated before me that Shiv Ram had paid the amount to the decree-holder on the same day I remanded the case to the District Judge with direction to decide whether Shiv Ram was an authorised agent of the decree-holder and whether the amount was paid to him before the due date.

The District Judge has now held that Shiv Ram was not an agent of the decree-holder and has dismissed the appeal. The judgment-debtor has presented this second appeal. It is admitted by both parties that the facts now stated by me are the correct facts. I must accept as conclusive the finding of the District Judge that Shiv Ram was not the agent of the decree-holder; it must, therefore, be held that in paying the amount of the instalment to the decree-holder he was acting as the agent of the judgment-debtor. It is, therefore, obvious that in view of my decision that ordinarily the acceptance by the decree-holder of an overdue instalment after the due date amounts to a waiver of the default clause it was not really necessary to remand the case.

The learned counsel for the respondent raised a preliminary objection that the findings of the learned Judge below were findings of fact and, therefore, a second appeal was not competent and in support of this contention he cited a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind reported as Bahadur v. Gelomal (1). There might have been some force in this contention were it not for the fact that the view of the learned District Judge is opposed to my judgment remanding the case to him. I am not examining the correctness or otherwise of the facts found by the District Judge but only the legal inference to be drawn from those facts.

Incidentally the ruling cited by the counsel is against his contention on the merits of the appeal because it was held in that case that the acceptance by a creditor of an overdue instalment after the due date does amount to a waiver of the default. The same view was taken in Ram Nath v. Gio (2) which case related to a default clause contained in a mortgage bond. But in my opinion there is no difference, so far as the point at issue is concerned, between a bond and a decree making the amount due payable by instalments with the default clause. In Khairuddin v. Atu Mal (3), which is a Full Bench judgment of the Chief Court of the Punjab, the following remark appears at p. 553.

It has been held that if the plaintiff accepted payment of one or more sums as an instalment or instalments due under the bond such acceptance amounts to a waiver and puts an end to the cause of action which had accrued.

I have not been shown any subsequent ruling either of the Chief Court of the Punjab or of this Court taking a different view to that taken in these two cases. The learned counsel for the respondent relied upon a Full Bench judgment of the Bombay High Court in Kashi Ram v. Pandu (4), in which a different view was alleged to have been taken but I have been unable to discover where the difference lies. In that case Jenkins, C. J., held that acceptance of an overdue instalment may have the effect of estopping the creditor from enforcing the default clause but that there may be circumstances which may negative the operation of an estoppel, and Astone, J., expressed himself strongly in favour of the proposition that under the circumstances mentioned the creditor must be deemed to have waived his rights under the default clause. Badri Narayan v. Kunj Behari (5) and Jivan Bakhsh v. Mubinal Hag (6), also support this view. It is of course open to the decree-holder to expressly state when accepting the instalment that he does so without prejudice to his rights which have already accrued owing to the default or to show by his conduct at the time of accepting the instalment that he does not waive his rights under the default clause. In the absence of proof to the contrary tender by the debtor and acceptance by the creditor of an overdue instalment must be deemed to amount to a waiver and condonation of the default.

On the facts that have now transpired and in view of my opinion on the legal point involved in this case I hold that the default by the judgment-debtor in the payment of the third instalment on the due date has also been waived by the decree-holder.

The result is that I accept the appeal and setting aside the orders of the Courts below dismiss the application for execution of the decree. The appellant will have his costs throughout.

Jai Lal, J. — On the 15th February 1927, at the village Silwan in the District of Mianwali there was a serious fight between two parties in which injuries were received by Hussain, Mt. Bhagan, Akbar, Azam Sher and Dalil on one side, and Muhammad, son of Tana, and Sikandar on the other Hussain died as a result of the injuries received by him and consequently members of both the parties were sent up for trial to the Court of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali. They were tried with the result that 8 men of one party, which may for the sake of brevity be called the party of Darhal, were convicted for having taken part in the fight. Out of these Zaman was convicted under S. 302,

I. P. C., and sentenced to death, while the other convicts were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Of the other party, i. e., the party of the Silus, two men named Akbar, son of Azam, and Sher, son of Muhammad, were convicted under S. 324, I. P. C., and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. The convicts on both sides have appealed to this Court and the case of Zaman is also before us on the question of confirmation of the sentence of death.
